God has been pleased to bless our community with two born-again mothers this year. As I visit homes, I find our people really interested in their own personal salvation and feel as though it will not be long before others will accept Him as Saviour. God is really working in hearts here, and we are praying the Lord will call a really God-sent couple here to direct the work. We are almost ripe for an evangelistic church here.

The men here need a man who will really be interested in their problems. There are boys and men who need to know the Saviour, but can only be reached by a God-sent man. We are praying to this end.

How Satan has worked tooth and nail to tear up the work here, but God has held it together. The Holy Spirit is working in the hearts of the adults.

We started our vacation Bible school this morning, June 24, for six weeks, as I have to take different groups each day.

The little pre-school children are really memorizing Bible verses and are taking the gospel stories home to their parents, and the Holy Spirit is dealing with the parents.

Besides the Sunday School and vacation Bible school, I try to have other community activities, i.e., hymn sings and Bible study with one teen-age group each week.

I trust that God will cause many to remember us here before the Throne of Grace daily. How we need your prayers.

Sincerely yours in Him, among the many unreached of the Great Smokies of North Carolina,

Elsa E. Grantland

Thoughts on Retreat

By Grace Meyers

Once again our thoughts turn to "Retreat" and since I attended for the past three years I would like to pass on to other retreaters just what made retreat meaningful to me:

To me, it is a time when one can come apart from the rest of the world for a few days and to be able to fellowship, study, and worship with other Christian young people of other churches and communities.

The location itself is enough to make retreat a thing you will be back to enjoy every year. At no other place could one be drawn closer to God than there in the midst of God's works and creations.

One of the Men-O-Lan cabins built by voluntary labor and contributions of the churches.

Men-O-Lan Retreaters of the Eastern District

During the time that I spent there, I have found the Quiet Hour, classes held on the rocks and other places on the grounds to be very helpful.

The Camp Fire Service in the evening was one of the most enjoyable parts of the retreat. I was reminded more than ever how "the heavens declare the glory of God and the firmament showeth His handiwork."

I feel the high light of retreat was the Lord's Supper on Sunday morning.

At the close of the retreat, I was very thankful to God for the many blessings received during these few days and I am now looking forward to the retreat of 1946.

Christian, Show Your Light

Ruth B. Statler

Christian, you must hang your lantern
On a hill-top; thorns may brush it,
Winds and rain-storms spill upon it,
Or the eagles try to crush it;
But that light will brightly glow
If each day to God you go,
Asking him to help you trim it,
For his oil with which to fill it.
Christian, you must hang your light

Quite recently our thought and attention have again been directed to the power of tremendous trifles, as they have been called, and the significance of the insignificant. It is still true that "Trifles make perfection, but perfection is no trifle."

Great events may make common tasks seem trivial, but if days are to run smoothly in home, office or factory, we must never overlook the fact that the little things in life are really vital and powerful. While your work may seem trivial, your fidelity within its limits is far from insignificant and alone important to you. Exactness in little duties, attention to minor details, is a wonderful source of cheerfulness.

Though many of us are victimized by bigness in these modern days, events, apparently small in themselves, may prove to be momentous. A short telegram or telephone call may change, not only our day, but our whole future.

Little words often have a profound effect, conveying the tone of the mind from which they come. A word of appreciation, a pinch of praise is uplifting; while tiny remarks with prickles in them are quite the reverse. A smile may brighten someone's whole day; a doubtful shrug of the shoulders darken it.

Little choices are often big with destiny. Little anxieties that fret our spirits should not be fostered. Lest molehills grow into mountains, many vexations trifles should be ignored. Little temptations and little sins overpower us if not conquered; while little virtues become habitual with practice.

Little inaccuracies are sometimes costly. On a package of advertising matter received from a well-known business firm, a postmistress discovered that postage overpaid was fourteen cents. Taking time to notify the company, she was surprised to receive a letter from them, saying that she had saved them nearly five hundred dollars. Incidentally, there was a cheque for twenty-five dollars enclosed in recognition of her kindness.

The effectiveness of trivial, everyday courtesies is well known. In teaching courtesy to new telephone operators, one of the first lessons is that it certainly pays to be polite. Politeness costs nothing, nor do little virtues that sweeten human lives.

Minor ministries help lighten many a load. Dropping in to see a young mother convalescing in hospital, on her birthday, a friend suggested as her gift for the occasion a long distance call to her loved ones six hundred miles away. Great was the patient's joy that evening to hear the voices of husband and children as if in the same room. Attempting to thank her friend next time she came in, she was silenced with the words, "Don't mention it. 'Twas such a little thing."

"It is but the littleness of man that seeth no greatness in a trifle." The importance of small and obscure beginnings cannot be overestimated, nor can the potential greatness of the apparently trifling in every sphere of life.

TEMPERS

By Joshua Burlap

Take an ordinary piece of steel, without tempering it, and its uses are few, and its value pretty low. Take that same piece of steel and temper it, and it may be used for a hundred useful things such as tools, springs and machine parts. Did you ever stop to think that the human body is much the same. I heard a man say one time, that he would not give house room to a woman or stable room to a horse that had no temper. He said that each was just so much flesh, uninspiring and uninteresting, but that with a bit of temper added, each became a problem to handle and worth the handling.

I have tried to find some definition for temper that fills the bill, but have not succeeded in so doing. Temper is more than the ability to become enraged when things go wrong and to fly off the handle when opposed. That sort of display indicated only weakness, and no one admired weakness. However, temper properly displayed is a cause of admiration. I have seen a man, attempting to lift a heavy load who suddenly steels himself, sets his jaw and performs the task that seemed impossible. Perhaps that was not a display of temper, and then again perhaps it was. Something in the man's make-up, aroused because he seemed defeated in the task he had undertaken, suddenly gripped him and made him, for the moment at least, a superman.

Of course, there are such things as good temper and bad temper. Sudden displays of flashing anger when heads are lost and things said that were better left unsaid are indications of bad temper. Sudden displays of determination that make seemingly impossible tasks possible, are indications of a good temper. It is deeper than disposition and training. It is really an indefinable something that is in a man or woman as it is in steel, that changes the person from the ordinary, workaday body into something that is outstanding and above his fellow men.

God, in his wisdom, has given man the power to control that temper and determine whether it shall be good for him or bad. Unfortunately many people use it only the wrong way, and are always showing the bad side of themselves, when with the simple use of the will-power that he has, he could convert that sudden splurge of whatever it is into something useful. Next time you feel a spell of bad temper coming on, try to use that power of conversion that you have, and see what wonders you can perform. It won't be easy the first time or the hundredth time, but it is possible, and you become a bigger, stronger person each time you make the effort and win. — Onward

Youth Events

Sunday, June 9, saw approximately 350 ex-CPS men, wives, and families gather on the Bethel College campus for a reunion. The group gathered for social reasons to keep in touch with each other and to find what each one was doing. A committee was elected to plan a future meeting within three to six months at which a program will be given. The committee-men and the last place they were in CPS are: Milo Goering (Lincoln Ag Unit, Rufus Baehr (Alexian Brothers Hospital, Chicago), Richard Blosser (M.C.C.), John Reimer (N.S.B.). Those who arranged for this first reunion are: Henry Guhr (last at Terry, Montana), and Roland Bartel (Camino, California).

Public-opinion surveys show a definite rise in hostility toward racial and religious groups. One unpublished opinion poll indicates that 13 per cent of the people polled would join a hate campaign against the Jews, and an additional 12 per cent are undecided . . . . but think that it might settle the problem. Eleven percent of those polled think that Negroes are a menace to America and would support a hate campaign against them. (Monthly Summary of Events and Trends in Race Relations, March, 1946).

Youth in the Evangelical and Reformed church are corresponding with their brethren in Holland. Since the historic background of this denomination has Dutch ties, the renewed fellowship with Dutch brethren is being undertaken. Also, broken ties are being renewed with students in the Evangelical and Reformed colleges in Sendai, Japan. The urgent need to renew the Christian bond of brotherhood is being felt and met. It is a project in which all interested young people can participate. The Around the World Mennonite Fellowship is a letter-writing fellowship being sponsored by the Young People's Union. Anyone or any group interested in making a vital contact with others around the world should contact the editor of this paper who will help in making that contact.

The death-rate among American Negroes is 30 to 40 per cent higher than among white persons, and Negro life expectancy is ten to twelve years shorter. The number of Negro physicians in the United States has decreased by 5 per cent, though the total number of physicians has increased by 12 per cent.

Dr. Horton, Congregational-Christian leader, who has been visiting Japan, says one hundred thousand people burned to death in one B-29 raid on Tokyo alone. The population of the Japanese capital was reduced from seven to one and a half million, and one can stand in many places in the city and see nothing but destruction in every direction. This is true of all major cities, except Kyoto.

Radioactive elements from the dropping of the experimental atomic bomb in New Mexico spread over an area the size of the continent of Australia according to an investigation recently released. One result of this single explosion was the mysterious fogging of Eastman Kodak Co. x-ray film. The company had used straw-board made three to eight months after the explosion hundreds of miles away from Los Alamos but which contained radioactive elements. The amazing physical power now in the hands of men is as yet hardly comprehensible.

Japanese Christians are reported to want no relief which is not given proportionately to fellow Japanese. This expression of love is specially significant when it is remembered that the Christians of Japan endured many hardships because of their faith.

Incantation

Marion H. Addington

Seed, that I plant here in this yielding earth,
Lie dormant briefly under soft spring rain,
Then burst from out your shell and bring to birth
New life again!
Grow, and blossom under sun and breeze
In such perfection, that beholding, man
Finding this beauty in the least of these May see God's plan!

RELIEF

A Personal Gift To One In Need

It is now possible to send C.A.R.E. food packages to friends and relatives in the American-occupied zone of Germany; authorization to send these packages to British and French zones is expected soon. By this means it will be possible for individuals in this country—both the U. S. and Canada—to send food packages to individuals in Europe.

C.A.R.E., a short title meaning "Cooperative for American Remittances to Europe" is a non-profit organization designed to help feed Europe's hungry people; it was organized by twenty-four American relief agencies with the full approval of governmental authorities. The Mennonite Central Committee is a member agency of C.A.R.E.

The Food Package

The packages now being sent are the so-called "10-in-1" food packages which were designed by the army to feed ten combat soldiers for one day; this would mean that they contain enough food for thirty meals on the basis of the high food values provided for soldiers in time of war. Each package contains approximately 30 pounds of food as follows: solid meat, stews and hashes 9.8 lb.; sugar and candy 3.9 lb.; cocoa, coffee and beverage powders 1.1 lb.; evaporated milk 0.8 lb.; preserved butter 0.5 lb.; cheese 0.4 lb.; and miscellaneous other supplies including soap, chewing gum, matches, water purification tablets, etc.

How packages are Bought and Sent

The following general rules should be observed in purchasing CARE packages: All applications should be sent through the M.C.C. offices—U. S. applications should be sent to Akron, Pa., and Canadian applications to Kitchener, Ont. On account of the difference in exchange rate it will be necessary for Canadians to remit $16.50. All checks and money orders should be made payable to the Mennonite Central Committee.

In order to be of greatest service to its constituency, the M.C.C. is setting up facilities whereby it is possible for Mennonites to send CARE food packages to needy persons in three categories:

1) Those who have friends and relatives whose addresses are definitely known should obtain and fill out a C.A.R.E. application blank, enclose a check or money order and send them to the M.C.C. These will be forwarded to the C.A.R.E. office in New York who will obtain for the donor a receipt upon the delivery of the package.

2) Those who have no specific friend or relative may obtain the name of a needy individual from the M.C.C. which has received lists of Mennonite people from its representatives in Europe; you may either write for this name and fill out the application yourself or the M.C.C. will fill out the application for you.

3 The M.C.C. has made arrangements that those who desire to buy a package or group of packages for undesignated individuals may send their remittances to the M.C.C. office which will in turn purchase a block of packages from C.A.R.E. to be distributed to individuals designated by the M.C.C. representative in whatever area is felt to be most needy.

C.A.R.E. food packages may now be sent to Austria, Czechoslovakia, Finland, France, Italy, Netherlands, Norway, Poland, Greece, and Egypt, in addition to the American occupied zone of Germany.

Contacts in the Philippines

Dale Nebel now in the Philippine Islands writes, "We have now been here five days and have spent nearly all that time renewing contacts which Graber made en route to China. Through these contacts we have available to us a 50-bed hospital with full dental equipment and supplies and a number of army surplus vehicles. We hope to get some vehicles that can be shipped to China."

Relief Briefs

Mary Elizabeth Amstutz, Pandora, Ohio, is expecting to sail on June 22 from Baltimore, Maryland, on board the S.S. Thomas Cressup for Bombay, India.

Paul Thieszen, assignee from Ypsilanti, Michigan, sailed from New York on June 18 for La Plata, Puerto Rico.

Displaced Mennonites

Peter J. Dyck who has been Director of Relief in Holland has received official permission to enter Germany to represent M.C.C. interests among displaced Mennonites. He is now in Berlin and was able to take with him a truckload of M.C.C. foodstuffs from the warehouse in Amsterdam. Brother Dyck reports that there are over four hundred Russian Mennonites in the Berlin area and that half are in UNRRA camps well provided for. About two hundred are in crowded quarters and "in a most deplorable condition." They are dependent on others for scraps of food and their general condition is hungry, ragged, and dirty. The people sleep on floors and for the most part are without blankets or bedding. They have neither soap nor laundry equipment and proper clothing. The Mennonites are only a small part of the thousands now in Berlin who have lost homes, families, and friends.

Brother Dyck was able to obtain several houses for these people to provide for temporary shelter. He is also attempting to get supplies of food and clothing to these people from Holland. The Russian Mennonites express the desire to move and they are looking forward to the time they will be permitted to go to a country where they can start over again. Their security is uncertain and their present stay in Berlin is only temporary. Their future depends much on the decision of the military powers as to the disposition of stateless persons. There is some hope, however, that they will be allowed to migrate.

Canadian Shipments to Germany

Up to the present time material aid shipments from the Canadian Mennonite churches have been limited to Holland. It has been the desire of the Canadian Brethren for many months to send shipments to other needy areas also—including Germany. Arrangements have now been completed whereby Canadian shipments can be routed through the United States for shipment through CRALOG to Germany. Plans are that several carloads of material goods will be sent through this channel in the coming weeks.

C.A.R.E.

It was announced this week that "standard food packages" may now be sent to the British occupied zone of Germany and the British sector of Berlin in addition to ten other countries and the American occupied zone of Germany and the American sector of Berlin. Application blanks and complete information are available from the Akron office.

Child Feeding

According to a letter from Robert Kreider, a feeding program in elementary schools in Kassel, Germany, was to begin on June 17. Hilfswerk, the distributing agency, is the recipient of CRALOG supplies and plans to operate kitchens in which 4500 children from the ages of six to ten will be fed. Each child will receive two meals per week and each meal consisting of about 400 calories. A meal consists of thick hot soup and a roll. In that community the school feeding program is known as "American Love Help."

Heartfelt Thanks

Numerous letters of appreciation have been received at the Akron office from individuals and groups in foreign countries. The following letter is from the Director of the "Sanatorium Bloemendaal" an institution for tuberculosis patients located near Amsterdam at the town, Bloemendaal.

"Hereby we request you to bring our heartfelt thanks to the American and Canadian Mennonites for us for making arrangements to send the meat foods which came for the patients of our institution. We hold this gesture at very high value—that our friends in America show with their material things a sincere concern for the war sufferers which have been hospitalized here. The physical recovery of the patients will be more speedy as a result of the nourishing foodstuffs which we can now provide for them." J. C. Den Bandt, Director.

Builders Unit News

"Huts have now been erected for our unit of eleven men and it is beginning to look more like a CPS camp every day. One is used for sleeping quarters, one for dining room and kitchen, and one for storage room. The language problem is no small matter. Language classes are being held two nights per week with Miss Roorda, a teacher of English in the Middelburg schools. We enjoy the fellowship with our Dutch Brethren and pray that we may leave a testimony with them that our work is for the cause of Christ. As a group we have mid-week prayer meetings, Sunday services, and daily devotions around the table. We hope to continue worshipping in the way that we have been accustomed."—Paul Ruth.

CPS

New Discharge Eligibility

Effective July 1, 1946, those who meet the following requirements will also be eligible to apply for release:

a) Those who have completed twenty-four months of service on or before June 30, 1946. b) Any assignee who has completed twenty-one months of service on or before June 30, 1946 and who is the natural father of one child under 18 years of age and is dependent on him for support.

College Credit to CPS Men

Mennonite Colleges have agreed on a plan for granting credit to CPS men in Abnormal Psychology. Each college will be responsible for its own test. Some of the colleges may also permit certain men to attempt to qualify for credit in Personal Counseling. In September, the test in "Mennonite Life, Principles, and History," prepared by Prof. Cornelius Krahn of Bethel College, will be available upon request at the colleges. These tests will not be administered in camp.

Voluntary Service

Seventy volunteers are enrolled in the Voluntary Summer Service Program sponsored in three mental hospitals and one Public Health project. The number includes 66 girls and 3 men distributed as follows: Norristown, Pa., 21; Howard, Rhode Island, 19; Cleveland, Ohio, 22; Public Health Project, Gulfport, Miss., 7. The aim of the volunteers is to help meet the need of hospitals during the emergency and give expression of Christian love and service to unwanted segments of our population.

MENNONITE BIBLICAL SEMINARY NEWS

Three of the Seminary students graduated with a M.R.E. (Master of Religious Education) degree this summer and are at present engaged in active Christian service. Robert Hartzler, assistant pastor to Rev. A. E. Kreider, was chairman of the Senior Retreat group at Camp Mack. Gerhard Neufeld is helping his father in pastoral work in Enid, Oklahoma, and plans to take over the superintendency of the Oklahoma Bible Academy this fall. Wedding bells rang for Laverne Rutschman on June 11 at Paulding, Ohio, when he was united in marriage to Harriet Anne Fischbach. The couple is serving the church at Fairview, Michigan during the summer and plans to return to the Seminary in September.

The other students are in active Christian service or attending summer schools. Arnold J. Regier underwent major surgery at the Bethany hospital, Chicago on May 28. He is progressing quite satisfactorily.

Recent visitors to the Seminary were: Rev. Ed. J. Miller, Lind Washington; Mr. and Mrs. Walter H. Regier, Wayland Iowa; Arnold Nickel, Mountain Lake, Minnesota; Miss Dorothea Dyck, Elbing, Kansas, Rev. Walter Dyck, Newton, Kansas, and Mrs. S. F. Pannabecker, Bluffton, Ohio.

Rev. Ed. Miller is at present traveling in the interest of the Seminary in the Northern and Pacific Districts. Plans are also underway to have other representatives visit the other districts of our conference in order to acquaint the people with the aims and work of the Mennonite Biblical Seminary and Bible School.

Word has been received that Dr. S. F. Pannabecker expects to leave China shortly and will arrive here in the middle of July.

Dr. A. Warkentin plans to leave for the Canadian General Conference in Ontario on June 28.

privileged to have Dr. Frank Richards of Partridge, bring us the morning message.—Mrs. Lester Ewy, Corr.

— Winnipeg, Manitoba: A number of Mennonite churches in Manitoba were invited by distinguished ministers, missionaries, and others from the United States during May and June of this year. Namely Dr. A. Warkentin of the Mennonite Seminary and Bible School, Chicago; Dr. and Mrs. C. K. Suckau and a quartet from Grace Bible Institute, Omaha, Nebraska; Mrs. A. M. Lohrentz, President of the Ladies Aid Organization of the General Conference; Missionary J. R. Duerksen of India, and Dr. G. S. Klassen from Hillsboro, Kansas. The last-named showed pictures of Paraguay. All of these visits were very much appreciated. In all of our Mennonite churches in Manitoba baptismal services took place during the month of June, many of them on Pentecost Sunday. In the Bethel Mission in Winnipeg twenty-nine candidates were baptized on June 16 by Rev. Isaac I. Friesen. Visitors from the United States were present. Over two thousand attended the "Schulfest" of the Mennonite Collegiate Institute of Gretna on June 15. The school had an enrollment of 150. Many of our Mennonites intend to attend the Mennonite Conference of Canada, which is to convene this year at Vineland, Ontario, from June 29 to July 3. And of course they want to make use of the opportunity to visit relatives and friends.—Reported by Benjamin Ewert — Bethel College Church: Goodly-sized groups attended the informal Sunday evening meetings held recently. On June 23 Dr. R. C. Kaufman, who for the past two years served as relief worker in India, told of life in that country. The next Sunday evening Hugh Hostetler, who served in the Puerto Rico C. P. S. unit until recently, showed slides of Puerto Rico.

— Johannestal Church, Hillsboro, Kansas: Five were baptized on Pentecost. That evening Miss Ruth Ewert talked to us on the work of the young people of The General Cnference. Ruth represents the Western District Conference to the General Conference in the young people's committee. On Monday a group of friends gathered at the home of our returned C. P. S. couple that came back to the farm, to share with a little of what we have on the farm. Dr. A. M. Lohrentz was in our church on the evening of June 16 and showed pictures of South America. Our new parsonage in under roof, but we have left off building until after harvest. Our C. E. sponsored a program given at the Bethesda Home for the Aged in Goessel on June 9.—Mrs. A. Plenert, Corr.

— Rev. Walter H. Dyck, Executive Secretary of the General Conference, returned to Newton on June 28 after participating in the Camp Mack retreat as leader, a visit to Goshen College where he spoke in chapel, and attendance of the Foreign Mission Board meeting in Chicago. Rev. Dyck reports that about two hundred juniors and seniors registered for the Camp Mack retreat and that the retreat ground, owned and run by the Church of the Brethren, is a very beautiful and well-equipped one.

This has been done at the request of the superintendent of the hospital, who has shown us every courtesy. This arrangement will continue indefinitely. Rev. Roland Winstanley, who has served as missionary in Bolivia for six years under the Evangelical Union of South America, spoke in our church June 9, 10, 11. Verney Unruh spoke in our church June 12, 13, presenting the work and aims of the Young People's Union of the General Conference. The Mission Society meets once a month. After a short devotional period, the time is spent in cutting quilt blocks for the stations in Montana and Arizona and in sewing and fancy work. The society also supports an evangelist in India. Our pastor, Rev. Duerksen, and family spent a few days in Kansas, where the 'Duerksens" had a family reunion. Recent soaking rains have greatly aided growing crops so that prospects for a small grain harvest are very promising.—Anna Unruh, Corr.

— First Church, Ransom, Kansas: Mr. and Mrs. Curt Boese and son came to Ransom, June 1 to take up their first charge of a church. Sunday School and church service attendance is from fifty to fifty-five. About twenty to thirty-five attend the evening service. Prayer meeting was started recently with ten adults. Nine young people are enrolled in catechism. The address of Rev. Curt Boese is: Box 151, Ransom, Kansas.

— Deep Run, Pa., Next Sunday our pastor, J. Herbert Fretz, expects to begin a series of sermons on the "Great Doctrines of Scriptures." About one hundred children registered for daily vacation Bible school. Approximately fifty of these attended the Sunday School rally held at Bowmansville, June 16.—Mae Gross, Corr.

A view down Leipziger Street between Potsdamer Platz and Spittelmarkt, one of the most important business streets in Berlin. As in all sections of Central Berlin, this lies in ruin. A year after the fighting has ended much rubble still lies in the street. The women in the foreground, carrying sacks of twigs and kindling on their backs, are typical of Berlin. Every day thousands of folk in Berlin are to be seen trudging along with their sacks of wood—wood which they have picked out of the ruins or wood which they have gathered in the suburban parks. The absence of traffic and the desolation along this once busy street are symbolic of Berlin 1946—a city which in years past was the merchandise mart of Central Europe

Glimpses of Germany

by Robert Kreider

Relief work is not unlike any service vocation at home or abroad—it has its ups and downs. Perhaps one feels, however, more frequently a helplessness in the face of unmaneuverable impeding forces. There are hours and even days of black discouragement. Then suddenly the sun breaks through and all the groping and frustration in the darkness are resolved in the glorious new light.

I count it a unique personal opportunity to be in Germany at this crossroads point in history. In this chaotic land one senses the ominous truth that Germany is still a world battlefield. The Great Powers are grappling with one another, seeking to gain mastery in this, the heart of Europe. All know that Germany is the key to the Continent and the holder of that key is master in the new postwar world. No place in Germany does one feel more keenly the slashing cross currents of national conflict than in the city of Berlin. There in hostile proximity are the four big powers, each

"Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid which is Christ Jesus"

From the editor's point - of - view:

CHANGE AND PAIN must be a part of our common human lot if we are to grow mentally and spiritually. As human beings we have a desire to avoid pain. Since growth involves change and change seldom comes without pain, it seems that there is within us a certain self-protective tendency, which carried too far, may hinder us in our spiritual growth. This self-protective bend is desirable, for without it we would blindly plunge into many destructive dangers. However, this tendency needs to be balanced by a willingness to take risk. Whenever we bury our talents or opportunities because of a fear of the risk, we find that life yields very meager returns. We cannot be content to remain as we are. That means change. That means not fearing the factors which demand change in us for the better. That means a deep faith that what assails us as painful can really work for our good. We frequently have disturbed and unpleasant feelings when someone sharply disagrees with us. May not these unpleasant feelings be the result of a feeling of insecurity? We feel that in our own thinking we have settled certain matters. We feel assured from our experience of competence. Then when the other individual questions our conclusions, our confidence in our own competence is shaken, and we tend to feel just a little less secure. Such insecurity is unpleasant and disturbing to us. Hence we are happier in associating with people who think like we do rather than with those who differ sharply. We like agreement. Or again it may be that someone shows us how to do a certain thing in a better way. Though we may benefit from improved efficiency there may be resistance to the improvement because it carries the suggestion that we lacked certain competence. Therefore, it would seem that a vital faith that painful experiences can do us a lot of good would be a distinct aid to spiritual growth. We are told that in the realm of the physical there are no such things as "growing pains," but it seems that spiritual "growing pains" are something of a must for us. The man with the unclean spirit, mentioned in Mark 1:23-26, said to Jesus, ". . . art thou come to destroy us?" There was in this man a defensive spirit which caused him to react negatively to the compassionate Christ. It is so with human beings that a defensive, self-protective spirit within them will cause them to oppose others whose pattern of life is less defensive and self-protective and therefore more loving. The way out is a greater faith in the blessedness of growing pains.

MONEY is needed for sending The Mennonite to a number of Mennonite ministers in Holland who would like to receive it. It is our understanding that a regulation by the Dutch government keeps these ministers from sending money out of the country. Hence these Dutch ministers need help from this side of the water if they are to get The Mennonite. A Sunday School class of the First Church, Hillsboro, Kansas, has already indicated its willingness to contribute twenty-five dollars toward this fund. An individual is willing to pay for a subscription for a Dutch minister. An ex-C.P.S. man, who is corresponding with a Mennonite youth in Holland, has ordered The Mennonite for this young person. But more funds are especially needed for getting our church paper to those ministers in Holland who are very eager to find out about the American Mennonites. The Board of Publication is eager to receive funds for this purpose. Such contributions should be sent to the Mennonite Publication Office, 722 Main Street, Newton, Kansas. Any gifts towards this purpose will help promote fellowship between American and Dutch Mennonites.

A DAILY VACATION, in the form of a quiet hour or period of prayer and meditation is a vital source of refreshing and strength. Americans go in for vacations. Time magazine talks of 60,000,000 people taking trips this summer in 20,000,000 cars. But on the other hand, Americans are missing out on the kind of daily vacation that we have in mind. Edw. A. O'Neal, President of the American Farm Bureau Federation, says that "For millions of human beings, the greatest need is for more moments for reflection and quiet meditation." A period of quiet meditation does for our spiritual con-living in its own national world.

One of the great novels of our day could be written about the Berlin of 1945 and 1946. There was the "rape of Berlin" in May and June of 1945 when the city was a churning cauldron of confusion, looting terror. All Berliners shudder when they recall those days. One man of keen insight explained to me that nothing in modern history has been comparable to the "Sack of Berlin." In this fantastic world of Berlin are the clashing cultures—the semi-orientalism of the Russians, the proud patient competence of the British, the French, the Americans . . . different worlds and all silently at war . . . the bewilderment and despair . . . the despotism of the East . . . the suffering . . . the seeds of hope and reconstruction . . . the urban skepticism of the Berliners . . . their energy . . . their helplessness.

KASSEL—CITY OF DESTRUCTION

I never cease to be stunned by the physical destruction of Germany. Decades it will require to rebuild. Several weeks ago I visited Kassel, a major railroad city of Germany, located at the northernmost tip of the American Zone. The city was absolutely pulverized—just here and there a few fragments of what were once buildings. This mound of waste reminded me of the ruins of some ancient city. The stark awful statistics: 78 percent of the apartments totally destroyed or heavily destroyed; 64 percent of the industries; 75 percent of the hospitals; 46 percent of the churches; 60 percent of the schools; 90 percent of the libraries . . . . The present occupancy rate is about four persons per room . . . . But amazingly enough, man's capacity for survival breaks through such oppressive devastation. Paths through this debris have been cleared, street cars are running, and here and there are mushrooming little huts where business is being re-established. Into this city will begin to flow relief supplies to support a school feeding program. In the community it will be known as "American Love Help."

It was in Kassel that I met a lady in whom there is the seed of a resurrected, peaceful Germany. She and her husband have come this past year from Breslau in Silesia—now the new Poland. During the twelve years of the Hitler period she continued to sponsor mothers' peace groups to shelter Jewish folk and to assist them toward safer regions beyond. At one point she was summoned before the Gestapo Chief. She was told that she must be sent to a concentration camp. Then she gave her story very simply. At the end the head of the Gestapo said, "If I had the courage, I would join with you." But he added, "No one in all Breslau knows so much about everyone as I do. If I were to join with you, I would have to be killed. I have not the courage to meet death." He went on to assure her that as long as he held his position in Breslau she and her work would be protected. She counts this an act of God.

This picture was taken near Spittelmarkt, the center of the business district of Berlin. The buildings in the foreground were in days past the largest and finest department stores of Berlin. This entire area now lies in ruins. Business has been completely destroyed. In this central part of Berlin one may walk for blocks and see no signs of business life with the exception of an occasional crude little shelter where a few shabby wares are sold.

RURAL GERMANY

After wandering about through the wasteland of the cities, the sadness is lifted when one ventures forth into the countryside. There is a timeless quality about rural Germany. Farmers continue in their time-honored profession. War has modified little their way of life. Yes, commercial fertilizers and farm machinery are scarce. Horses and oxen were lost. But the industrious farmer is still there. There is still the tranquil beauty of the countryside. The ardent exponents of rural life would find ample arguments for their case were they to visit Europe.

THE "EXPELLEE"

Few problems in Germany are so crushing as the problem of the "expellee." The "expellee" is one who has been thrust out of his home in the East, where he and his forefathers may have been living for centuries. They come from East Prussia, Silesia, Sudetanland, Hungary. Their forced movement westward is according to the Potsdam formula. The reason given for the expulsion of these peoples was that they were unassimilated nationality islands, spots of betrayal when Hitler came on the scene . . . . Now that warm weather has come, every day there are trainloads of them arriving in Greater Hesse and other parts of Germany. Coming into a Land like Greater Hesse, they place a severe strain on the already taxed resources of the area. Hesse had a pre-war population of three and a half million. Between six and eight hundred thousand of these expellees are scheduled to arrive in Greater Hesse before October 1. They are expelled from the homes where they had wished to remain. They are received as an unwelcome burden in an already overcrowded land. Mostly they are women and children and elderly men. The able-bodied men have been held back because of their skills. At least 75 percent of them will require permanent public assistance.

GERMAN YOUTH

I have attended many meetings in recent weeks of welfare officials, private agency leaders and so on. I am struck at each meeting by the fact that all of the men in positions of responsibility are forty-five years and older. In twelve years of power, Hitler completely possessed this younger generation. Cut out according to a common pattern, like little Hitler gingerbreadmen, this generation (ages twenty to forty) is ill prepared to spearhead the rebuilding of a new, democratic Germany. These youth are an unhappy lot. Many want to escape from it all and migrate to America or to South America or to Australia. Others, who have been schooled in no other methods but militarism, are hoping perhaps for another war—a war between Russia and the West. One of the contending powers would probably re-arm and restore Germany. Some dream of that. A lady who works with youth told me that German young people are living in a moral and intellectual vacuum. Their old Nazi world—a complete world in itself—has been taken away, and the positive has not yet been found to replace it. None are interested in the reactivated German political parties. Some turn to the church which is showing some signs of vigor. But among most youth there is an individualism—each one looking out for himself—and also a cynicism. But yet I believe there is a basic receptivity among youth which could be the seedbed for something good.

SCHOOL FEEDING PROGRAM

A word about our school feeding program in Greater Hesse. As you may know, most CRALOG supplies are consigned to one of several German welfare agencies. There is a tendency for each agency to want to run off to the side with its prized supplies and to distribute them in its traditional individual way. I am convinced that the need in Germany is so great that there must be cooperatively planned and sponsored projects, as for example school feeding in the bombed cities. The burden of my efforts the past several weeks has been toward this end. In Greater Hesse I think we are succeeding. Children in the cities of Darmstadt, Kassel, Frankfurt, Giessen, Hanau, Offenbach—all devastated cities—will be receiving warm school lunches each day, the lunch being approximately of four hundred calories . . . . Yesterday in a Frankfurt warehouse I had the heart-warming experience of seeing MCC-contributed supplies—forty-five tons of flour and about fifteen tons of powdered milk.

I am deeply grateful for the opportunity of representing our Mennonite people in this CRALOG undertaking. I do believe that no group has mobilized so completely their resources and given so freely of their possessions for war sufferers as our own people. It is a joy to be the representative of ones so sensitive to human need. My regret is that the door has not yet opened for additional MCC workers to enter this zone to distribute this relief. Our traditional MCC formula of relief operations has been a three-fold one: supplies, money, and personnel. Supplies are virtually the only thing we are now permitted to import. I guess we must remember that we are operating in a zone of military occupation in a defeated country.

MENNONITE REFUGEES IN GERMANY

I have not yet shared with you what may stand as one of our major contributions during our first months

in Germany. I prefer to speak little about it until the critical hours are past. It is the plight of our Russian-born Mennonites in the city of Berlin and our efforts to bring them security and help them toward new homes in a new land . . . . I shall never forget that evening when I first met our refugee brethren in Berlin. groped my way through darkened passageways, from room to room in an old apartment house until I found the place where the "Fluechtling" were housed. I heard voices and through the casement I could see candle ight. I knocked. The sound of voices was hushed, and he light went out in the room beyond. No one answered he knocking. The Haus Frau came and knocked oudly and called that an American visitor had come. The door opened a wee crack and an old lady peaked out. The door was shut again. We knocked again and as the door opened I said that I was a Mennonite from America. The elderly lady opened the door wide, and stepped in. There in the gloomy darkness I saw about a dozen people, mostly women and children. They eyed me half-fearfully. Before the Haus Frau ook leave, she asked me whether I could not get some ood for these people because they had no ration cards and they were hungry. Soon I was telling them who I was, where I came from, what I was doing in Germany. The walls of reserve melted away, and they received me ordially as their cousin from across the seas. They began to relate the story of their bitter years; their ife in Russia, the German invasion, the retreat westward, the months in the Russian Zone of Occupation, nd now slipping stealthily into Berlin in the frantic ope that this would be an island of safety. They have n unmistakable "Mennonite appearance," these rugged, lond peasant folk.

We set to work on the problem. There were conferences with high and "less high" military men, telephone calls to our offices in Europe, cables to America. All this helped to give security and status to these refugees. There is increasing promise now that the way will open for them to migrate. We have been able to establish a food supply line from MCC warehouses utside Germany. There have been moments of deep iscouragement. There has been the anxiety of long-distance negotiation. But now some answers are being found to our problems. Many a prayer of thanksgiving ave I lifted up in gratitude for what seems to be the rovidential handiwork of God.

Several evenings ago as guest in my room was one f these refugees from Russia. His is a personal history more fascinating than fiction. Born in the rich gricultural Molotschna colony in the early 1890's . . . . ell educated . . . . a C. O. in medical service during World War I . . . . manager for several years of the ogressive Mennonite agricultural improvement association of Russia . . . . representative in Moscow for his people who were escaping to the West during and after the Revolution . . . . in 1928 imprisoned in Moscow with no trial, only the ill-founded charge that he was an anti-communist propogandist . . . . transferred from prison to prison, including one and a half years in a concentration camp of Siberia . . . . unexpectedly released from prison in 1940 . . . . living for a year and a half in Smolensk and then the war and the German invasion . . . . his wife and son still in Russia, having not heard from them since 1941 . . . . Despite all the suffering this man has known, his heart is entirely free of bitterness. It is spiritually humbling to come into the presence of such a winsome, Christ-like spirit as his. He is among those good folk whom we hope to be able to assist.

Thoughts on Atomic Might

Dr. Ernest Fremont Tittle sums it up thus: "The issue, as I see it, boils down to this: Shall we put our trust in military force and so prepare for war, knowing, as in the light of history we must know, that those who prepare for war are most likely to get what they have prepared for; or shall we put our trust in the doing of justice and the cultivation of friendly relations among nations—and stop preparing for war. The church, I believe, should recognize that war is suicide from now on, and should not itself be a party to the coming of Armageddon. It should put its trust in the power of God and the wisdom of God revealed in Christ, not in the power of the atomic bomb or in a human wisdom that inclines to think, against all the protests of the heart, that perhaps the merciless incineration of millions upon millions of men, women and children may be regarded under some circumstances as right. Whether this decision would insure the prevention of catastrophe of course no one knows; but in any event the church should refuse consent to preparation for atomic war, that is, for the destruction of the present world civilization, if not of mankind itself."

The President of the United States, the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom, and the Prime Minister of Canada, issued a statement on November 15, 1945, in which they said: "We are aware that the only complete protection for the civilized world from the destructive use of scientific knowledge lies in the prevention of war. No system of safeguards that can be devised will of itself provide an effective guaranty against production of atomic weapons by a nation bent on aggression. Nor can we ignore the possibility of the development of other weapons or of new methods of warfare which may constitute as great a threat to civilization as the military use of atomic energy."

Report on Recent Session of Canadian Conference

(Believing that the readers of The Mennonite desire to know more about the activities of the Canadian Conference, we bring the following report of the recent session held at Beamsville, Ontario. This report was prepared by the Publicity Committee of which Rev. Jacob Janzen of Waterloo, Ontario, and Rev. Isaac I. Friesen of Winnipeg, Manitoba, were members.)

The annual session of the General Conference of Mennonites in Canada was opened in Beamsville, Ontario, on June 30 with a mission festival attended by over 1,500 people coming to Beamsville from Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, British Columbia and various parts of Ontario.

On behalf of the local community the gathering was welcomed by Reeve Saunders who wished the conference every success in its religious and humanitarian undertakings. After a suitable reply to this welcome by Rev. J. H. Janzen of Waterloo, Ontario, the cause of missions in its various aspects was brought before the conference. Special visitors coming from the United States to address the conference were: Dr. A. Warkentin, head of the Mennonite Biblical Seminary in Chicago, Prof. P. S. Goertz of Bethel College, North Newton, Kansas, and Missionary H. J. Brown. An offering amounting to $736.50 was given by those present for the support of the work of missions at home and abroad.

Special music of a high standard was also given by church choirs coming from Waterloo, Leamington, Niagara-on-the-Lake and Vineland. In the evening the youth of the local churches in Ontario presented a program, including numbers by a choir of 150 voices. The program was greatly appreciated.

REV. JACOB J. THIESSEN, CHAIRMAN

The regular session of the Conference began on July 1. Rev. Jacob J. Thiessen of Saskatoon, Saskatchewan was the chairman of this gathering. In his opening address Rev. Thiessen stated that this was the first time that the Canadian Conference had met in Ontario and congratulated the churches of this province on their growing strength. Rev. Thiessen based his further remarks on the question once asked by Jesus of his disciples, "Will ye also go away?" He stated that as in the days of Christ so now there were many temptations that were causing people to leave the way of Christ. It was necessary however for the church to combat these temptations by prayer, humble trust in God's Word and not by seeking to change the course of the church or compromise its message and teaching.

The general theme of the conference was expressed by the text in Col. 3:11, "Christ is all, and in all." In accordance with this theme Rev. G. G. Neufeld of Whitewater, Manitoba read the first paper of the conference on "Christ in the Personal Life of the Believer."

A report on the home mission work of the Conference was given by Rev. Jacob Gerbrandt of Rosthern, Saskatchewan. The financial report of the home mission committee showed that $5,604 had been received this year from Canadian sources for this important work of bringing the Word of God to those who could not be reached so readily by the regular ministry of the church. Financial support received from the Home Mission Board of the General Conference in the United States was also gratefully acknowledged.

Rev. J. J. Epp of Eigenheim, Saskatchewan reported that $1,314 had been received during the past year by the committee for the relief of poverty-stricken individuals of our church in Canada. This money had been distributed on the recommendation of ministers of our church who had come into contact with individuals or families needing such support.

GERMAN SONG BOOK FOR CHILDREN

The Publication Committee report was read by Rev. John Rempel of Rosthern, secretary of the conference. He informed the conference that a song book in the German language for children in Canada had been set up and was to come off the press in September of this year. The intention voiced in the United States and Canada of completing the Mennonite Lexicon started by Dr. Christian Neff in Europe was also mentioned. Rev. Rempel stated also that there was a great need for a book concern in Canada that would supply the needs of our Conference churches.

YOUTH ACTIVE WITH RETREATS, CHOIRS, ETC.

The evening meeting was given to the hearing of reports of work done among Mennonite youth in Canada. An introductory talk given by Valentine Nickel of Wymark, Saskatchewan stressed the great importance of winning our youth for Christ and the church. He believed that in order to do this a much greater emphasis would have to be placed on evangelism in our home churches. In the reports heard from youth workers from the various provinces it was seen that much was being done by the young people of the church. Youth retreats are being held in Ontario, Saskatchewan and Alberta. Work with choirs were being emphasized by youth workers in Manitoba. Youth papers were being published in Alberta, Saskatchewan and Ontario.

SUNDAY SCHOOL AND C. E. COMMITTEE REPORTS

On the second day of the Conference Rev. John Rempel reported on the work done by the committee for Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavors of our Conference. The committee made certain recommendations which were accepted by the Conference. Among these were: the continuation of the publication of Bible stories in our German church papers, the continuation of the holding of summer Bible schools for the children the sanction and promotion of retreats for the benefits of our young people, the publication of a Canadian youth paper carrying both English and German material to help unify the ideas and work of our youth throughout Canada, the reservation of half a day on our regular conference programs for the consideration of work and projects pertaining to youth.

REV. J. N. SMUCKER SPEAKS

At the close of the morning session Rev. J. N. Smucker, President of our General Conference, who had come to visit the Canadian Conference, was invited to address the gathering. Rev. Smucker spoke of the great need of the pure simple gospel of Jesus Christ in the world today. He also said that as long as we allowed ourselves to remain workers together with Christ that our efforts were bound to succeed.

CANADIAN MENNONITES ACTIVE IN RELIEF

In the afternoon the relief work of Mennonites in Canada was brought to our attention in a report given by Mr. C. J. Rempel of Kitchener, Ontario, representative of the Mennonite Central Committee in Canada. Mr. Rempel stated that instead of growing less, the relief work was increasing in size and importance. Conditions in many countries were worse today than they had ever been, and relief in various directions was urgently needed.

Besides gifts of money the work of relief had been carried on by the sending of clothing, canned goods and flour. Up to the present 206,000 quarts of canned meat, fats, vegetables and fruit, valued at $106,000 had been sent from Canada. The Canadian Mennonites had also sent 736 tons of flour, valued at sixty thousand dollars to Holland. If the gifts of clothing made by the Mennonites of the United States were added to those made from the Mennonites in Canada the value of the clothing given would exceed $600,000. At present the Mennonites had 215 workers either on the field or on the way there. These workers were distributed in fourteen different countries, among which were Paraguay, Puerto-Rico, Italy, Ethiopia, India; China, Philippines, Germany, Denmark, England France Belgium, Switzerland and Holland. Many letters of thanks are being constantly received from those who are receiving this material assistance given in the name of Christ.

W. M. Enns of Winkler, Manitoba, who recently returned from a tour of inspection in Europe, stated that the gifts received there from the Mennonites were being conscientiously distributed by workers who regarded this task as a sacred responsibility.

C. O.'S PAY $2,327,160 TO RED CROSS

Rev. John Rempel, Secretary of the Conference, also made a report on the present status of young men who had taken the position of conscientious objectors during the last war. He stated that according to statistics received from the government, there were at present 10,867 conscientious objectors in Canada. It was, however, hard to say how many of these were Mennonites since the government had kept no separate records in this matter. Up to now none of these young men have as yet been officially released from the responsibilities they assumed when they took the C. O. position. Up to April 30 of this year the conscientious objectors of Canada had paid $2,327,160 to the Red Cross of Canada.

WORK OF MISSION SOCIETIES

The evening of the second day of the Conference was given to the ladies' societies of the church. On this occasion Miss Aganetha Fast, missionary to China, spoke on her experience with Chinese Christians and their active response to the cause of missions after their conversion to Christ. Mrs. A. J. Neuenschwander of Quakertown, Pa., referred to the literature available for the use of women's organizations in our Conference. Mrs. Herman Lepp of Ontario spoke of the work of women at home and in the church. Mrs. A. M. Lohrentz Chairman of the Ladies' Missionary Society of the General Conference, also gave an inspiring address. The meeting was presided over by Miss Lena Fransen of Vineland, Ontario.

PLAN TO BUILD NEW SCHOOL AT GRETNA

The last day of the Conference was a busy one. First reports were heard from the various educational institutions at present seeking to train our Mennonite youth. The report of the Mennonite Collegiate Institute of Gretna, Manitoba, was read by the principal, Mr. G. Peters. He stated that last year the school had an attendance of 155 students which was about twice the number for which the present school building had been originally intended. The basement of a new school had already been dug and plans were ready to erect a school as soon as the materials became available. Five teachers had been employed during the past year to teach the regular high school course from grades 9 to 12, together with religion and German.

ROSTHERN TO BECOME JUNIOR COLLEGE

Rev. H. T. Klassen of Eigenheim, Saskatchewan reported that the Rosthern Academy had also had a successful year with an attendance of 167 students. The demand for the housing of these students had been partially met by the building of a three-story dormitory for girls. A similar building for the boys was also needed. Five teachers had taught the high school course up to grade 12, together with religion and the German language. It is the intention of turning this school into a junior college by adding another year to its curriculum and affiliating it with the University of Saskatchewan. However, to reach this standard certain improvements will be needed in the material facilities of the school, such as an increase in the size of its library and science laboratories.

ONTARIO PLANS SCHOOL

Ontario reporting through Mr. Abram Rempel of that province stated that it was the intention of the Mennonites in Ontario to create a school there similar to the ones in Manitoba and Saskatchewan. As a matter of fact a seven-acre tract of land north of Leamington, Ontario, had already been purchased for this purpose and the foundation for the school had been prepared.

HIGHER THEOLOGICAL TRAINING FOR MINISTERS

A matter of special importance in the field of Christian education among the Mennonites in Canada was a resolution passed by the Conference to have a school offering a higher theological training to the prospective religious leaders of our Conference. The good work of the Bible schools at present in operation in our Conference was recognized and their continuation was recommended. It was felt, however, that the standards of theological training needed to be raised in the same way as the standards of general education among our people were being constantly raised. It is planned to integrate the education given in this school with the training at present being offered at Bethel College as well as at the Mennonite Biblical Seminary in Chicago.

The second paper bearing on the theme of the Conference was on the subject of "Christ and the Church." This paper was given by Rev. D. D. Klassen of Homewood, Manitoba. It was pointed out that Christ is the foundation of the church and that the church is the chief means by which Christ reveals and manifests himself to the world. It is the duty of the church to yield itself unreservedly to the control of its Head and Master.

TO CARE FOR MENTALLY ILL

The secretary of the Conference now presented a plan for securing institutional care for those who had suffered nervous or mental break downs and who at present had to be cared for in non-Mennonite institutions. It was decided to reserve fifteen beds for this purpose in a home for invalids now being constructed on the youth farm near Rosthern, Saskatchewan. However, it was realized that such patients had to be kept separate from other patients in this home and that only non-violent or harmless mental patients could be cared for.

Rev. J. Janzen of Waterloo, Ontario now read the third paper on the Conference theme. His subject was, "Christ in the Affairs of the World Today." He emphasized that even though it was not being recognized by many today that Christ was still the Lord of the universe that nevertheless His will would prevail inspite of the ragings of men who disregarded His will.

HAVE PAID $1,767,398.68 TO RAILROADS

The work of the Canadian Board of Colonization was presented by Rev. J. J. Thiessen, Chairman of the Conference. He stated that this board had existed since 1922 and had been instrumental in bringing over many thousands of Mennonites from Russia after the Bolshevik revolution in that land. In bringing these people from Russia a huge debt had been incurred for their travelling expenses. At present $1,767,398.68 had been paid to the railway companies. It is contemplated to liquidate this debt completely in the near future.

TO HELP REFUGEES MIGRATE

The problem now facing the Board is the bringing over of the many Mennonite refugees in Europe who are waiting for an opportunity to come to this country as soon as this becomes possible. Fifteen thousand dollars has already been paid to the Board by individuals in Canada to help pay for steamship and railway tickets for relatives or friends now waiting to come here. However, stringent immigration laws at present in force in Canada still prohibit the coming of most of these people. The doors are, however, beginning to open, and it is hoped that they will soon open even farther so that help can be given to these needy brethren.

CONFERENCE NUMBERS 12,748 MEMBERS

In a report by Rev. B. Ewert, Statistician of the Conference, it was stated that there were at present 12,748 members in the churches now connected with the Canadian Conference. Two hundred and forty ministers are at present serving these churches in 153 places of worship.

The final paper of the Conference was read by Rev. Nicolai Driediger of Leamington, Ontario. His topic was "Christ in Eternity." He stated that at the final consummation of all things Christ would stand in the midst of His heavenly glory and that to see this would be the sum total of all happiness.

Western District Retreats

By Helen Mueller

Three retreats have been planned by the Western District Retreat Committee for this summer: the twenty-first retreat for young people, the second for intermediates, and the first for young adults. Such an arrangement should make it possible for all interested persons to participate in a summer retreat.

Young People to Meet July 29 to August 3

Camp Wood will again be the meeting place for the young people. This group is made up of those who have finished their freshman year in high school, up to and including college sophomores—aged approximately from fifteen to twenty. Those who have finished their sophomore year in college or are twenty years of age will be registered for the retreat for young adults. This arrangement is being made in order to accommodate more retreaters.

Rev. Herbert E. Miller, formerly of Deer Creek, Oklahoma, now pastor of the Bethany Mennonite Church, Belmont, Kansas, will be director of the Camp Wood retreat. This is "Herb's second year in this capacity. Assistant director will be Rev. John P. Loewen. Mr. Loewen is at present attending Bethel College. He comes from Swift Current, Saskatchewan, Canada. Last summer he served as camp manager at Elim Gospel Beach, one of the retreat grounds owned by the Saskatchewan Youth Organization. He is well qualified to help with the camp administration. Martha Miller (Mrs. Herb) will act as camp matron and girls' counselor. She has served in similar capacity at Oklahoma retreats. Erwin C. Goering, former C. P. S. camp director, is to direct the recreation program and serve as boy's counselor. Esther Wedel of Moundridge, now of Hutchinson, will be camp nurse.

Speakers will be Dr. Kirby Page, Dr. J. H. Langenwalter, and Rev. William H. Stauffer. Kirby Page is well known by his books as well as by his lectures. He has visited many C. P. S. camps and has been the speaker at a peace rally sponsored by the Western District C. E. Convention several years ago. Dr. Page will conduct studies in the New Testament during the morning sessions and will be in charge of the evening meetings. Dr. Langenwalter, friend of all young people, is pastor of the Lorraine Avenue Mennonite Church in Wichita. He will present a series of studies in the Old Testament. Rev. Stauffer, pastor of the First Mennonite Church at Sugar Creek, Ohio, will direct the thinking of the young people in the area of Mennonite history and culture. He has traveled widely, in Europe and America and has visited the C. P. S. unit in Puerto Rico, as well as Mennonite-administered C. P. S. camps in the United States.

Altogether, this year's young people's retreat promises to be outstanding in the history of Western District retreats.

The Camp Wood committee announces many improvements made during the past year. The new toilet and shower cabin has been completed; there is a new administration cabin and health and first aid cabin; the campers' cabins have been painted outside and in, obliterating the art work and autographs. Some campers may weep but others will rejoice when they learn that an electric dishwasher has been installed. These and many other improvements will help to make camp life more pleasant.

Registration rates will be $3.00, the same as last year. The camp fee (room and board) will be $8.25.

Intermediate Retreat, August 5 to 9

The Bethel College campus will be the meeting place for the intermediates from August 5 to 9. Intermediates are those who will next year be in junior high school—seventh, eighth, and ninth grades.

Rev. Jacob T. Friesen will be the director. After graduating from Bethel College, Rev. Friesen went to New York Biblical Seminary where he has spent two years. This summer he is supplying the pulpit for the First Mennonite Church at Halstead. Mrs. Friesen, formerly Lisbeth Koehn of Meno, Oklahoma, will be one of the housemothers for the girls. Roland Bartel, former C. P. S. man who is now a student at Bethel, will direct the recreation for the intermediates.

Instructors for this retreat will be Dr. Langenwalter, Mrs. Willis E. Rich, and Mrs. Albert L. Jantzen. Dr. Langenwalter will have the Bible course; Mrs. Rich will teach a course in personal religious living; Mrs. Jantzen will conduct a missions course. There will be opportunity for the youngsters to visit the relief clothing depot, the General Conference Headquarters Office, and other places of interest in Newton and North Newton.

The rates will be the same as last year: $2.00 for registration and $8.00 for room and board.

First Retreat for Young Adults, July 26 to 28

For some time the retreat committee has felt that there are many young people in the upper age bracket who would like to attend retreat but feel that they no longer fit in with the young people who go to Camp Wood. For this reason the committee has planned a three-day meeting, July 26 to 28, for young adults—those who have completed their sophomore year in college, or those aged twenty and above. This retreat is designed for persons who find it difficult to be away from their home or work for a longer period than a few days. Everyone is invited—especially young married couples are encouraged to attend. This group will also meet on the Bethel College campus.

Rev. Walter H. Dyck, secretary of the General Conference, will be the director. He has had much experience in retreat work, having served as director at the Camp Wood retreat and as a member of the district retreat committee for several years. He has also been speaker at many other Mennonite retreats, both in the United States and Canada.

Erwin Goering will direct the recreation; and Mrs. Eva Harshbarger, Dean of Women at Bethel College, will be matron in the women's dormitory. Leaders will be Dr. Kirby Page, Rev. William Stauffer, and Dr. Herbert E. Dester, missionary on furlough from India.

The registration fee for this retreat will be $3.00; room and board, $5.00. Arrangements will be made regarding registration for those who wish to come in for one day or for single meetings.

Fellowship with People of Other Lands

Repeatedly one hears these days the expression of gloom and despair at the way things are going. Those who a decade ago thought it was possible to mold events so that they would arrive at desirable and righteous ends, now are heard to say they despair of any bright hope for the future. There are many reasons for such an outlook of despair when we consider the present world condition. Repeatedly similar views are heard.

In ages past, doubtless Christians have despaired of hope, too. The book of Revelation was written in just such a setting. The seven churches to which the seer of Patmos wrote suffered many things and revealed many weaknesses. Yet, the writer of the book saw a glorious vision of hope and conveyed it to the churches in his letter. God still was in his throne and He still was a good, all-powerful and loving God in whom one could place his complete trust.

Likely the Christians who retreated to the Catacombs also could have viewed the future with black despair. Certainly the brutal ruthless period in which they lived held little hope for them. Yet, theirs is a shining victory for Christians for all ages. For in the religion of Jesus they found Eternal things which transcend time and they layed their hopes on Eternity.

We claim for our faith the grasp of Eternity—the privilege that is given to those who believe that they can partake of Eternity. The Gospel of John and the Epistles by the same writer beautifully proclaim that by laying hold of spiritual things and particularly by committing our lives to the eternal Love of God, we can be partakers here and now of Eternity. The great call of love appearing again and again in these writings bear such a promise for men who commit themselves.

It is such a life needed by Christian souls today. Ones that grasp the Eternal gift of God to men. In such lives lie the hope of the confused, darkened, sin-stricken world. So long as such souls can be found, there is reason for confidence and strength and quietness.

But, that is not all. Such souls with the grasp of Eternity must lay a challenge before people. There must be an evangelic fervor both to call men to their senses and to share with them this only hope for mankind. The dependence upon material wealth and power and might, comfort and good food for human satisfaction must go. In its place must come the dependence on the Eternal things found in the life and ministry of the Christ. These must then apply to all areas of living.

One little part of this testimony can come through a deep fellowship with kindred souls with kindred commitments to Christ as Master and Lord of life. It is because of this that such simple things as the fellowship in a church, the letter written to a fellow Christian in another land, the deed done for a neighbor in need, the calm joy in the eyes of a family become important.

And, it becomes a joy and a challenge to carry on correspondence with fellow Christians across the waters. We must share our faith, we must assure fellow Christians of our undying love for them and for all men. Anyone wishing to enter a correspondence fellowship should contact the Young People's Union for plans they have for such a letter exchange between the continents. By writing in to the editor of these pages, the Mennonite Youth, more detailed information can be obtained.

Youth Events

The atom bomb test in the Bikini islands is being carried through at a moment in political history which is very significant. As the power of the atom is being demonstrated, with an immense news build-up, the big powers are dealing with each other over the division of power and of spoils. They are deciding the way the atom is to be controlled, they are parrying with each other over the peace treaty, they are playing the great game of power politics with Britain and U. S. matched against Russia. Each is fearful of the other. It would seem the atom bomb experiment is a great behind-the-scenes incident of great significance at the conference tables in Paris.

Any one interested in corresponding with any of these three young people should contact the editor of Mennonite Youth, R.F.D. 2, Newton, Kansas.

Among the speakers listed for this year's conference is Mr. C. T. Habegger, who is president of the Berne Manufacturing Co., Berne, Indiana. Mr. Habegger will be dean of the small business sessions of the conference. He is head of a successful small business at Berne.

Reports from Washington indicate that the number of volunteers to the army is within four thousand of the number of enlistees needed by the army. In the light of this, the fact that army pressure continues for the drafting of men through Selective Service, becomes even more evident that the draft act is desired, not to maintain the army, but to establish conscription as a peacetime measure. The sweep toward militarism is world-wide. No nation seems fearless enough to drop this tool of power politics.

It is reported that there are twenty-four million more unchurched people in America today than there were forty years ago. The cry for effective evangelism all about us is yet great. The need for concerned workers, capable and willing to use their time to make Christ a living and saving reality is still great.

Graham; and J. Stratton Shufelt.

A group of former C.P.S. men are among those interested in actively developing the project. These are: James Stanley and Winslow H. Osborne. Also, Paul Comly French, connected with the National Service Board for Religious Objectors, is an active member of the staff creating the new journal.

Several of the young people at the Warroad, Minnesota church are teaching daily vacation Bible school this summer. Warroad is a small church, a member of the conference, established in 1934 by a group who migrated from North Dakota during the drouth. It is located on the Lake of the Woods and Verney Unruh, YPU representative who visted there, states that it has some twenty young people.

At present the Brethren Service Committee has one base camp left. The remainder are all special service units.

What About Prejudice?

By W. B. Creighton

If you said you hadn't any, and said it very positively, I suppose I would have to believe you, but before I did that I should probably come to the conclusion that you were quite different from most other people. Nearly everyone else has some, of one kind or another and, while the kinds differ somewhat essentially, it is a question if any kind is an altogether nice and excellent thing, especially if it is carried to an extreme, as a good many prejudices are likely to be. To be a prejudiced person is to prejudge a situation to form an opinion not on the basis of the facts, but on some other ground, surely never a wise thing to do. But it is what we do after we fix our prejudices that so often makes those prejudices such an ill thing.

It was prejudice, in the name of religion, of all strange things; that caused more bloodshed in the history of our race than any other tragic incident in that long history, the prejudice that led to the holy wars of religion, not any pagan religion, but the religion of the meek and lowly Jesus, the Prince of Peace. If we say that we have got along past all that in this modern, enlightened age, we had better not say it with too much positiveness lest the reading of our daily papers, that hints at bitter rivalries among our many religious groups, should shame us utterly. Prejudice in the name of religion isn't dead among us by any means, but stands as one of the great obstacles to real religion throughout our land.

The problems that face our world today are most perplexing and difficult, but who would dare say that they would not be vastly easier of solution if we could face them without prejudice, race prejudice, the prejudice born out of national history and experience, the prejudice, if you will, that refuses to see that other peoples have their point of view and their prejudice quite as legitimately as we have? If we were citizens of the world we should still have our problems, but that broader vision and ideal would get rid of very many of them.

The great evil of prejudice so often lies in the fact that it inevitably tends to break into intolerance. And who, looking at world history with any understanding, would not say that intolerance inclines to be one of the great sins of our race? And any intelligent reading of the teaching of Jesus would confirm us in our conviction that he saw it so.—Onward

Sing On!

Sing, oh, sing, for the night is dark
And the dawning tarries long,
And the woe of the land with shadowing wings
Is stilled by the power of song.
There is never a light on the land tonight,
There is never a star in the sky,
Only the glance of the lightning's lance
And the white waves leaping high.

The sea-bird swings on tireless wings,
The waves with rhythmic beat
For evermore along the shore
Their world-old song repeat:
And borne on winds afar,
The silver echoes fill
The vault of heaven from star to star.
The earth from hill to hill.

Sing, oh, sing, for the night is past,
And the sun shines over the sea,
And the heart of the world is a song of love
And hope for the days to be.
The terror that flies through the midnight skies
And the powers of the dark are gone;
Till the music fills the echoing hills,
Heart of my heart, sing on! —Great Thoughts

RELIEF

MENNONITE D. P.'s

In Berlin

Sister Freda Dyck, now in Holland, has received official permission to enter Berlin and assist her husband Peter Dyck in caring for the displaced Mennonite people. Brother Dyck writes that MCC food supplies have reached two hundred of those who were in great need and that they have now been moved into several houses and are in the process of organizing the entire camp life. He writes that they use about two and one-half sacks of flour per day and canned vegetables and meat almost in that proportion. The entire group has expressed their thanks to the American and Canadian Mennonites in the following cablegram which was received at Akron on June 25. Translated into English the message reads:

TWO HUNDRED HOMELESS MENNONITES FROM THE ONES BROTHER DYCK LEGALLY ARRANGED BERLIN SHELTER HEARTILY THANK GOD REWARD OUR DEAR SISTERS AND BRETHREN RICHLY WHO IN THE NAME OF JESUS LOVE TRANSFERRED THE GROUP (Signed) FAST

New Groups Found

New groups of displaced Mennonites have been discovered in the vicinity of Munich. Three hundred fifteen are located in a nearby UNRRA camp. Another group of about 115 are being cared for by civil authorities in a refugee camp. It is said that they are in grave anxiety as to their future and their needs are not being taken care of. There is no factual information on the number of Mennonites in Austria but information received states that segments are scattered throughout that country. An effort is being made to secure the names of all Mennonites D.P.'s.

Relationship of CARE to General Relief Program

The long awaited channel through which American and Canadian people can send food packages to individuals in the American and British occupied areas in Germany has finally been cleared. This is indeed welcome news to many Mennonites who have friends and relatives in these areas.

The sending of standard "10-in-1" food packages to these areas is possible through the organization known as CARE. These letters stand for "Cooperative for American Remittances to Europe." This is a non-profit organization made up of twenty-four American relief agencies and has the full approval of governmental authorities. The Mennonite Central Committee is a member agency of CARE.

The service which this organization is rendering is a worthy one. It offers the opportunity to send direct relief to an individual in a war-torn country. This is the primary function of CARE. It is also possible through facilities set up at Akron and through special arrangement with CARE to have these food packages sent to needy Mennonite people in these countries even though the donor is not personally acquainted with needy Mennonite people.

It has been the policy to make available for Mennonite people the most adequate channels through which to do the most effective and complete job of relief. Through CARE a new manner of giving relief now becomes available. It provides a channel whereby personal and direct relief may be brought to friends and relatives. Its major function however is not to operate in the general relief field.

We are confident that Mennonite people will find in CARE a bona fide avenue through which some will desire to contribute. One needs to remember, however, that relief of this type is substantially more expensive than that which is carried on in the general relief program. We feel certain that the use of this channel will not detract from the generous support which has been given to the general relief program of the Mennonite church.

Departures

Farewell services were held at Akron on July 1, 1946, for five relief workers who left for their respective fields of service on July 2. Ellwyn Hartzler and Kenneth Schmidt, C.P.S. assignees, sailed from New York for Puerto Rico. Brother and Sister Robert Fisher sailed on the S. S. Washington for Le Havre, France; they will work with the relief program in Belgium. Ralph Sommer, who has been appointed for work in China, left for Shanghai on board the S. S. Sea Hydra.

Arrivals

A cable was received on June 30, 1946, from Ascuncion, Paraguay, confirming the arrival of Brother and Sister Gerhard Warkentin on June 26, and Brother and Sister Orie Miller on June 29.

C. P. S.

Directors Confer

A meeting of Camp Directors and Educational Directors was held at C.P.S. Camp No. 138, Unit 1, Lincoln, Nebraska, on June 27 and 28. The major part of the meeting was spent in discussing the basic principles of the C.P.S. program in order to define more clearly the objectives for future planning.

Hospital Trends

C.P.S. Unit No. 77, Greystone Park, New Jersey, will close on August 1, 1946 according to Selective Service. The closing of hospital Units has been gradual and is conditioned by the local labor shortage in many instances.

Gulfport Needs

Because of the rapid discharge of many C.P.S. men at Gulfport, there is a need for replacements. C. P. S. men with less than six months of service are desirable. About ten voluntary service workers are also needed including the following: 1 person to teach Bible in the rural community schools, 1 recreational leader, 1 office secretary, and two registered nurses. Applications should be sent to Elmer Ediger, Akron, Pa.

Study Aids for S.S. Lessons

The Sunday School lessons for the quarter, which began on July 7 are on Christ's interpretation of the ten commandments with applications for our day.

Two books have been written on this theme which may be helpful in the preparation of the Sunday School lessons for this quarter. Both of these books are a series of messages on this over-all theme. The first is: "Ten Rules for Living" by Clovis Chappell. The second is: "Foundations for Reconstruction" by D. Elton Trueblood. The first is written in a more popular style than the second one, but both will be stimulating.

Needless to say the reader will not agree with all that is found in these books. This is particularly true of Dr. Trueblood's chapter on: "Thou shalt not kill." However, there is much that will be of value in both of these books. — Paul R. Shelly, member of the Curriculum Committee.

SISTER HILLEGONDA IS 98

(The following news report of Sister Hillegonda's birthday was sent in by Sister Helene Marie Bartsch. Following that we bring a statement by Sister Hillegonda herself.)

June 30 was the date of Sister Hillegonda's ninety-eithth birthday. Her brother, Rev. C. v. d. Smissen, the sisters from the Bethel Deaconess Home, and other friends came to pay their respect and to extend their good wishes to Sister Hillegonda.

In the afternoon seven nieces and nephews and other relatives from Augusta, Kansas; Beatrice, Nebraska; Nevada; Indiana; New York; and other states gathered in the chapel of the Bethel Home for Aged, where a program consisting of short talks, reminiscences of Sister Hillegonda's earlier years, recitation, vocal and instrumental solos had been arranged for by the relatives. After another hour of fellowship, the honored guest and others returned to their homes. Sister Hillegonda has been an active Sunday School teacher, church worker, and faithful deaconess.

SISTER HILLEGONDA'S STATEMENT

Through God's kindness I was permitted to celebrate on Sunday (June 30) my birthday, 98. I enjoyed God's grace and the kind remembrance of relatives and friends. I got over sixty cards and many letters and flowers. The Sisters sang in the morning before my door: "He leadeth me, O blessed thought." Yes, the dear Lord has lead me 98 years, and has blessed and helped me in sad and in glad days. I am thankful for his kindness.

My dear brother's children came from five different states to celebrate my birthday with us. Seven of his eight children and several of their children were here. We had Sunday afternoon in the chapel of the Home for Aged a fine, blessed time. We thanked the Lord and praised Him.

Many of my dear friends, who thought lovingly of me, I thank very much and wish you God's blessing.

Lovingly, Siser Hillegonda van der Smissen

Elenore M. Schmidt Reports from Champa, India

This year has been a year of new visions and broadening of scope for me. I have felt the burden for souls in a new way—and I have felt the burden of sin in my own life as I have never experienced it before. Thanks be to God that he leads us in triumph.

I have finished my first year course and am working on the second year work. I have been studying with a tutor three hours a day while here on the plains. Besides this I have also been working part time in the hospital here in Champa. Now that it is time to go to Landour for school again, I am a little sorry that I have to go, because I am getting into the swing of the work. It was a mighty temptation to leave the studying go and work more, but I know that in the end that would not be profitable. Each day I find that my language flows a little more smoothly—that I have less difficulty in understanding the fluent flow of speech. Of course, I don't even pretend to understand Chhatisgharhi, the dialect of this area.

My work at the hospital consists mostly of supervision—and this is mainly in the operating room. We have two trained nurses, three trained compounders, besides several others practical workers. I love these people and even though they occasionally do not follow procedures in the way I have been taught, and in the way that we at home consider the right way, they are good co-workers. I am looking forward to coming back here when I finish my language study. And even though I may be stationed at a different place after next Conference, I am assured that wherever I am put to work I will be happy there because the work is the Lord's

I am happy that Miss Pauls and I are able to live together. Just now I am alone in this big house because the Claassens and Miss Pauls went to Jagdeeshpur on a visit. It seems very lonely, but sometimes when we are the most alone is the time when we are the least alone. When I go to the hills she will have her turn at being alone.

This year I am fortunate to be able to go to the hills for the hot season. Next year I won't have to go to language school so it may be my lot to remain down for at least part of the season. It will be a good education and a good test of endurance. The compensation for this is that I will be able to be here when all the young people come home from school. I have never met some of them. (April 14, 1946)

A Tribute

(In the June 25 issue we brought the obituary of Mrs. Abraham Wiens, who together with her husband began and carried on the mission that is now known as the Mennonite Bible Mission on Rockwell Street in Chicago. Mrs. Wiens is also the mother of the following: Mrs. John Thiessen of India; Mrs. August Ewert of Mountain Lake, Minnesota; Mrs. Henry A. Toews, Africa; Mrs. John Neufeld of the Chicago Mission; Mrs. George Dick of Bloomfield, Montana, and of Sarah and Esther Wiens, Chicago. Thus five daughters of Mrs. Wiens are active in our conference as the wives of missionaries and ministers. The following poem was written by Mrs. John Thiessen of India, who dedicated it to her mother.)

MY MOTHER

Early she taught me the heavenly way,
  And carefully nourished and guarded my soul;
She lived her religion and so day by day,
  Her faith became ours for life as a whole.

She gave of her time and taught me to draw,
  When yet for school I was too small;
So many songs we learned from her
  Which opened new vistas for us all.

A life of service she has lived,
  And by her many have been blessed;
The poor, the sick, and the bereaved,
  By her love have been carressed.

E'en though seven daughters grew up there,
  She wanted the home to be neat and clean;
And many guests who came, have shared
  Her meals, so tasty and nourishing.

Long is it now since I left the brood,
  But still I fondly cherish the advice
Of one who loved me next to God,
  Who paid for me a great big price.

Her meaningful message comes to us now,
  And this our motto must be, and goal—
"Whatever we do, that it may be An honour to Him who loves the soul".

Dedicated to Mother Wiens by dition what mixing the cake batter does for a cake. The batter may have all the ingredients that will make a good cake, but if these ingredients are not related to each other in a close and helpful way by mixing, the cake will not rise very well. Our lives may be full of various experiences. Unless these are helpfully related to each other through meditation, there can be little new strength from them, no deep peace of mind, and only a little growth. Extended vacations permit us to do things that we cannot enjoy in the usual routine of life. Daily vacations are just as necessary, if not even more so, for they help to give us that refreshing of which we are constantly in need. The quiet hour is "the pause that refreshes."

Jottings

—Fred A. Johnson writes from Oraibi, Arizona, that he has resigned from the Mennonite mission work in Hopi land. Brother Johnson left the work May 15. He writes that some of the packages intended for the Mennonite mission work have been forwarded to him in Oraibi, and he wants it made plain that he is no longer at Moencopi, Tuba City, Arizona. Fred Johnson's mailing address is now Oraibi and not Tuba City. (Howard G. Nyce, Secretary of the Foreign Mission Board, writes that until further notice all sewed articles, etc., intended for Moencopi should be sent to John P. Suderman at Oraibi.)

—Bethel Church, Inman, Kansas: On June 23 we had a festival of welcome in honor of the boys who had returned from service. Eighteen have returned. After the program the entire congregation had refreshments in the basement. Sol Ediger, who worked in the mental hospital at Ypsilanti, Michigan, showed slides of the institution and inmates at our monthly C. E. program. —Dan E. Neufeld, Corr.

—Paso Robles, California: The combined choirs of the First and Second Mennonite churches presented a program at the Second Church on July 14. Miss Anne Wiebe of Beatrice, Nebraska, who is visiting some of the California churches and C.P.S. camps this summer, planned the program. The music was under the direction of Mrs. Louis Bergman of the Second Church and Mrs. Alfred Heer of the First Church. The program included such well-known favorites as "O Power of Love" and "My God and I."

—Gospel Church, Mountain Lake, Minnesota: Children's Day and Mission Festival was observed on July 4. The morning program was followed by a fellowship meal at noon. Rev. D. J. Unruh and Rev. M. M. Lehman were the guest speakers of the afternoon meeting. Mrs. Herman Andreas, who suffered from cancer for several years, passed away on June 30.—Elizabeth Lohrenz, Corr.

—First Church, Beatrice, Nebraska: On July 7 a quartet from the Rochester Baptist Seminary rendered a sacred program in word and song and the union services in the evening. Rev. Walter H. Dyck officiated at communion June 30. Mrs. P. R. Schroeder, a representative of the Visitation Committee of the Ladies Mission Societies, recently met with the ladies of our congregation to share information.—Margaret Albrecht, Corr.

—Correspondents should now address all jottings material to: Editor, The Mennonite, 722 Main Street, Newton, Kansas, for the editorial office has been moved from North Newton, to Newton. All other mail for the editor should also be sent to the new address.

—Paul Boschman, ministerial student at Bethel College, is serving the Mennonite Church at Hanston, Kansas, during the summer.

—First Church, Sugarcreek, Ohio: Arnold Nickel of Mountain Lake, Minnesota, is assisting our pastor, Rev. William H. Stauffer this summer. Rev. Stauffer is traveling through the western states at present in his capacity as executive secretary of the Mutual Aid and the Home Mission boards. He expects to be home again to fill the pulpit July 7. Twenty-four of our young people have just returned from a splendid weeks retreat at Camp Mack, near Milford, Indiana. The church provided transportation for the group.—Wiley McDowell —Johannestal Church, Hillsboro, Kansas: The Mission Society bought our pastor a mimeograph machine and now we have church bulletins every Sunday morning.—Mrs. Arnold A. Plenert, Corr.

—The address of Rev. Marvin J. Dirks for the summer is: Halstead, Kansas. Mr. Dirk's work for the summer is largely in connection with young people's retreats in the States and Canada. He will teach mission classes and conduct choirs.

—Zion Mennonite Church, Souderton, Pa., has purchased and installed an Electronic Carillon and Amplification System as a "Thank Memorial." The basic unit of two 50 watt power amplification units, six 25 watt trumpets in the church tower, and the loud speaking system are so arranged that other auxiliary equipment such as electronic chimes or carillons can be added without changing the basic unit. The chimes are now heard each evening from the church tower and the system is also used during the Sunday services. The unit was purchased with the thank-offering brought by members and friends as a thanksgiving for the many blessings received, especially the safe return of sixty-six of the eighty-four members who have been released from service. The Junior Choir presented an inspiring program of sacred music on Sunday evening, June 9. The choir of twenty-two voices is directed by Mrs. Ellis Graber, Minister of Music. Our two-week vacation church school came to a close with the program and exhibit on display on Sunday evening, June 30. The school was well organized and well attended. Outstanding features were the music classes taught by Mrs. Graber in each of the five departments and instruction in oil painting and wood carving by Miss Treva Zuercher, one of our members who is an art student at Bluffton College. Rev. Graber taught a course in Mennonite History to the students of high school age.

He Would Heal Today

"Apart from the physical side of illness, there is also the mental, not just the reaction to being sick, but being sick because of the mind. It is not unusual for an individual to come to his doctor's office, obviously a sick person. However, the most careful examination or the most thorough laboratory checkup fails to reveal any physical basis for the illness. It is reliably estimated that fully one-third of all patients that consult a doctor belong to this group. During periods of stress, this percentage rises; when national economy is good and our lives are more stable there are noticeably fewer of them. That does not mean that these people are not sick. On the contrary, they are definitely so. However, the foundation for illness is not in their bodies, but in their emotions and mental attitudes. We all know the effect of grief on a human being. We have seen the changes in health, in energy, in body weight, in appetite, even of body temperature that is produced by grief or fear. These are extreme and obvious examples. Now consider the person with lesser experiences of grief, or fear, or anger, or greed. That individual also has body changes, not so marked at first, but later making him really sick. He knows he is ill—he is losing weight, or cannot sleep, or does not eat well, or is nervous, or any number of other things that are very real. That person has such an emotional disturbance which he cannot quiet, that he establishes a physical ailment as an outlet, otherwise something will "break" and he will have a tantrum, or a spell, or something.

People that are properly balanced emotionally seldom, if ever, have these disturbing physical "outlets." The true Christian, who believes that all things work for the good of him who is a child of God, seldom has a fear that sets him apart as a sick person, or has he the deep sorrow that creates illness as an outlet for grief, nor has he anger that eats as surely as a slow growth. By being a truly Christian group it should be possible for a community to be rid of about a third of its ills, all those that are due to the mind."

From the editor's point - of - view:

M.C.C. activities deserve our special attention at this time when there is so much need in this world and when the M.C.C. nears its twenty-fifth birthday. These activities cannot be adequately stated in dollars; nevertheless it is significant to note that M.C.C. War Sufferers Relief Contributions from July 1, 1937, to November 30, 1944, totalled nearly one million dollars and that by this time they have passed this mark. Contributions for Civilian Public Service from December 1, 1940, to November 30, 1944, totalled over two million dollars. Through the Mennonite Central Committee various Mennonite branches have put love into action. Could those who have benefitted from M.C.C. relief participate in the birthday celebration, they undoubtedly would feel like singing a happy birthday song. It was a happy day for the soundness and growth of the Mennonite Church when on July 27 nd 28, 1920, representatives of several Mennonite relief committees met at Elkhart, Indiana, and adopted a resolution that called for the creation of a central committee, which was then later officially organized on September 27, 1920. Not only have Mennonites shown love to the needy through the M.C.C. but through it they also have moved closer together in cooperation and fellowship, a very significant thing for those who are to have in them the Spirit of Him who is Love. The M.C.C. has prepared an interesting and informative anniversary booklet which may be secured from the M.C.C., Akron, Pa., for fifty cents a copy. It is entitled "Twenty-five Years."

THE JEHOVAH WITNESSES need to be understood to be appreciated. Undoubtedly behind much of their militant aggressiveness lies a history of personal disappointment, confusion, and pain. For it is out of such painful experiences that compensatory aggressiveness is born. When individuals who have suffered strong feelings of frustration and inferiority join up with a very "select" group, they tend to rise in their own estimation even though that may be a superficial satisfaction. It would seem that the way the Jehovah Witnesses—and not they alone for that matter—are able to hold in disrepute other groups, would help to give them a certain feeling of self-esteem and superiority that they could not otherwise enjoy. Furthermore, to approach others with something exceedingly valuable and to try to do good to others and win them to the true faith, would also tend to aid this feeling of superiority or satisfaction with self. It is unfortunate that man so readily chooses superficial ways to satisfy his fundamental needs. A man must achieve a basic self-respect if he is to be at peace, but this true self-respect cannot come by looking down upon others or seeking to "do them good." It can come only when the individual truly loves, for that is what God wants him to do. But before an individual can love, he must experience the grace of God. The Jehovah Witnesses are not in need of denunciation or resistance. They need our understanding, fellowship, and love.

"IS FUNDAMENTALISM ENOUGH?" an article which appeared in the January issue of the "Moody Monthly," is indeed very thought-provoking and an indication that man's basic hunger to be in right relationship with God and man cannot be downed. Some quotations from this article are given here: "Orthodox primness is insisted on by a conservative wing of the theological world, whose adherents have adjusted their doctrinal dress with the most meticulous precision. Doctrinal correctness, fastidious credal manners, and dogmatic insistence on certain articles of the Christian faith are in evidence on every hand . . ." "But alas, with all of this contention for doctrine, there is a spiritual coldness and apathy that is appalling." "The rancor, jealousies, and strivings rampant in Fundamentalism savor of the fact that while our theology may be correct, our lives are not." "Our fundamental creeds are not enough! Truth on ice will not disturb the sinful soul. Truth aflame in daily living, creeds manifest in conduct, statements translated into service and precepts become practice will stir afresh a world for God." ". . . the Christian is not called to a life on the natural plane, but to a life lived on the high plane of victory, in which life the grace of God so bears the fruit of the Holy Spirit, that we grow utterly unconcerned about our own plans, ambitions, rights and attainments, and

by A. K. Ratzlaff, M.D.

There are two main parts to this business of helping maintain the health of any community: the one has to do with disease or sickness of the body; the other has its main interest in emotions and the mind. Both the body and the mind should be sound and whole, so that the community can be benefitted by our being a part of it. We all know of exceptions, but as a rule we must have mental and physical health together.

In trying to improve the health of our bodies, we owe it to ourselves to keep them as active and free from trouble as we can. Not only do we owe it to ourselves, but we must always consider them to be the dwelling places of our souls, and that those houses must be well kept.

I believe that as Mennonite rural people we have a tendency to look down on our bodies, to use them hard and expect them to carry us to the end. If they partly break down as a result of our activities, then it is a "gift" of God and must be borne patiently. Our primary religious instruction has always emphasized the soul,usually has degraded the body because of its lusts and sinful tendencies, and thus has laid the foundation for early infirmities. I believe that intelligent consideration for the needs of the flesh must be kept in mind—not that we are to worry about each ache or pain, but that we are to treat our bodies with the respect they deserve, for we have been wonderfully created.

Physically, there are several things which we would do well to observe. First is the matter of diet. As farmers, we raise a great variety of foodstuff, nearly everything we need. During the war years our government dietitians told us about the basic foods our bodies need to remain active and healthy. As a result of this educational activity, our tables have had a greater variety of food for the day's meals, so that we have been eating more of the things we need. Some of the items that we raise are sorely needed in the cities nearby, and usually bring good prices. I am wondering if ofttimes we do not feel that it is too costly to have these items in our own diets. Instead of consuming them, we sell them and purchase a less expensive substitute, or perhaps, just go without. Maybe we would be better off if we ate a greater variety, even if it meant that our table cost us a little more.

A number of our farmers are selling milk to larger dairies. It is a common story among them that before they could sell to the dairies and get the added price for grade A products the barn had to be fixed up just so, the flies had to be screened out of various buildings, equipment had to be especially cleaned, the cattle had to be tested for contagious diseases, etc. Even now, the only reason we go to the expense of the improvements in our barns and yards is that thereby we get more money for our products. We do not see, apparently, that these improvements help prevent the spreading of disease and sickness and that we ourselves are healthier because of them. As a community we could be much healthier. We would have to insist, of course, that our houses, barns, buildings, and yards be clean and sanitary and that no disease could spread through our milk, our well water, and our system of sewage disposal.

I believe that there are more and more people going to the doctor when they feel that there is something that really needs attention. It is difficult at times to know whether our ailment is only trifling or is something leading to a more serious sickness. One does not like to go to the physician needlessly. Most of us doctors would rather see our patients (who are also our friends) come to consult us too soon than too late. We can always tell you cheerfully that an ailment will leave you unharmed, but it hurts us mightily to have to tell you that we can no longer help, that you waited too long.

Apart from the physical side of illness, there is also the mental, not just the reaction to being sick, but being sick because of the mind. It is not unusual for an individual to come to his doctor's office, obviously a sick person. However, the most careful examination or the most thorough laboratory checkup fails to reveal any physical basis for the illness. It is reliably estimated that fully one-third of all patients that consult a doctor belong to this group. Dr. A. K. Ratzlaff has lived and worked in a number of Mennonite communities. He was born at Moundridge, Kansas, in 1906. Later he attended school at Newton, Kansas, and Carnduff, Saskatchewan, and high school at Buhler, Kansas. In 1928 he graduated from Bethel College. Next he completed his medical training. In 1935 he began his services as physician in the Hillsboro, Kansas, community. Since 1940 he has been serving as doctor in the large, Goessel, Kansas, Mennonite community.

The Jehovah Witnesses

A book review by Winfield Fretz

The Jehovah's Witnesses by Herbert Hewitt Stroup, New York, Columbia University Press 1945, 180 pp., Price $2.50.

There have been a number of articles written about the Jehovah's Witnesses but to date Mr. Stroup's study of the Jehovah's Witnesses is the most scholarly and complete book published in English on this subject.

The rural readers of The Mennonite may not be quite as familiar with the Jehovah's Witnesses as are the urban readers, but it is safe to assume that almost everyone has had first-hand contact with some Jehovah's Witnesses and certainly everyone has heard of them. Stroup, a teacher of Sociology and Anthropology in Brooklyn College, New York, made numerous first-hand observations, interviewed many leaders and lay members, and attended many Jehovah's Witnesses meetings, as well as carefully studied the literature and the organization and activities of this growing American religious group. Mennonites are especially familiar with them because of the Witnesses' refusal to salute the flag and the refusal to go to war. A number of the Jehovah's Witnesses served in Civilian Public Service camps.

About the Book

Those who are interested in knowing more about the "insides" of the Jehovah's Witnesses will find this book contains most answers to their questions. It is clearly written and is objective in its views throughout. It is well documented and discusses the subject matter in seven chapters, taking up first, the history of the group and a description of its leaders followed by chapters on the oragnization and finances, the literature and the workers, the converts, the ways of the Witness, the Witness as believer, their attitudes and relations. Stroup believes that the Jehovah's Witnesses represent one of the four typically American religions. He lists the Mormons, the Christian Scientists, and the Negro religions as the other three distinctly American types. I think most readers along with the reviewer will have some question about Stroup's classification of the Negroes along with the other three groups. The Jehovah's Witnesses have in times past been known by other names, such as the Russellites after the founder Charles Taze Russel, Followers of the Millennial Dawn, Watch Tower Bible People, International Bible Students, and Rutherfordites.

Work and Activity

It will be of interest to the readers of this book as well as the readers of the review to note that the sect has its headquarters in an eight-story Brooklyn, New York, building at which place about two hundred followers find employment. These followers live in what is called Bethel House in what they claim is a state of primitive Christianity. Bethel House is a seven-story brick building located on the old Henry Ward Beecher mansion grounds. The residence is provided with laundry, shoe shop, tailor shop, and common dining hall. The factory and the residence buildings are valued at about one million dollars. The workers in the print shop and factory receive maintenance plus ten dollars per month for incidentals. The Witnesses own several farms in New York State from which food is supplied to the Bethel House residence, and in addition, the sect maintains a large printing house in England. The workers give generously of their time. There are the group of workers known as the Publishers of which there were 106,000 in 1943, 64,995 of them in the United States; and the full time workers known as Pioneers of which there were 7,624 in 1943 and of which 4,204 were in the United States. The Pioneers are the backbone of the group and were earlier referred to as "Pilgrims" and "Heralds." The Publishers were expected to give from thirty to sixty hours a month to the cause of the Witnesses. The main technique of witnessing is through the distribution of literature. By comparison with America's best sellers the Witness circulation of books is far ahead. Claims are made for three million of the book "Children" and twenty-two million circulation for the book called "Crisis" and it is claimed that the combined circulations of Rutherford's twenty books and over five hundred articles is said to be over ninety-three million. In addition to the literature the group owned 323 sound trucks in 1941 and in 1937 claimed thirty-five thousand phonographs were in use.

Religious Beliefs

To understand the religious beliefs and attitudes of the Jehovah's Witnesses and to get an idea as to who joins the Witnesses and the process of becoming a Witness, the reader must read Stroup's book. It is very much worth reading. Mennonite ministers who have lost members to this sect will be able to understand the appeal made to the members a little more clearly if they are familiar with Stroup's analysis. While one must respect the devotion, sacrifice and service of the ndividual members, one does not have a high regard for the bigotry, self-righteousness and ingratitude of the sect leaders and followers. One has even less appreciation for the Biblical exegesis and the Christian ethics that characterizes the Jehovah's Witnesses. Naturally, one cannot appreciate the teaching of the sect that all organized religion other than the Witnesses themselves is of the Devil, and the view of the Protestant Clergy as well as the Catholic Hierarchy is in for repeated and bitter attack. Because the group is so secretive and so exclusive to all outsiders it was dificult for Mr. Stroup to get some information which would have been very helpful in understanding the reigious movement with regard to matter of finances, eadership, and their source of authority. It was also often difficult to get anything authentic from the Witnesses themselves.

MENNONITES THE WORLD OVER

From the Ruins of Hamburg. Rev. B. Harder, who s in charge of the Hamburg Stadtmission and who had traveled extensively in America before World War II, writes: "In the summer of 1943 we were ompletely bombed out in the Dueppelstrasse. All our household goods, including my library, were gone within a few minutes. My wife and I were in the basement of our home and did not expect to survive. God's protection in this instance was a miracle. The ntire Dueppelstrasse is a heap of rubble. My wife uffered so much through this experience that she will ever be restored again."

Old Mennonite Church Destroyed. The Stadtmision, which owned buildings in and outside the city, met for their services in an old church formerly wned by the Mennonites in the heart of Hamburg-Altona. About these buildings Harder writes: "Our uildings in the city were frequently more or less amaged until finally the old church became a heap of rubble and the homes next to it were ruins. In all these dangers none of our co-workers perished. What that means you can hardly imagine. We have a God who helps."

The Mission Work Continued. Rev. Harder writes that they had evacuated the homes of the city mission into the country and continued their work there. Though under difficulties, they had been able to continue their work under Hitler. All homes in the country are intact. Mr. and Mrs. Harder also live in the country. They have become slender, that is, Mr. Harder has lost forty-five pounds. His address is B. Harder, Hamburg-Altona, Otto Billmannstrasse 4, Germany, British Zone.

Widening the Channels of Private Relief. In the previous issue we reported in detail about how starving friends in Europe can be helped through CARE food packages. We stated that the American Zone of Germany had been added to the many countries in which CARE operated. We are happy to report that meanwhile the British and French Zones of Germany have been opened for CARE food packages.

Briefly we repeat the procedure.

A. Obtain application blanks for CARE packages from the MCC office or local banks.

B. Fill out the blanks, make checks or money order payable to the MCC and mail to the MCC, Akron, Pa.

C. If you have no address, the MCC has lists of needy people.

Danzig Mennonite Writes. Richard Nickel, who was in an insurance business for twenty-five years in the city of Danzig and a member of the Mennonite Church at that place, has written to friends in America and would like to contact his relatives (Kroeker?). He writes: "The church has been destroyed like this whole city of Danzig in the course of the heavy fighting during the last days of March, 1945, and the members of our large Mennonite community have been dispersed all over the vast territory from far Siberia to Denmark and the Russian and the British Zones of occupation; as far as they have escaped the murderous fightings and that followed famine. I left Danzig in August, 1945, and since the 22nd of December am living here in the British Zone, a homeless fugutive with no more property than I am bearing on my body. The last year has led us through all depths of human existence and has brought us indescribable misery, great distress, grief and sorrow. Our youngest daughter, a girl of twenty, died in the Russian Zone."

Seeking a New Home. "It is my greatest wish, together with my wife and my oldest son, to seek a new home in a Mennonite settlement in North or South America and to build up there a new modest existence. Is there any possibility to realize this plan in your country?"

The writer of this column remembers Mr. Nickel from the Mennonite World Conferences in Danzig (1930) and in Amsterdam (1936). Even at that time Mr. Nickel wanted to leave Europe with his family to escape the approaching storm. Now he has lost a daughter and does not know whether one of his sons is living, and is looking for a refuge. He is one of the few German Mennonites who had conscientious objections to war to that degree that he considered migration to another country seriously and was one of the few signers of a peace statement at the Mennonite World Conference in 1936.

Jagdeeshpore Mission Area Very Active

(Missionary John Thiessen reports on church and school activity in the Jagdeeshpore area of the General Conference mission field in India in the following article. The report centers mainly around the Bethel church there and the Jansen Memorial School. Rev. Thiessen's address is Jagdeeshpore via Rainore, C.P., India. The report was written April 5.)

Fraternal Greetings with I John 3:14. This love of the brethren must needs extend to the uttermost parts of the world. The atom bomb teaches us the need of this afresh. If those who name Christ as their Lord in the whole world would really love and regard each other the world would soon know that there is spiritual power in this universe which can even overcome the atom bomb; and what is more, the world would know that Christ really has followers in this world. (John 13:34)

The work as a whole has gone on quite well since my last report. The church conference of our whole mission area met here at Jagdeeshpore in December, 1945. That was a time of refreshing and encouragement for all Christians, especially for the many new Christians in this area. Human beings are human enough to be impressed with numbers. When our people in this area see the many hundreds of Christians gather and their own church leaders conduct conference, then they realize that the Christian church is no small affair in this area, and they feel that the Christian teaching has reality, and then they want that too. We, of course, cannot say definitely that the new outbreak in this Basna area is due to the conference meeting here, but it is very remarkable that since conference way over three hundred people have been baptized in this our Basna field (since New Year's Day some three hundred have been baptized.) It is always a great joy to us and our coworkers when there is such a fine response, not merely in words, but also in action—in actually coming out for Christ in full and receiving baptism, and joining the church, and living a real Christian life. However, our task is not done when people come into the church. We must then teach them to observe all that Jesus has taught us. And this brings us very close to grips with life.

First, I wish to report about the local church here in Jagdeeshpore. You will recall that our three thousand Christian community is scattered in over one hundred villages. The largest single group is here around Jagdeeshpore mission station with some over eight hundred souls. Four hundred and fifty baptized members. This is the Bethel church. Then there are five other churches in this Basna area, namely, the Bethany, the Eden The Emmanuel, the Salem, and the Antioch. Our Bethel church asked me last October (1945) to serve them as pastor. I responded by telling them that by the grace of God I was willing to serve as interim pastor until they could find an Indian brother to shepherd them, one who could give his entire time to the church only. I have very many administrative duties in school and boarding homes and many supervisory tasks which eat up a person's time and energy. The church board of deacons and trustees promised to stand by me and help me, and they have done so very faithfully these months. There are always problems in the church—there are family quarrels—and then the frequent, recurrent problem of a brother running away with another man's wife and so on. Then the church board has a headache and the pastor still more. But in the early apostolic church not everything was according to Jesus' will either, and we read so clearly in the Corinthian letters. The bright side however is also there. Since my pastorate two groups have been baptized here in the local church, a total of thirty-four; and now there is a class of forty young people in preparation. Many of them are students in our school. Some of these will be baptized in their local churches where their homes are. But that they have become willing to follow Christ while in school here, is encouraging to us.

This brings me to the teaching end of our work. Our school is growing (I should say schools, because outside of our central station school we have a dozen smaller schools in the area). The school year is just closing these days, and the final examinations are being held now. School will remain closed from April 18 to June 18. Next year in April we hope to have our first high school graduates. We expect to have eight fine Christian young men in our graduation class. We fondly look forward to these eight young men that they will really be our coworkers in building up God's kingdom in this area.

In the middle and high school we had one hundred and fifty students this year in what we call the high school years in America. We had forty-nine students in the high school department. Of these, we believe with reason, there will be a goodly number who will be a high grade help in the Christian church of the future. Then we will not always need to call in help from other church areas, which is at best only temporary.

Our boarding homes are again overcrowded. We have just finished an addition; now we have to plan for further enlarging again. We want growth, but it is very hard to keep up. It is very remarkable. In so many church areas where faithful preaching has also been done, workers have to wait and wait for results. In this area we cannot catch up taking care of the results. Though we are often tired, we thank God for the results. Please keep on praying for us. I know you are.

Children May Send Goodwill Christmas Bundles

Although the war ended more than a year ago, liberated peoples all over the world are facing the most desperate winter yet, because of the lack of food, fuel and clothing. In Europe alone it is estimated that thirteen thousand people will perish from famine and exposure this winter. More than half of them are suffering from tuberculosis. These pitiful conditions must be relieved. The weak cannot help the weak. Here is an opportunity for Christians to act, to live their Christianity, toward aiding those suffering ones.

Through UNRRA 8,500,000 children have been assisted with food; 3,075,000 with clothing and other supplies since VE day. We, as Christians, should consider what we want to do over and beyond what the government can do.

Children have been exiled en masse where they have been separated from their parents for months and years, some to be left orphaned and homeless. Tuberculosis, diarrhea, and malnutrition are rampant. Perhaps some days there is food of only a slice of bread, thin soup, coffee, and sardines. These children should receive at least two thousand calories a day which should consist of a well-balanced diet of milk, vegetables, fruit, meat, eggs, and cereals.

Many schools run without any equipment. There are no pencils nor tablets for the students to use, no books for the children to read, not even desks at which to sit. Of all the many kinds of play equipment that children can use, none is at the disposal of these unfortunate ones. Think how difficult it must be for anyone to be deprived of even the very essentials of life.

They do not understand why such tragedies have come upon them. It must be hard for them to remember that there is love in the world. They are young, innocent, and sad-faced children, but nevertheless hopeful of a brighter future. They exist from day to day not knowing when next their young lives will cease to be.

It is with this picture in mind that we can look upon our own fortunate children with thankful hearts. Our gratefulness to God can be shown by sharing all that we have with deprived peoples everywhere.

We already have a food for relief program and a clothing program to which adults have responded so greatly. The children, too, can be taught the meaning of sharing and giving as never before. They can put into practical use the idea of giving and feel the satisfying results of, "It is more blessed to give than to receive."

Christmas is the time children associate with the giving of gifts. It is then that they can extend their giving to a realm beyond their group of immediate friends. When children can give for the pure joy of giving without receiving in return, a true spirit of goodwill and love for others has been established.

This year children will again be given the opportunity of sending Christmas packages to those in need of them. Last year the Mennonite church responded more generously than any other participating church group in sending Christmas packages. Such favorable reports should be encouraging to us to continue with strengthened zeal.

Detailed information on the GOODWILL CHRISTMAS BUNDLES will soon be released. The BUNDLES will be simple, compact, and easily handled as they will be wrapped in a towel and held with safety pins. In them will be placed such articles as clothing, games, toilet articles, and other tokens of friendship which will contribute much to make these children happy. Some of the articles can be made; all will be inexpensive and usable. New Testaments will be available in eight different languages to be put into the BUNDLES at Akron if the children designate that they want them.

The children may choose the age and sex of the person to receive the BUNDLE, and the country or area to which they want their gifts to be sent. BUNDLES will be shipped to the following countries: Paraguay, Puerto Rico, China, India, Philippine Islands, Ethiopia, Italy, Belgium, France, Germany, Holland and Denmark.

If the children desire, they can enclose letters, Christmas cards, snapshots, and maps of the United States. This will establish in children a foundation for permanent friendships and will help demonstrate our goodwill toward them.

The project can be undertaken by Sunday School classes, Junior sewing circles, Junior missionary societies, and other youth organizations. Individuals or families too can use this method of contributing at Christmas.

All of the BUNDLES will be due at the Mennonite Central Committee, Akron, Pennsylvania, by September 15. Pamphlets will soon be sent to the churches giving suggestions as to the contents, method of packing, etc.

It is in this way that our children can share the responsibility of giving for the relief of war-stricken children. Although we generally speak in terms of millions, the part that each child contributes will help to relieve one more suffering child. The love and kindness that goes with the BUNDLES given "IN THE NAME OF CHRIST" can do much to help bring about "Peace on Earth, Goodwill Toward Men." —by Marcille Steiner, (via Mennonite Central Committee.

The Education Fund ----
An Opportunity to Share Our Abundance

Very few of us have the opportunity of looking at our lives and our native land from 'the outside'. We are so accustomed to living in America and following our daily routines that we do not think how 'others' might see us. When Missionary Dester returned to America he said:

"After nine and a half year's absence from America and forty days on a slow steamer, we were hardly prepared for the experiences of our second homecoming to the States. The New York stores were like a fairy land. It did not seem real. Were we having a kind of 'Alice in Wonderland' dream, or were all these stores and people and things real? Were people, trains, and stations, really so clean? Could it be that people in general were so helpful and considerate? Were there really so many provisions made for our safety and comfort; soap, towels, drinking cups, and good water at every turn and when needed? Could travel be so quickly effected and with so little discomfort? (And still one hears much complaint). Is it actually possible to travel from New York to Chicago with only a few short stops on the way? Are these beautiful children, boys, girls, and grown-ups real? They wear such beautiful clothes, everything just right."

With our cars, clothes, farm machinery, stores full of things, do we look like 'super men' to people of other lands? Have we so taken for granted our way of living that we forget the lives lived by people of other lands? To what use should we put all the conveniences and the accumulated wealth we have?

First, we must grant that ours is a life of creature comfort. We do have many things. We are well fed—so well fed that we have added over an inch to our stature in the last twenty-five years. We are free to pursue any of many occupations. As a nation we are powerful and each of us in one way or another feel the results of that power. To what use should our favored position be put?

Other people and other nations are not so favored. Puerto Ricans live in little huts, are underfed and undernourished, they contract any one of many diseases and many die; they cannot get an education. Our Russian brethren now in Paraguay in the Chaco once were cultured and educated. They were able to pass on to their children a good education, they were able to train their youth thoroughly about the Bible and the Church. It is not so easy now. They can get only limited training, they cannot get the training and skills and thorough Bible training, dentistry, in mechanics, agriculture. In Europe, now a seething cauldron of hunger, suspicion, fear, and broken lives, opportunities are limited.

The need for training and consecrated leadership in these areas is great—greater even than in a more favored country such as America. Young people need to be trained to go back and serve as leaders in these lands, guiding the people to the abundant life in Christ.

We in America have all the facilities to train young people of other lands. We are in the position to share not just of our means, but of our vision of the good news of Christ. The proclamation continues to go forth from our schools that freedom in Christ means freedom from the weapons of hate, fear, strife, prejudice, and lust. The message of love and truth, faith and trust, is at the heart of our school's program and concern.

But, also, we need to learn from fellow Christians of other lands. Imagine the opportunity as Ernst Harder suggests of "going unto all the nations and teaching" if at our schools young people from Germany, Holland, Switzerland, India, China, Puerto Rico, Paraguay, and Africa would come together and spend four years of study and fellowship together. The inspiration and power of such fellowship together would undoubtedly do much to inspire the church to greater efforts in its mission to these lands.

Because of this, the Young People's Union has a project this year the raising of funds to be used to bring young people from Puerto Rico and Paraguay, Christian young people pledged to go back to their people after they have received training in our church schools. Young people have been chosen; they are anxious to come to America to be trained for a life of Christian service. This is a challenge to young people to share their abundance with fellow Christians in need. By sharing of our abundance in this way, the Gospel of Christ can be carried to other lands, for these young people are pledged to go back and use their training for the people in their lands. This is an unusual opportunity to share.

This issue of Mennonite Youth is devoted to acquaint the readers with this project. We urge you to read the articles prayerfully and evaluate for yourselves and your groups the value of this project.

What Is the Missionary Education Fund?

1. What is meant by Missionary Education Fund?

The Missionary Education Fund plan desires to raise money to be used to give an education in our church schools to young people from foreign lands and underprivileged young people in the United States. It is a mission in education because it is understood that these young people will return to their own people as trained Christian leaders. They will receive a training otherwise impossible, for the young people chosen will not be financially able to obtain an education on their own.

THE MISSIONARY EDUCATION FUND

2. Who is eligible?
   - a. Mennonites from Paraguay.
   - b. Mennonites from Europe.
   - c. Young people from the conference foreign mission fields—China, India, South America, Africa.
   - d. Young people from Puerto Rico.
   - e. Under-privileged young people such as negroes in the South who cannot go to school except through special aid.
3. What requirements must these young people meet to be eligible?
   - a. They must be sincere Christians.
   - b. They must be interested in the work of the church.
   - c. They must have leadership potentialities.
   - d. They must go to school with the expectation of going back to their home communities and serving their own people.
   - e. They must be scholastically qualified to make their education worthwhile.
4. Who is sponsoring this fund and how much is to be raised?
   - a. This fund is being sponsored by the Young People's Union. Verney Unruh of Freeman, South Dakota, is serving as the head of the planning and promotion of the project.
   - b. A plan to raise two thousand dollars a year is the goal of the fund.
5. How is the money to be raised?
   - a. The Fund is a part of the Young People's Union annual budget. Local young people's groups, by contributing to the Young People's Union and designating this as a project they wish to support, will support this fund.
   - b. The decision to support the fund is in the hands of each local group.
   - c. The Young People's Union officers are responsible for the proper use of funds received.
6. How are young people chosen as being eligible for this Fund's support?
   - a. The young people must be personally interested in the education and the use of the education as the requirements are outlined.
   - b. Young people desiring an education and meeting the qualifications are recommended by missionaries, relief workers, or ministers whose judgment the Young People's Union finds sound.
   - c. The college to which the student will go must find him acceptable to their standards.
7. Will any young people from foreign lands enter our colleges this fall?
   - a. A young man from Paraguay, Jacob Friesen, will come to America for training.
   - b. Two Puerto Rican natives, with whom the Mennonite C.P.S. unit has worked, have been accepted as eligible for the Missionary Education Fund.
   - c. President Ernest E. Miller of Goshen College and President Ed. G. Kaufman of Bethel College are in Europe contacting young people there who, because of the war, cannot continue their education. Plans are that European young people will enter our colleges.
8. Can I help?
   - a. Yes, by giving a portion of your earnings and your substance, you can help.
   - b. By making this one of the projects for your own Christian Endeavor, Young People's Group, or Youth Fellowship.
   - c. By prayerful concern for the young people to receive the education and for the people the education will prepare them to serve.

How an Education in America Looks to a Mennonite from Paraguay

by Ernst Harder

To study in a foreign country has always been considered an enriching experience in the life of any student. Usually this period was the crown of scholastic achievements in the home country. Universities and seminaries are still offering scholarships to foreign schools. Through this contact with foreign people and studies in the leading schools of other countries a deepening and broadening of the student's mind and life is sought.

There is, however, another student who needs to be taken out of his environment, which offers him no opportunity for a higher education, and needs to be brought into the atmosphere of a Christian Mennonite college. This is the Mennonite student from Paraguay. Deep in the Chaco of Paraguay where more than four thousand Mennonite pioneers struggle to build their children a future home, educated leadership is becoming increasingly scarce. Generally our Mennonites from Russia have always tried to give their children as much schooling as they could. The progress of their educational system depended somewhat upon their economic well-being. With prosperity the level of educational opportunities rose until teachers and preachers could be trained in Mennonite schools.

The first schools in Paraguay were very primitive. They had no equipment, but met under the open sky in the shade of some jungle trees. Almost before every settler had an adequate little house, they built cooperatively a schoolhouse in the middle of their village. Soon every village had a schoolhouse which was also used for worship services. Farmers and ministers who had some training were asked to teach. Some of the teachers who had gotten a good education in Russia soon organized a high school which grew until it included four years of training. Even teachers' training courses were added for several years.

However, pioneer life is not without its setbacks. The crop failures, personality clashes, idealogical and political conflicts were mirrored in the development of our schools. Our Zentralschule (high school) was closed for a time because of internal disagreements in the colony. Trained leadership could not be replaced by local personnel. Through M.C.C.'s relief teachers, of whom Mr. Waldo Hiebert and his wife were the first ones, it was possible to foster unity and bring the Fernheim Zentralschule to a new start. But Fernheim and Friesland do not only need teachers; they need their own doctors, better trained ministers and missionaries, mechanics, electricians, agriculturalists, etc., all of whom are thoroughly Christian and believe in the soundness of the Mennonite way of life. Mennonite ideals will live on in Paraguay also, if you and I practice them wherever we are. There is probably now no other place in the world where one can catch a glimpse of the vision of our forefathers better than in our Mennonite colleges in the United States. Our future leaders and specialists in one field or another who will work in Paraguay will need beside the complete committment to our Lord and Savior this vision that Christ and His teachings are practical and can be lived now.

The Great Opportunity

Can't you see what great opportunity you have in America? Your country is the only large power which has been spared large-scale war destruction and to you the world looks for leadership. Can you see what it means for world Mennonitism? It does not seem impossible, if you are willing to meet the challenge, that Mennonite students from Holland, Germany, Switzerland, Canada, Brazil, Paraguay, India and China will join hands on the campuses of Mennonite colleges in the United States. Can you see what the poet might have seen when he wrote the lines, "In Christ there is no East or West, in Him no North or South . . . ."? It is all part of fulfilling Christ's commission when he said: "Go ye into all the world and teach."

Puerto Rican "Natives" In Our Schools

by N. Paul Stucky

In our first few years in Sunday School we all sang, "Red and yellow, black and white; they are precious in His sight." At that time it was just a song. We had no feelings pro nor con. We were merely happy to know that Jesus loved all of us children.

In spite of the fact that American history tells us and the New Testament tells us that people are equal, it is difficult for us to live in the usual routine of life and have any great concern for our brothers on the other side of the waters. The reason is obvious; it is hard for us to be concerned about people whom we do not know. Why is it that the returning missionary is all enthusiastic about his work? He has learned to know those people as human beings and that their potentialities are similar to yours and mine.

Less than three years ago, the Mennonite Central Committee sent its first group to Puerto Rico to begin work there. From the very beginning, we were very welcome because we had come to help the people. These people (natives, as you call them) were just as eager to help us as soon as they saw that we had no selfish motives. No matter how busy they might have been, they would have been glad to take off an hour or two just to help us get a few new words added to our meager Spanish vocabulary. Which one of us would take off an hour during the middle of harvest just to teach a stranger a few words of our language so that he might be able to get along better in our land?

It is not hard to see that these people whom we went to serve have in some measure received a glimpse of the vision which first started the project. At first it was difficult for them to see why anyone should come to help them when he owed them nothing. Nevertheless, they never objected and with the help of a number of Puerto Rican Protestant Christians, our position was soon cleared in the minds of many.

The work there is continuing, but we must do more. We must help the people to help themselves, both materially and spiritually. A few leaders and persons with skills could do much. In short, we need to help them in the field of education—Christian education. It is true that among them are many devout Christians, but to be most effective they need training. We must open our doors and allow them to come to study among us and to prepare themselves adequately.

Our work in Puerto Rico is continuing, but the people whom we have sent there cannot always continue. We can, however, train a few young people in our schools so that they can return and continue to make live the spirit which was the initial inspiration.

No doubt such a project will also be of infinite value to us. Ever since the time of Abraham people have seen the value of kindness and fellowship with strangers. If we can make our Christian schools a place where our "brothers" of other lands can come to study, to return later to their own people, we can build a work which may in effect be one of the greatest missionary enterprises of our church.

After these students arrive, let us show every possible kindness so that they may return to their own land with only pleasant thoughts of the "natives" of the United States, for certainly God expects nothing less of us. If we believe in the equality of all men, we can do nothing less than to make it possible for them to study with us.

Thoughts of a Relief Worker on Education for Chaco Mennonites

by Dr. A. M. Lohrentz

We should remember that the Mennonites in the Chaco are of the same faith that we are here in the United States, as well as in Canada. They have divisions just like we have, differing in minor things which are not of great importance. Since we have these differences, and since there are at least four different Mennonite colleges in the United States, Bluffton, Tabor, Goshen and Bethel, any student or students that do come from Paraguay, should have at least one year at each of the above named colleges. We would learn to know them, and they would learn our various ways of thinking.

We should further remember that the facilities in Paraguay are not many as far as education is concerned. There is one Protestant college in Asuncion, but that is not Mennonite, and in the Chaco they do not have much more than six years of grade school work. A few have the chance to go two and possibly three years extra in the Zentral Schule, and that is the extent of schooling in the Chaco. The Paraguayan Government does not accept this education, and will not accept them in their schools, unless they are willing to start from the very beginning. I rather think that in case they had teachers with more years of training, that in a few years the government would give them more credit than they do now. Keeping in mind that they do not want to lose the heritage that we as Mennonites have, which, no doubt would happen, if the students would enter government schools, which are mostly Catholic. After one has a firm foundation, one could go through a Catholic college, and not lose himself.

We like to have our children go to higher schools than the high school, and so would the Chaco Mennonites like to have their children go on. Before they could enter our colleges, they would very likely have to attend some academy first to prepare them for the college work.

I for one believe that it would do us good, too, to have some of the young folk come here. We should be willing to go fifty-fifty. That is, we should learn from them as well as they learn from us.

Financially our brethren in South America are unable to carry out such an undertaking. It takes money to come here and go back again, as well as for the time spent here in school, even if they can do part time work.

By this undertaking we would establish a tie that would bind us closer than ever—not only as Mennonites, but as true Christians should be. The effort that the Young People's Union of the General Conference would put forth, would not only benefit the Paraguayan brethren, but also the young people, as well as us older ones here in the United States. Our forefathers all came from the same region, speaking the Plattdeutsch and various other dialects. I am sure that it will be a great blessing to everyone concerned.

Dr. A. M. Lohrentz is from McPherson, Kansas, and served as a medical doctor under the Mennonite Central Committee among the Chaco Mennonites in Paraguay.

ON "SHUSHING"

The habit of putting a straight jacket on your child in public accomplishes little or nothing. A little fellow who sat in church yesterday made some noise with a piece of paper, but the wise father did not get excited. By "shushing" their children, parents often prove more disturbing than the children.—Hazen G. Werner

Youth Events

The Pacific District Conference young people have set up for themselves a budget of $1600. This budget will serve to support the district projects as well as the Young People's Union. Anne Wiebe, music instructor in the Hillsboro, Kansas, high school is spending her summer giving music instruction in four California churches and at the Camino C.P.S. camp. Reports indicate her summer is a worthwhile and enjoyable venture.

A joint meeting was held by the Lustre and Wolf Point churches at the end of June at which Miss Anna Baerg, missionary from the Lustre church to the Indians in Arizona, Miss Aganetha Fast, missionary to China, and Verney Unruh, representing the Young People's Union spoke. Ben Rahn and Virgil Flickinger both spoke giving inspirational messages.

A World Christian Youth Conference is being planned for next year. This conference is scheduled to be held in Oslo, Norway. Christian Youth from all nations will send delegates to the conference.

At the retreat held at Camp Mack, Indiana in June, four young people pledged themselves to full time Christian service. Each year at the end of the retreat, a consecration service is held at which time the young people are called to consecrate themselves to Christ and those that are called to full time service are given the opportunity to consecrate themselves publicly.

In many small communities, the problem of youth's recreation facilities is acute. Either they travel around in gangs in cars, congregate at the corner filling station or drug store, or just loaf. Christian churches cannot avoid thinking about and doing something in this area of youth activity and life. Wholesome, creative recreation activity can serve as a powerful influence in a church's program of evangelization. What youth can forget those moments of spontaneous song around a piano, or playing games at a picnic? Christ can be in the midst of such gatherings—and He must be! Many communities are concerned about and doing something to provide recreation for their youth. Let our churches and our youth seriously consider this problem in their communities and work in the direction of wholesome recreation—if they do not now have it.

passionately interested in the blessing and progress of others . . . Our Fundamentalism ought to produce this result. If we loudly proclaim our belief in the free grace of God, then we must permit grace to do her tender work in our lives as believers." "Fundamentalism needs a fresh baptism of God-given longsuffering." "Competition between organized groups in the ranks of Fundamentalism has produced a spirit of satisfaction at the reversals or outright failures of other groups or individuals. How few there are to lift up in love, and what a tonic to one's soul it is to meet a child of God in whose life Fundamentalism has given birth to the grace of forbearance." "A Fundamentalism that shouts her doctrines from the housetops, but indulges in the dissipating sins of criticism, contention and rivalry is of no avail for God. Orthodoxy which does not abandon itself to the sovereign control of truth leaves behind a trail of ruin, heartaches, broken churches, stunted growths and defeat." "Keeping yourselves in the love of God is indeed one of the lost arts of the Christian Church." From the article just quoted and from other sources it seems that there is in Fundamentalism some heart-searching that raises important questions.

Relief Worker makes Supreme Sacrifice

A note of sadness comes to us with the news that one of our relief workers died en route to her field of service in India. Marion Nafziger, R.N., who sailed from San Francisco on April 28 was removed from the ship and transferred to a hospital in Sinapore for an appendectomy. We learn through the American Consul in Singapore that the operation was performed on July 6 and that pneumonia complications immediately followed resulting in her death on July 8. Complete details have not yet been received.

Marion Nafziger was the daughter of Enos R. and Elizabeth (Erb) Nafziger, Waterloo, Ontario, born August 10, 1921. A memorial service was held on July 14 at the Erb Street Mennonite Church, her home congregation, Waterloo, Ontario.

MATERIAL AID NOTES

Relief Food Shipments

Recent food shipments have enjoyed a favorable increase in volume. A shipment of canned meats, vegetables, and fruits weighing 71,576 pounds with an evaluation of $18,147.74 cleared port on May 15 on the American Importer en route to Germany. A 335 case shipment of whole milk powder, evaluated at $4,120.50 left port on June 7 destined for Germany aboard the American Banker.

A small shipment of assorted fruits cleared port for England aboard the Empire Yukon on June 7. Weight of this shipment was 3,672, evaluation $248.40.

On June 8 two shipments left New York harbor for France. These shipments consisted of home processed meats, vegetables, fruits, soups, and beans with a total weight of 173,088 pounds and an evaluation of $18,542.50.

Community Canning Projects

Several announcements have been made concerning the relief canning program for this year. However, for those who missed these announcements and because there has been some delay in the release of the new food folder we are again presenting a few of the general facts covering this aspect of the Material Aid Program.

Reports from the field and from recently returned workers indicate that the following home-processed goods fill a very real need. They are listed in the order of their importance.

1. Canned meats and fats
2. Canned and dried fruits
3. Dried and canned vegetables

The need for meats and fats remains a primary one. There has been and there will continue to be a shortage of fruits, and therefore people living in fruit growing sections are particularly encouraged to give support to this project. Dried fruits, because of their high sugar and calorie content, are very acceptable. Canned and dried peas and beans are most acceptable among the vegetables. Corn has high nutritional value but is not too well known in certain areas of the world. Dried corn is acceptable for China. Some vegetables such as pickles, sauerkraut and beets do not make a desirable relief product.

When possible people are encouraged to can in tin. Loss through spoilage and breakage are less when canning is done in tin. However, loss due to these two factors has remained comparatively small, and therefore when facilities are not available for canning in tin, we hope people will continue to can in glass.

The M.C.C. will pay for jars in the same manner as in previous years. However, an increasing number of people desire to supply these as part of their contribution and this procedure certainly is acceptable. New jars are preferred. However, used jars with new rubbers and lids may be used.

C. P. S.

J. David Hooley, dairy tester in Butler County, Pennsylvania, drowned on Saturday, June 29 while swimming with a group of four people. It is believed that David could not swim very well and while wading stepped into a hole. His body was taken to his home at Bellefontaine, Ohio, where the funeral was held on July 2. His death is the sixteenth in Mennonite C.P.S. Camps.

C.P.S. Directory

A C.P.S. Directory has been compiled by the National Service Board for Religious Objectors. It includes a list of all men assigned to C.P.S. before July, 1946, their address, year of birth, number of camps in which they served, date of induction and date of release, church affiliation, and occupation. The Directory also contains lists of all units, staff members, summary of systematic discharge schedules, a list of the men who died in C.P.S., of participating churches, and the number of C. O.'s from each denomination as well as handy reference material and statistics. The directory may be obtained by writing to N.S.B.R.O., Post Office Box 1636, Washington 13, D. C. The price is 50 cents per copy.

Meeting with S. S.

Selective Service called a joint meeting with the National Service Board, the Brethren Service Committee and the Mennonite Central Committee on July 9 and 10. The purpose of the meeting was to obtain a perspective for the future planning of C.P.S. and to determine what the church agencies wanted in terms of work projects beyond October 1, 1946. Scheduled for July 11 was a meeting of Selective Service with the respective technical agencies to determine their needs. Following these two meetings it is expected that a rather definite policy will be announced by Selective Service.

Selective Service tends toward a simplification of the work projects and will likely be in the direction of soil conservation and forestry service. It is expected that two M.C.C. base camps will remain open after October and that camps in the mid-west will be closed this fall. There will be no inductions during the summer but will begin on September 1.

MENNONITE BIBLICAL SEMINARY & BIBLE SCHOOL

One of the high points of graduation week at the Bethany Biblical Seminary is the Brethren Love Feast (communion service) which is observed the evening prior to the graduation exercises. The Brethren this year graciously invited the Mennonite students and faculty to participate in this service. It was a new experience for most of us, but we were deeply touched by the sanctity of the occasion and the suggestiveness that such a service holds for those who graduate from this institution.

The Brethren Love Feast is observed quite differently from the communion service as held in our Mennonite churches. Feet washing is practiced, and before the communion elements are partaken of, a simple meal is enjoyed by all the members who are seated around tables. One of the additional features of this meal was the bread dipped in a broth which represents the sop which Jesus used.

Though our Conference as a whole does not observe feet-washing, the writer felt a special significance at this occasion as the faculty members mingled with the student body. Washing one another's feet spoke of a true inner humility. Through years of study these graduates had sat at their teachers' feet and now as they were being sent forth to proclaim the good news of salvation they were imbued with the spirit of humble service and mutual brotherhood.

Other Mennonite Seminary students in previous years have witnessed varied denominational observances as they attended other schools. They, no doubt, have learned much from these church groups and experienced many rich blessings from such services. Those of us who are privileged to attend our Mennonite Biblical Seminary are looking forward to even greater heights of spiritual insight when we shall observe the first communion service in our own sanctuary and in the intimate company of our student fellowship.

"And he (Jesus said unto them, with desire have I desired to eat this passover with you before I suffer . . . ." Luke 22:15.

Jesus had spent approximately three years with his disciples. He had led them into many wonderful truths by his teachings. They had shared many experiences as they toured the countryside preaching and healing. Jesus knew that he was facing the cross; and so desired to have this intimate recourse with his faithful followers before he left them. He desired to break bread with them to institute the new bond of communion which was to be observed by all disciples until his return.

We as students have been sitting at Jesus' feet likewise seeking and learning the wonderful truths of his teachings. We have experienced an intimate fellowship with fellow-students and our instructors. As we face the parting of ways, especially those who enter foreign fields of service, we seek a bond which will unite us in a closer fellowship and preserve the many wonderful memories of these years. What can be more appropriate and meaningful than to gather at the Lord's table and experience anew the impartation of God's love and grace.

New heights of spiritual ecstasy will be the common experience of all as we partake of the cup and bread. Christ's institution of the Lord's Supper in memory of his sacrificial death and atonement for our sins will take on new meaning and scope. This will result in a closer unity in our common endeavor to serve Christ and mankind through our churches. This is the hope of all students attending the Mennonite Biblical Seminary and Bible School. — Arnold J. Regier.

Purchase Home for Seminary and Bible School

The news that a home has been purchased for the Mennonite Biblical Seminary and Bible School came in the following telegram on July 13:

CONTRACTS FOR SEMINARY AND BIBLE SCHOOL HOME CHICAGO ARE SIGNED. POSSESSION BY AUGUST 15TH. THE LORD IS LEADING. WE ARE HAPPY TO INFORM CONSECRATED YOUNG PEOPLE THAT THERE IS ROOM FOR THEM IN OUR SCHOOL. WE TRUST THE LORD AND HIS CHILDREN ALSO FOR THE FUNDS. A. WARKENTIN.

In Rome, an interdenominational evangelistic center has been established at the Waldensian Theological College by a council of pastors, which includes Waldensians, Methodists and Baptists. The center will sponsor conferences, discussions and publications. Protestant religious services are broadcast. It will be interesting to note that M.C.C. relief workers have been in contact with the Waldensians in Italy and have had very inspiring conferences with Protestant councils in Italy such as the one mentioned above.

Jottings

—Bethel College Church: Rev. and Mrs. Lester Hostetler, accompanied by Dr. and Mrs. P. S. Goertz, left July 14 for Green Lake, Wisconsin, to attend the Stanley Jones "Ashram" which is to be held there July 15-25. Mr. and Mrs. Jake Neufeld from Shafter stopped here on their way home from the conference, and Mr. Neufeld showed some wonderful pictures of California and other places. Rev. Edmund Miller was in our church Sunday and gave us a very good message. People from different places have been visiting our church this summer. Cherry picking was very good this year, but the growers wouldn't let all the cherries be picked. It is a shame to see them go to waste.—Mrs. Balzer, Corr.

The young people who attended the Oskaloosa Training School and the All-Mennonite Retreat reported blessings of spiritual value. Glen Graber is expecting to enter relief service under the M.C.C. His field of service will probably be China. Dale Nebel, who went to China, is at present in the Philippines where he is directing the M.C.C. unit. The young people are preparing for the Iowa Retreat to be held at Donnellson August 3-4. Dr. Warkentin from Chicago is to be guest speaker. Harrison, widely-known Bible expositor and author, and Rev. Tygert from the Prairie Bible Institute, Three Hills, Alberta, as our main speakers. Rev. and Mrs. J. P. More bikes are needed.—Mrs. Willard Reusser, Corr.

—Bethany Church, Quakertown, Pa., May 30, Arthur Keiser, the pastor's assistant for the summer preached for us. Rev. and Mrs. Neuenschwander were away for a week attending the Canadian Conference. July 7 the combined C. E. meeting of the Swamp Charge was held at Bethany. Rev. John W. Boehr, at present serving the First Church in Philadelphia, gave us an impressive and beautiful service in song.—Mrs. Ed. K. Stoneback, Corr.

—Jacob J. Fast, a refugee in Germany, is trying to locate his uncle, John Reimer, who in 1922 moved from the Caucasus to the village of Kleefeldt in the Ukraine. From here he migrated to Mexico in 1925 and two years later to the U.S.A. He would like to establish contact with his uncle. Anyone having information on the above should contact William T. Snyder, M.C.C., Akron, Pa.

—Zion Church, Elbing, Kansas: Ever since the official closing of the Mennonite Bible Academy at North Newton there has been a desire on the part of many friends of that school that some other way might be found whereby young people could receive secondary education in a Christian school. This is to be met by the newly organized Christian Layman's Association,

Rest Awhile

Rest gives us new and greater power to function. God seems to insist upon the principle of application and relaxation just as he does upon day and night. Inability to relax well makes for a lot of wear and tear and inefficiency. Dr. David Fink goes so far as to suggest that thorough relaxation can make "unmotivated anxieties disappear" and "unreasonable jealousies evaporate." He further suggests that progressive relaxation is "a form of emotional re-education that stops the body from saying the wrong thing to the mind." He points out that emotional attitudes shape our muscles into certain patterns of tension. These patterns of tension tend to remain unless dissolved by relaxation. Thus our body is affected by the mind, but it also affects the mind. For example a very fatigued body results in loss of courage and patience. We cannot be at our best spiritually when we are not at our best physically. Rest and relaxation are necessities for him who would have peace of mind. The above picture suggests rest and relaxation from activities that strain. It can suggest more, namely, that in the ordinary run of life we can through the grace of God come to a depth of relaxation that enables us to conserve our energies and to feel at peace even while the problems of life bombard us. To disciples who didn't even have time to eat Jesus said, ". . . . rest a while."

"Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid which is Christ Jesus"

From the editor's point - of - view:

A READINESS TO CRITICIZE is quite often an indication of an inferiority feeling. When one feels inferior one tends to compensate for it. Criticizing or drawing attention to the mote in someone else's eye is one form of compensation that is frequently engaged in when the one who criticizes feels ashamed or guilty of something in his life. Eager to hide his own sinfulness he seeks to center attention on the faults of others or at least make them seem as sinful as himself. Such an individual sees himself comparing more favorably with others when he can "take them down a notch or two or several." The critic feels restless and disturbed enough within himself to break out in criticism, but seldom, if ever, does he clearly recognize what is behind his disturbed emotions that claw out and tear at the faults of others. Feeling ashamed or guilty of certain things in his own life he represses them into the unconscious, for they are too painful to consider consciously, to live with. However, though buried in the unconscious, these factors which have aroused feelings of shame and guilt, do not lie idle. They ever agitate the feelings that pick at the flaws in others. Thus the critic may feel that he is truly defending and promoting justice, righteousness, etc., while he is really defending and trying to soothe his own hurt feelings. The true way out of his inferiority feeling does not readily dawn upon him, for he does not realize why he behaves as he does. But there is a way out for the person who feels distressed by an inferiority feeling and readily criticizes as a result of it. The way out for him is to pluck the beam out of his own eye. First, he will not recognize that there is one, but if he finds himself very critical he can quite certainly assume the presence of such a beam. To find that beam he must begin to confess, perhaps openly to some counsellor, the things in his own life of which he does feel guilty and ashamed. As he does so, he will remove more and more of the defending cover that lies over the beam until finally so much has been uncovered that the beam will lie bare. Like removing a deep splinter, this whole process will be painful, but it will also be curative. Along with this negative operation must go positive growth in becoming more loving to others, that is, in promoting their welfare. There is hardly anything which gives one such a feeling of self-respect as knowing that one is really coming into fellowship with other human beings by promoting their welfare, that is, by cherishing their rightful needs and desires. The critic is not helped by counter-argument and refutation of his criticism. This only aggravates his feeling of inferiority and causes him to be only more disturbed and anxious to elevate himself in some way. The critic needs from others firmness and kindness and above all understanding. Here we might also mention that what is sometimes regarded as the positive function of criticism can be much more accurately described as helpfulness grounded in understanding and love. When the one to be helped can feel deep in his heart that the one who would help him genuinely understands and appreciates him, then such helpfulness is generally very welcome. Criticism is usually not of this nature. Thus criticism that tears down is very often a symptom of a painful inferiority complex, the possessor of which can be healed by confession, repentance, and growth in grace.

EVANGELISM is a sharing of the good news of Jesus Christ. Perhaps people are more eager for evangelistic messages than is sometimes thought. That is, a great many people have problems to which they would like solutions. The message that gives them these solutions is to them good news. It makes for a vital change in their lives. It gives them that which they have been looking for. Especially eager for such solutions are those people who have been and are severely pained by their life problems. Too often, however, such people are disappointed by the words of those who claim to have a message and yet leave untouched those very issues that tear at the hearts of men and women hungry for wholeness. Consequently, much of what is termed evangelism has fallen into disrepute, and many have

Board of Publication Meets

Report by J. M. Suderman, Secretary

The Board of Publication of the General Conference met for its annual session on July 15 and 16 at Moun-ain Lake, Minnesota. All members of the Board were resent. A brief report on the actions taken and the esolutions passed at this meeting follows:

The financial reports by the Mennonite Book Con-ern of Berne, Indiana, and the Mennonite Publication Office at Newton, Kansas, showed that the finances f both of these institutions are in a satisfactory con-ition. It was agreed, however, that henceforth the ooks of both institutions be audited annually by ecognized competent accountants.

In view of the constantly rising cost of labor and materials, the question was raised whether an advance n the price of the Bundesbote and the Mennonite might not be necessary in order to avoid too large a eficit in connection with the publication of these eriodicals. The Mennonite thus far has carried itself nancially, due to the rapid increase in subscriptions uring the past few years. But the Bundesbote has not ad this advantage, and, as a result, the annual deficit or this periodical has increased considerably in re-ent years. In the face of these facts the Board voted 1) to make no change in the price of these periodicals or the present; (2) to continue to publish the Men-onite as heretofore; (3) to change the publication of he Bundesbote from a weekly to a semi-monthly basis eginning with January, 1947. This last step was taken luctantly, but it was deemed best to do this rather han risk the necessity of having to discontinue the pa-er entirely.

For some time the supply of the English Minister's anual has been exhausted, and a reprint of this book urgently needed. However, when this was brought the attention of the various conference boards at eir joint meeting in February of this year, they de-ded that a revision of the Handbook should be made fore a reprint is undertaken. This revision was placed the hands of the Executive Committee of the General onference. In regard to this the Publication Board ted to urge the completion of this revision at the rliest time possible because a number of ministers are waiting for the Handbook, and some of the young ministers are compelled to use handbooks published by other denominations.

Rev. Rempel, the Canadian representative on the Board, emphasized the need of having a conference bookstore in Canada. In response to this appeal the Board voted to appoint a committee which is to investigate the advisability of such a move and to make a report to the Board of its findings. Further action in this matter will depend on the nature of this report. Rev. Rempel was asked to serve as chairman of this committee.

The Board also decided to enlarge the book department now being operated in connection with the Mennonite Publication Office at Newton. The plan is to move the present stock of books and other articles to a new location and to enlarge this stock into a complete conference bookstore. Since this will require additional help, it was decided that J. M. Suderman, the present manager of the Mennonite Publication Office, be placed in charge of the Newton bookstore and that B. Bargen, formerly in charge of the commercial department at Bethel College, be made manager of the Mennonite Publication Office.

Another matter that was discussed at the meeting of the Board was the proposed "Mennonite Encyclopedia." Preliminary planning with reference to the publishing of such an encyclopedia had already been done by representatives of the Publication Boards of the various branches of the Mennonite denomination. After a thorough discussion of this project, the Board voted its approval of the same, and also that our Board be one of the participating groups in the promotion of the project.

A number of other matters were discussed and action taken on some of them, but announcement of these will be made through our periodicals at a later date. Many problems are confronting our Board at this time, and we feel the need of divine guidance as never before. We therefore urge the members of the conference churches to remember the work of the Publication Board in their supplications before the Throne of Grace.

J.S. View of Canadian Mennonite Conference

by A. J. Neuenschwander

June 29-July 3, 1946, marked a high-tide in the nadian Mennonite Conference as it convened in the icious high school auditorium at Beamsville, Ontario. As one heard the delegates' names and their voting strength read by the secretary and the response, from the fair shores of Georgian Strait, which empties into the Pacific Ocean in the West, to the thundering roar of Niagara Falls in the East, and all the thousands of miles in between, one had a feeling of sitting in on a General Conference. Not only the larger and older congregations but the younger and smaller churches, like the ones in the Carrot River regions in the far north of Saskatchewan, were represented by delegates.

Rev. J. J. Thiessen, 443-3rd Avenue N. Saskatoon, Saskatchewan, served as President and directed the conference in a masterful manner. If anyone raised a question, a satisfactory answer had to be given, and in this way the whole Conference moved forward solidly. When the motions, questions and remarks had a tendency to become entangling, either the President, the Vice President, Jacob Gerbrant, or perhaps the Secretary, John G. Rempel, would call for the singing of a spiritual hymn and by the time this was completed the conference could go on again.

IT WAS LIKE A GREAT REUNION

Since this was the first time the Canadian Conference convened in Ontario, many of the Russian refugees that came to Canada 1923-30 saw each other again after many years. The intermission periods were used by many to refresh old friendships that had been broken off abruptly in Russia. While at times, certain hard experiences were recalled, in the main there were expressions of gratitude to God and appreciation to the government of Canda for the kindly consideration given them since they landed there.

YOUTH PARTICIPATION AT CONFERENCE

That the Canadian Conference is mindful of the place and importance of youth was evident by the prominent part they had at the Conference. Splendid choirs from Waterloo, Leamington, Vineland, and Niagara-on-the-Lake, Ontario, rendered spirited choir numbers at the Conference and on Monday evening the whole program was given over to the youth organization. On Tuesday evening the young women were prominent, as this evening was given over to the Women's Missionary Societies.

MISSIONS AND RELIEF MAIN INTERESTS

While the Canadian Conference is very much school conscious and is making heroic efforts that all young people might have an opportunity to get training in one of their academies or Bible schools, the project that received primary consideration was relief work in Europe. This is easily understood, since many suffered privations, hardships and hunger only a decade ago. Now their hearts are overjoyed when they are able to send clothing and goods to friends and relatives and are able to make plans to help them come to Canada!

COLONIZATION

The Colonization Board has labored in a most self-sacrificing manner to help the many thousands that came to Canada during the twenties. The huge traveling debt, of approximately two million dollars, was reported to be about completely paid off to the Canadian Pacific Rail Road, as soon as all the provinces sent in their quotas. The Board was continued, and the hope is that they may, under the grace of God, be helpful to other Mennonites in Europe who want to come to Canada.

Quite a number from the United States attended the Conference. Rev. J. N. Smucker, president of the General Conference and family, Missionary H. J. Brown, Professor W. H. Hohmann, Dean P. S. Goertz, Mrs. A. M. Lohrentz, Miss Aganetha Fast, Mr. Ernst Harder, Rev. and Mrs. John J. Plenert, Rev. and Mrs. John J. Plenert, Rev. and Mrs. A. J. Neuenschwander and Dr. A. Warkentin.

Because many of the problems of the Canadian Home Mission Committee and the General Conference Board of Home Missions are closely related, the Brethren Plenert and Neuenschwander met several times with the Committee. The two Board members also met with all the Canadian workers that labor under the Board. Mrs. Neuenschwander represented the Women's Missionary Association, Literature Committee and had a quantity of literature for sale, Mrs. Plenert assisting her. The Canadian people showed a good interest and a large amount of literature was bought and ordered.

Before the Plenerts and Neuenschwanders returned home, they visited the United Mennonite Church in Toronto, a Home Mission field, and conducted a service in the newly renovated church building and visited a home mission worker and his daughter, who are patients in the Brant Sanatorium, Brantford.

Thinking of the Canadian Conference we were moved to say with the Psalmist: "Thy righteousness also, O God is very high, who hast done great things: O God, who is like unto thee!" Ps. 71:19

Why Use Graded Sunday School Lesson Material?

by Mrs. L. W. Jantzen

In the public school, the curriculum is carefully graded and prepared. Experts are hired to study the various ages of the student and his ability to grasp knowledge. Then material suitable for that age is prepared. The boy in the sixth grade would soon lose all interest in his arithmetic if his problems were as simple s those of the third grade. The Sunday School material sed by the majority of Sunday Schools is not preared to interest the growing boy and girl of junior, ntermediate, and early adolescent age. Teachers of hese ages often give up in despair because they canot hold the interest of their class. Could it be that ve are trying to pound into their heads that which they ad as beginners and primaries? We treat the adolesent boy as though he were a mere child. They want nd need something to stimulate their thinking.

The Bible contains suitable educational material or the infant and for the philosopher, and for all who ome in between these extremes, but the material must e suited to the stages of mental and spiritual developent of the individuals. THE UNIFORM LESSONS, VHICH ARE SO WIDELY USED, ARE SELECTED RIMARILY FOR ADULTS AND ARE NOT COMREHENSIBLE TO LITTLE CHILDREN. Moreover, ecause of constant repetition they are not interesting our boys and girls sufficiently to keep them in the Sunday School.

All Christian educators are agreed that the graded principle must be adopted in the Sunday School if our children are to secure any comprehensive and complete knowledge of the Bible. There are truths for children, more advance instruction for early adolescence, more mature instruction for later adolescence, and some of the "deep Things of God" for mature youth and adults. For that reason each Sunday School should today provide a curriculum which covers the Bible just as thoroughly and systematically as a course of mathematics in our public schools.

We as Mennonites have always prided ourselves that we hold our young people in the Sunday School and Church. But today we must confess the Mennonite church is losing some of its young people. Let us awaken and provide them with interesting as well as instructive Sunday School material.

The Congo Inland Mission

by R. L. Hartzler

Initial steps looking toward the founding of the ongo Inland Mission were taken by the Central and efenseless Mennonite Conferences at their annual essions in 1910, by which both expressed themselves s favorable to the initiation of a joint missionary nterprise in the Congo. After some preliminary meetngs the United Mennonite Board of Missions was oranized on March 22, 1911, consisting of four repreentatives from each of the conferences named. Later, anuary, 1912, this Board incorporated under the name, ongo Inland Mission. At present the Board conists of fourteen members, six from each of the original ounding conferences, and one each from the General nd Evangelical Mennonite conferences who are now ctively cooperating in the work of the mission.

The first missionaries to be sent out under the new rganization Rev. and Mrs. L. B. Haigh, who sailed rom New York for Congo via Europe, on April 19, 911. After a long and circuitous journey, taking time o gather as much information as possible meanwhile, hey arrived at Leopoldville, capital of Congo, on July 7, 1911. From thence they traveled up the Congo and asai Rivers to the Presbyterian mission at Luebo, inending from there to explore the unoccupied territory o the west of Luebo. After an arduous journey of 450 iles through the primitive jungle, Rev. Haigh proosed to the board the founding of two stations, one at alamba in the southeastern part of the territory and ne at Djoka Punda, later called Charlesville, to the estward of Luebo.

The board approved of Rev. Haigh's proposal and authorized that he and Rev. A. J. Stevenson, who was then on the way to the field, proceed to open work at the two points named. Thus began the work of literally and figuratively hewing out a sphere for the work of the C.I.M. in that untouched field. The first missionaries to Charlesville had to pitch their tent in a native village until a site could be cleared in the jungle for their tents and later the first crude buildings. These beginnings were hard and most taxing with material fever a constant threat. As a result Rev. Stevenson's term of service was cut short by his untimely death in February 1913, only about nine months after arriving on the field. But the Lord has undertaken for our workers and he was the only one to be thus taken and buried on the field during the thirty-five years of the mission.

New workers arrived meanwhile and with wondrous devotion the missionaries persevered, and the work went forward; so that just before Rev. and Mrs. Haigh left for furlough in May, 1915, he had the joy of baptizing the first two converts in the Congo Inland Mission. As the work took on wider proportions at the two original stations, the matter of establishing additional ones was considered. With the approval of the home board two new stations were opened, Nyanga in December, 1920, and Mukedi in October, 1923. From these centers the gospel has radiated outward with marvelous results in this land of darkness and fear.

The work of the mission is largely based on an educational-evangelistic program. Boys and girls are taught in the mission schools and given Biblical and other training to become teachers and evangelists among their own people. They are then stationed in outlying villages where they conduct schools and religious services for the natives. From this valuable supplement to the work of the main stations with the added services of the medical and general educational departments, has come a large ingathering for the Lord; so that the baptized membership of the church in Congo is now more than one and one-half times the combined memberships of the two conferences which initiated the work.

Miscellaneous statistics: No. missionaries on the field, 34. (Several will be coming on overdue furloughs soon); No. native helpers, pastors, deacons, 19; Membership increase in 1945, 523; Total baptized membership (Dec. '45), 7,313; Sunday morning attendance at the four stations, 2,650; Average school attendance, stations and outstations, 12,554; No. native medical helpers, 21; No. cases treated in 1945, 12,500; No. days hospitalization, 8,588.

Ruth and Harold Ratzlaff Report from Jagdeeshpur

We have been in Jagdeeshpur now for about six months. The first three months or so the Duerksens and the Desters, whose work we have taken over, were still here with us. This gave us a good introduction to our field of labor. The evangelistic field here covers many square miles in every direction. To get acquainted with that field is not easy. To be able to find one's way through fields, over rice dams, through rivers, and over many little traveled roads to 110 villages where there are Christians is not a matter learned in a day. To be able to work with one's predecessor for several months also gives one an opportunity to learn more in detail of the methods of work carried on, the problems connected with the work, the points of strength and points of weakness. It also helps one get better acquainted with our Indian co-workers. So both of us were thankful that we could work with the Duerksens and the Desters for a while.

The work here in the Jagdeeshpur field is very much more extensive than in the Champa field. There one finds thirty or forty village Christians; here about 1,700 at present. There one has about ten Indian evangelists and Bible women to work with and supervise; here there are thirty-two regularly employed workers. In the Champa area there are no village schools, here there are about ten or twelve which must be supervised. Hence, one feels the heavier responsibility, but we thank God for strength to carry on, and indeed it is a great joy to work among so many Christians.

During the first two months of this year extensive touring work was done in about fifty-five villages. During this time approximately thirty additional evangelistic people were asked to help with the touring work, so that in all there were over sixty people preaching, teaching, and singing the Gospel of Jesus Christ in these various villages. Many of these people are lay workers, evangelists' wives, deacons, and others who are willing and capable of helping for a few months out of the year. Indeed the harvest was plentiful this year, and with hearts full of gratitude we humbly thank God for the many, many who took baptism. During the last year from April 1, 1945, to March 31, 1946, there were 448 baptisms in this area. Of this number, 280 occurred during the first three months of this year. The field was white unto harvest, and soon after the touring season started, the flood of baptism started—twenty-six in this village twelve in another, thirty here and fifteen there. It was indeed an inspiring experience, but at the same time a very humbling one. These people are baptized when they have had an experience of God and when they believe that salvation comes through the acceptance of Jesus Christ as their Savior, but they have little knowledge of the Bible and the Christian way of life, and so our work does not end when they take baptism. It is just beginning. Then they must be taught. It has been one of our great concerns and a matter of much prayer to find evangelists who can remain in these villages, live with the people, and teach them. It has meant that for sometime regular evangelists have had to leave their regular posts of duty and teach the new Christians. Some new helpers and teachers have been employed. Right now three men from Champa have come to help us out for six weeks or so. "The Laborers are few; Pray you therefore to the Lord of the harvest that He will send Labourers into his field." This is our prayer and we trust that our friends in America will join us before the Throne of Grace. I might add here that a year ago there were Christians in ninety-eight villages of this area; today there are Christians in 110 villages.

Thus faced with the necessity of providing spiritual growth for these new Christians there has been a great increase in the money expanded for evangelistic work. This increased expenditure is not due only to the increased number of workers but also to the necessity of providing houses in which they may live and buildings in which services may be held. The matter of moving the workers to their appointed places is also a great item of expense. Thus we have been compelled to lay out money far in excess of the budget. At present this debt amounts to about one thousand dollars.

The hospital here has been considerably crippled by the going home furlough of Dr. Dester. Although we have two good capable Indian doctors here, yet the people of this area have not yet learned to place their trust in doctors of their own nationality. They place more faith in a white face. For a time after Dr. Dester's leaving the work continued strong, but for the last month or so, the work has been very slack. This, however, is due to some extent to the time of the year, for hospital work in India is very seasonal. We trust that after some time people will again feel that our Indian doctors are efficient—as we feel they are—and come to obtain the services available here. Miss Alida Schrag and I are trying to do our best to keep the standards of service high. Miss Schrag tends to the nursing end of the work while I take care of the administrative end of it. I feel that with Miss Schrag here this hospital is being taken care of much better in the absence of a missionary doctor than the one in Champa was where I was alone to tend to all phases of the work.

During March and April there was quite a cholera scare here in the district. During that time we sent our compounders quite frequently into the villages to give cholera vaccinations. I do not have the records here, but I estimate that about 1,500 injections were given. We feel this is one way of serving the surrounding community.

This is the hot season and just at present we are alone on the station. The Thiessens and Miss Schrag are up in the hills. Every day we wait for word from Miss Nickel, but have heard nothing from her since she was in Manila.. We are almost getting worried about her. The temperature runs up to 110 degrees daily. At 7 P.M. the thermometer often stands at one hundred degrees. Nights are still bearable if we sleep out under the stars. However, we thank God for good health even though we do not have too much pep these days and do not try to exert ourselves too much.

By Cornelius Krahn

Dutch Mennonite Youth Activities in a Motion Picture. Just before the outbreak of the last war the Doopsgezinde Jongeren Bond (Dutch Mennonite Youth Organization) commemorated the tenth aniversary of its founding. During this occasion the ocal and national organizations and activities of the Dutch Mennonite Youth movement were filmed. The ilm illustrates how the young Mennonite people in Holland receive religious and catechetical instruction, how they are being baptized, and meet in local outh organizations. Possibly the climax of the film is the beautifully portrayed meeting at the various camping grounds. The Mennonites of Holland are fortunate in having one camping ground located on a spacious heather, one surrounded by water for swimming and boating, one in the sand dunes near the shore, and another one which resembles an exclusive summer resort. The film shows all the activities of the young people including that of the publication of their own paper. In order to give the American Mennonite young people an opportunity to acquaint themselves with the Mennonite young people in Holland this film has been procured for duplication. Churches or other organizations interested in showing it should contact the Bethel College Slide Service, North Newton, Kansas.

Mennonites Help Waldenses in Italy. For generations it has been believed that the Waldenses were forerunners of the Mennonites. Even though this may be more fancy than truth, there are still some Waldenses, who originated long before the Mennonites, in thoroughly Catholic Italy. Ever since their beginning their lot has been difficult. Now after World War II the Mennonite Central Committee is helping the Waldenses in their rehabilitation and reconstruction project.

A Letter from Middle Asia. "Dear Brother. . . . and Sister . . . . I am in Middle Asia. Thank God, I now have the barest necessities of life, but where is my dear Susie (wife)? We have been separated since August, 1941, and have had no contact. If there were not a God I would despair. I just heard from Greta, who has returned from Germany, that my family has remained in the English Zone. . . I long for a sign from my dear Susie. Please help me find my loved ones. your brother . . . . . ("Menn. Rundchau")

This is the fate of one among thousands of our Mennonites from Russia. Husband in Siberia, wife in Germany waiting to come to America, and children scattered all over Europe.

We in America cannot escape the consequences of today's happenings in Europe. This is the final sentence of a report on conditions in Central Europe, June, 1946, published by the American Friends Service Committee. From the Report of Health Conditions we quote only the following paragraph: "Instead of disease epidemics, 'medical suicides' are epidemic in the large cities such as Berlin. The 'will not to live' has caused the death rate of old people in Berlin to increase from 91 per month in 1938 to 2,700 per month in March, 1946. Deaths due to heart disease averaged 582 per month in 1938 and in March, 1946, 2600 per month."

Outstanding Canadian Mennonite Passes Away. D. P. Enns, Secretary-Treasurer of the Mennonite Board of Colonization, Rosthern, Sasketawan passed away June 4. For nearly twenty-two years he was active in liquidating the debt of the Canadian Mennonites to the C.P.R. that had been incurred through their immigration after World War I. Incidentally his busy life came to a close when the debt was just about liquidated. For many years the chairman of the board under which he worked was David Toews was who recently succeeded by J. J. Tiessen.

Pastoral Prayer in the Worship Service

by Willard Claassen

It is the moment of prayer that the minister most clearly reveals himself. Then his skill and scholarship take second place. Prayer is truly worship.

SOME REMARKS ABOUT THE NATURE AND PURPOSE OF PRAYER. What we think about prayer will influence our use of it in the pulpit. (1) a definition of prayer—"Prayer is communion with God, in which we adore him, confessing our sins, thank him for mercies received, and under the Holy Spirit's influence ask for things agreeable to His will and all in the name of Christ", — Marshall P. Talling. (2) Public prayer is a term applied to all devotion in which one voice leads the worship of others. (3) The purpose of prayer is not primarily instruction or persuasion, but communion with God. (4) Fellowship is not merely a goal in prayer but its very condition. (5) Nothing will atone for lack of sincerity in prayer. (6) The pastoral prayer takes up the more personal needs of the congregation—confession of sin, prayer for forgiveness, intercession for human needs, for others, for the state, the church, the world-wide kingdom of God.

PREPARATION FOR PUBLIC PRAYER. The minister should no more think of venturing into the pulpit with an impromptu prayer than an impromptu sermon. (1) The leader must prepare himself. Know what prayer is. Communicate the reality of God. Demonstrate it in a godly life. (2) He must have insight into people's needs; this is largely a pastoral task. (3) Prayers should be given in a beautiful literary form. Prayer is akin to poetry. Accent the verbs. Keep the sentence structure simple. Use direct address. Biblical language is appropriate in prayer. (4) Where to go for inspiration and ideas for prayer: a. The Bible-Psalms, Prophets, N. T. prayers, b. Liturgical material. c. Manuals and collections of public prayers. d. Dramas, novels, biographies. (5) The parts of a prayer: a. Adoration. b. Thanksgiving. c. Confession. d. Intercession. e. Dedication.

THE VALUE OF SILENCE IN PRAYER Clement of Alexandria said we have become like old shoes, all worn out but the tongue. Even our tongues need to be silenced, bodies need to be rested and relaxed. In silence one comes into the presence of the Silent One. Silence gives opportunity for confession that puts us under the gaze of God. A few moments of silent prayer enhance the value of audible prayer. Dangers to silent prayer are: (1) inevitable distractions, conflicting desires, demands, problems. (2) One may simply go on pleading his own justification. (3) Without discipline one may do nothing with the moments of silent prayer. The mind may simply wander. Directed prayer may be a corrective.

SOME COMMON FAULTS IN PUBLIC PRAYER. The use of identical expressions, sameness of thought—frequent repetition of a few Scripture passages—unmanly prayer, giving people the impression that prayer is a soft, easy escape—immodesty in prayer; it is doubtful whether one should pray for himself in the pulpit—high-sounding phrases that outstrip feeling—exhortation in prayer—sermonizing in prayer—telling the Lord and the congregation what they already know—not the place for the praise or the abuse of men—needless repetition—a too familiar spirit in approaching God in prayer; reverence, awe and humility are in place—irreverence may be shown by demeanor in the pulpit—wandering, rambling, repetition—the over-use of terms of endearment—misquotation of Scripture. Stop when you are done!

SOME COMMENDABLE QUALITIES OF PUBLIC PRAYER: (1) Prayer ought to have a pervasive quality about it that can only be distilled in the devotional life and communion with God. This is easier felt than described. (2) Prayer ought to be appropriate to the occasion, Christmas, Easter, seasons, etc. (3) It should be universal in its spirit—the very opposite of sectarianism.

Youth Preparing for Life

by Arthur Isaak

(The valedictory address which follows was given by Arthur Isaak at Aberdeen, Idaho. Arthur is a member of the Mennonite church in Aberdeen. Ed.)

VALEDICTORY

We are climbing the mountain of life. At the top of this mountain is our goal. This goal is not in arm's reach or something on the same level we are. In climbing we must let go of the plains below and reach for higher plains, as expressed in the poem—

"You have to let go of the rung below
When you reach for the rung above;
There is no other way to climb, you know;
Each upward step brings more of the glow
And warmth of the sun of love.
But you have to let go of the rung below
When you reach for the rung above."

Any mountain climber must have preparation. He must have something with which to start. This preparation has been given to us in our homes. There we receive the fundamentals which determine our characters.

A young tree, planted in such a way that the winds can blow on it will grow crooked. It must have a support to keep it from being bent by the wind. It must be given support so it will grow erect, strong, and tall and be of service to the one who planted it. The same comparison can be drawn to a growing life. If it is just left to grow and given no training or instruction it will grow to be a life that is of no service to man. A young life that is given good training will grow to be a strong, noble life ready to serve mankind and to make this a better world in which to live.

Our Home Life

Some of the ground work we receive from our homes should be these: We learn obedience, and respect; we learn to work, to have faith and to worship. All these are essentials for climbing the mountain of life.

Madam Schumann Heink defines the home as—

A roof to keep out rain. Four walls to keep out wind. Floors to keep out cold. Yes, but a home is more than that. It is the laugh of a baby, the song of a mother, the strength of a father. Warmth of loving hearts, light from happy eyes, kindness, loyalty, comradeship. Home is the first school and the first church for young ones; where they learn to do what is right, what is good and what is kind; where they go for comfort when they are hurt or sick; where joy is shared and sorrow eased; where children are wanted; where the simplest food is good enough for kings because it is earned; where money is not so important as loving kindness; where even the teakettle sings from happiness. That is home—God Bless it.

Most of us have known that kind of home. With such a foundation our character should now be fairly well established.

We leave our homes to seek new experiences in school. Here we receive further preparation. "Energy of a child is like high, pressing water in a dam. If that water cannot be channelled into turning massive turbines for the production of electricity, then it must be permitted to spill unused over the dam. When the energy of a child is not guided into constructive and productive channels, it has to spill over the dam in an uncontrolled and sometimes damaging way." To guide this energy is a tremendous problem for any teacher.

Our School Experience

Through our school we receive the life value of having our energy directed into useful channels. We have learned from our teachers and by working together with our classmates how to co-operate. As mountain climbers we must co-operate and help one another to reach the top. As we climb we are able to help one another to secure the best things of life.

Each climber must have courage. Courage is that quality of mind which enables one to encounter difficulties and dangers with firmness or without fear. A person who has little courage generally accomplishes very little. In our climb to reach the goal one cannot afford to give up or lack courage. Goethe said, "If we lose our wealth, we lose something; if we lose our reputation, we lose much; if we lose our courage, we lose everything."

Education is often referred to as a priceless possession because it cannot be taken from the one who has acquired it by force or foreclosure. The world, in which learning is a highly prized commodity, does not appraise a person by what he knows. It is not a question of what he has acquired or how he has been trained, but of what he can do and what he is. Yet education can be put to evil uses unless backed by a sterling character. Education may make a tyrant more powerful or a criminal more cunning. It is therefore, necessary to develop character—a combination of loyalty, integrity, morality and righteousness—as an essential of beneficial education.

What the Church Means to Us

Through our church we also climb. It is always beside us and ready to aid us. Life always gives us an opportunity to put into practice those things we have learned at home and at school and in the church. We need the church and the church needs each of us.

Many great men have traced their success to something they have received through the church.

When James Garfield was inaugurated as President of the United States, he placed the following tribute to the Bible and his godly parents. When he had taken the oath of president he turned to his mother, kissed her wrinkled brow, and then took the New Testament from his vest pocket and said to the audience, "I give my mother and this book the credit for having brought me to this especially great success of my life that I am this day inaugurated as the President of the United States."

Christ, Our Guide

As we continue our climb there is yet another person who must always be with us. He is Christ Jesus, my savior. He has promised to be with us, our guide through life if we will accept Him and place our lives in His hands. He is indeed our friend. He will guide us in such a way that all will work out well if we but follow Him. To Him we owe our life and obedience for He has certainly given us His all.

On our mountain top we will realize a better America for we have learned through our homes and schools what a democracy is and what is needed for a better one; a better society because we have learned how to co-operate and understand and live with others; and better individuals have we but learned to take Christ Jesus as our standard and guide.

This occasion, long eagerly anticipated gives us an unexpected sadness, for our class must now separate. The bonds of friendship must be broken as each goes his way to climb life's mountain path.

To you, the board of education, we do extend our heartfelt thanks for providing us with this fine school which has enabled us to receive an education.

We cannot express in words our appreciation to you, our patient teachers for guiding us this far in the climb to our goal.

Nor can we express our gratitude to you our parents for having sacrificed much to give us an opportunity to receive an education.

May our lives be such that they will reflect the credit on our home, school, church and country, and upon God who is our constant guide throughout life.

Hold Reunion of Ex-C.P.S. Men

Becoming rather common these days are reunions being held at different central locations by ex-C.P.S. men. These reunions are largely planned as social gatherings at present. Old acquaintances who bunked together in dorms, worked together on projects, faced similar problems together in hospitals, on fire lines in Western forests, as guinea pigs, experimenters hookworm specialists, smoke jumpers, are now curious to know what Joe who used to bunk across the aisle and would snore so loudly, or Bill with whom you could sit down and have a real session about economics or politics or religion—what all the 'old gang' is doing.

In late April, twenty-nine 'ex-conchies' and wives gathered together in a Kansas pasture, ate a picnic lunch, visited a lot, and decided to have a larger reunion.

On a hot June 9 the second reunion was held in the Student Union Room of Memorial Hall at Bethel College. Roland Bartel, ex-Colorado Springs, Crestview and Mulberry Flordia, Camino, California, was chairman. About fifty were expected to gather. Instead there were three hundred people present. About 60 per cent were ex-CPS men. The rest were wives and friends.

A business meeting was held and future plans were discussed. There was considerable interest in orgaininzing and in taking over a project, but no one was very clear in his own mind what it should be. An informal vote showed unanimous support for more reunions with which inspirational programs were to be combined. On the question of organizing the group voted to take no action but consider it again at the next meeting. On the question of electing a committee to study the possibility of organizing, the vote was 25 per cent in favor with the rest undecided.

The committee elected to arrange for the next reunion and program are the following: John Reimer, Richard Blosser, both of Newton, Kansas, and Milo Goering, Rufus Baehr, and Roland Bartel of North Newton, Kansas. The group sent its greetings and encouragement to relief workers in the field and to those remaining in CPS.

A pot-luck supper was prepared at which the entire group joined together. Someone observed there was not a single peanut butter sandwich—a feature which convinced them that this was not camp.

Everyone was asked to register. The registration indicated that the veterans were from Colorado, Nebraska, Oklahoma, and practically all Mennonite communities in Kansas.

The next reunion is to be held August 25 at Hesston College. A program is being prepared and, again, a pot-luck supper is being planned.

Middle District Young People Meet

At the Middle District Conference held at Nappanee, Indiana, June 9-11, the Young People met, electing officers, chose a project for the coming year, made resolutions.

Officers elected were the following:

President: Carl Lehman — Bluffton
Vice President: Edward Burkhalter — Berne
Secretary and Treasurer: Doris Garmatter — Ebenezer
Committee Member: Evelyn Liechty — Berne
Field Secretary: Weldon Lehman — Berne

Adopt Resolutions

The following resolutions were adopted by the delegates:

Resolutions

1. Each C. E. Society send at least one delegate to represent their group at the M.D.C. Young People's Session, and that those societies who have not helped support the 1945-46 Budget (C.P.S. $150; Relief, $150; Expenses of "Vine Press," $80; Traveling expenses, $75; making a total of $455.00), promptly make special effort to do so, so that our goal might be realized. The time to get in delingquent quotas is to be extended to July 1.

2. We, the M.D.C.Y.P., emphasize a progressive educational program including discussions of social problems in the light of the Christian Gospel,—both domestic and international.

3. Mennonite young people take advantage of and cooperate with our denominational schools, hospitals, and other institutions.

4. We be on the alert for techniques and methods of promoting good will, understanding, and genuine love between classes, races, creeds, and nationalities.

5. We investigate the possibilities of forming service units to meet the needs of given individuals or groups and urge young people to find out individually what occupations in relief work and missions are open for them, and to try to train for at least one year of service in this field.

6. We make special effort to propagate the Biblical doctrine of non-resistance during peace time: also, that the young people of the conference investigate the possibilities of an extensive radio peace program.
7. We give every assistance to returning service men (both C.P.S. and Armed Service) to help re-establish them in our communities and churches.

8. We remember those of our number in C.P.S. and the Armed Service with letters and in our prayers.

9. In the name of Christ we extend a hearty and sincere welcome to the youth of the twenty-two Central Conference churches that recently became a part of the General Conference. A rising vote of welcome was taken which was unanimous, and it was decided that the secretary would send a word of welcome to the Central Conference young people.

10. The publication of the "Vine Press" be continued as it endeavors to unite us through this paper and correspondence. Also that we send the "Vine Press" to all Middle District Conference societies free of charge, taking all the money out of the budget for subscriptions of the "Vine Press."

11. That the very earnest and enthusiastic missionary interest shown by the M.D.Y.P.U. by implemented by having the executive committee take immediate steps with the home missions committee to find a suitable field somewhere in the South and satisfactory worker for us to give our full support.

Youth Events

On June 27, Ernst Harder, Young People's Union representative visiting Canadian churches, had his first meeting at Leamington, Ontario. He went from there to Port Roneau. He reports the visit to be very challenging and enjoys the opportunity of making this trip.

A group of young people in Chicago several years ago became interested in the mission in the North Carolina mountains being conducted by Miss Elsie Grantland. This group from the First Mennonite church in Chicago, Arthur Olmand reports, decided to make a trip to the mission to study it. In order to arrange for this, they sold Christmas trees during their free time, raised the money and went down to the mission. The result was that the mission was adopted as one of their projects.

The annual conference of the Church of the Brethren held at Wenatchee, Washington, voted to continue the administration of the CPS program. The vote was overwhelming, however, theirs is not the desire to continue adminstration of CPS indefinitely. The Conference went on record that "in case of continued conscription we urge our government to accept alternative service projects for our younger men under church control and on a purely voluntary basis." They further directed that "in case Congress should enact a peace time conscription bill, we are unwilling to administer any type of alternative service unless it is free from government dominance."

Former President Herbert Hoover, in a talk in Montreal, Canada, the last of June, stated that he was relieved to announce that mass starvation had been averted in the world through the food shipments made to starving areas. He did state, however, that famine would exist and continue to exist in certain parts of China. It is doubtful that this can be relieved due to woefully inadequate transportation facilities. Mr. Hoover at the same time warned that although starvation on a mass scale would be averted, the need to continue sharing of American abundance was very real. There yet remains much to be done just in the feeding and clothing of people not to mention the assurance humanity needs that there is a God in whom men can trust and men who put brotherly love at the top of the list in man's relations with man.

The Synodal Council of the Evangelical Church of Czech Brethren has accepted a petition for amalgamation from the Sudetan German Church. Full religious rights are reported to have been given to Protestant churches in Poland by the Soviet-dominated government.

RELIEF

Dutch People Grateful for Food

"In the past two weeks we have been distributing 10 lbs. of flour and one-half pound of raisins to every person on the isle of Walcheren, and every person on the isle of Schouwen en Duiveland, totaling approximately 86,000 people. These isles have suffered extremely as a result of the floods, and now especially in the last two months before the new harvest comes, they appreciate more than words can tell our gifts of love. Since we have not sufficient personnel to handle all the flour, etc. ourselves, we often use local help, but in every case special care is taken to see that the actual distribution is done by one of our workers. Could the generous givers at home but hear and see for themselves the expressions of gratitude when the people have been helped, they would know that their efforts have not been in vain. It is indeed as was told to our workers and was also seen in some periodicals, that "All Walcheren is laughing."—Cornelious Dyck

Relief Cereal

A special relief cereal is being manufactured by a large mill in the midwest. This cereal contains a mixture of wheat, oats, soybeans and small amounts of other items. This cereal has been shipped to Europe and there used in feeding programs. It has been found very satisfactory. It is cooked in boiling water for ten minutes and is quite tasty. It is high in nutritive value. It contains approximately 1600 calories per pound. The price is 6¼ cents per pound fob. New York City.

Since this company is unable to secure all the grain needed for its ordinary program they are making arrangements whereby we can trade contributed grain for the finished cereal. Carload contributions of wheat, oats and soybeans will be accepted. In turn we will be given market price for the grain and credit will be given toward the purchase of this cereal.

Additional publicity on this item will be released later on. Further instructions may be obtained by writing the Material Aid Office in Akron.

Wheat Contributions

Several months ago it was felt advisable that our people sell their remaining old wheat crop and take advantage of the government subsidy offer rather than have it milled into flour. The government then purchased this wheat for relief purposes.

Recently, because price control restrictions have been eliminated, the government has suspended the buying for hunger areas, except for cheese, evaporated and dried milk. This means that purchases of wheat, meats, lard, and other essential foods have been suspended until price agreements can be reached. There may be a considerable delay before all this is ironed out. Unfortunately hunger and malnutrition are not halted while negotiations are taking place.

In light of this development, we are again encouraging contributions of wheat and flour. Arrangements are being completed whereby we can ship wheat in another form than flour also. Last year 114 carloads of wheat and flour were donated by the Mennonite people of the United States. With the harvesting of the new bountiful crop of wheat we trust that we can supply a huge amount of this basic food to those who are in need.

Since the Government is not purchasing any quantity of food for stricken countries, it should certainly be an incentive for the Mennonite people to give generously to help make up this deficit.

Heifer Project

In order that our records may be complete we should greatly appreciate having reports from people who have contributed heifers to this project. This should include reports from all groups of Mennonites and also Brethren in Christ people everywhere in the United States. In cases where a carload was contributed from a community, it would be our suggestion that some person assume the responsibility of sending in a summary report of the project. In cases where a heifer may have been contributed in a general pool along with other groups, it would be well for that person to write in direct to the Akron office and give the date, number, and place where the heifer was contributed. The submitting of such information would help greatly in keeping records covering the participation of Mennonite people in this relief project. An accurate record of heifer donations can be kept if Mennonite people who wish to contribute through this channel in the future will secure identification tags from the Mennonite Central Committee.

C. P. S.

A number of men from Mennonite communities and from the CPS Reserve are sailing as livestock attendants on UNNRA shipments to Europe. They dock at Gdansk (Danzig), Trieste and Bremen. Any Mennonite minister or pastor who wishes to work with the men as a livestock attendant and to assist with the religious, educational, and recreational life of the group may write to the CPS Section, Mennonite Central Committee, Akron, Pennsylvania. Present arrangements for UNRRA cattle shipments may discontinue at the end of 1946 if UNRRA is not extended beyond that time.

Plans are being made for a six weeks cooking school to be held at the Powellsville CPS Camp beginning the last week in July. The school will be under the direction of Ruth Smucker, local dietitian, and Naomi Brubaker, former dietitian at Three Rivers camp and instructor at the North Fork Cooking School in 1945. It is hoped that another cooking school will materialize in the near future, possible in a midwest camp.

Colonel Kosch has announced that two camps, Camino, California, and Powellsville, Maryland, will be the only base camps to remain open after October 1. According to present plans Unit III, Boonsboro, Maryland, and Unit IV, Clearspring, Maryland will close August 30.

Personnel Changes

Menno Fast and Harold Moyer are replacing Paul Albrecht and John Oyer in the CPS history and research department. Raymond Ewy is assisting in the foreign relief office. Donald Beachler is replacing Arthur Voth as Personnel Secretary. Arthur Voth is secretary to Director of CPS' replacing Otto Sommer. Clifford King and Harold Steiner are arranging and organizing CPS files in the CPS Archives. The names of Arthur Blosser and Daniel Hershberger have been added to the Material Aid Program. Wayne Henard has been Material Aid representative on the field since early 1946 and will now be assisted by Lester Glick; they will help organize local canning projects and interpret relief needs in Mennonite communities. Sam J. Miller, assistant in the Mennonite Aid Section, has been appointed Educational Secretary of CPS.

IN MEMORIAM

REV. CHRISTIAN J. VORAN

Christian J. Voran, eldest son of Jacob and Anna Stucky Voran, was born March 4, 1866, in Volhenien, Russia, and departed this life on July 20, 1946, at the Memorial Hospital in Kingman, Kansas.

When the great migration from Russia took place in 1874, he, at the age of eight years, accompanied his parents to America where religious freedom was promised them. They at first established their home on a farm near Moundridge, Kansas, where he grew to manhood. He was an ardent reader of the Bible and at the age of seventeen gave his life to the Lord and was baptized upon confession of his faith by Elder Jacob Stucky and received into fellowship of the Hopefield Mennonite Church near Moundridge, Kansas.

On March 4, 1886, he was united in marriage with Carolina Kaufman, and together they shared the joys and sorrows of this world for nearly fifty-seven years. One of the joys of their married life was their golden wedding celebration by the Bethany Mennonite Church. This union was blessed with twelve children, six sons and six daughters. One son, Albert Theodore, and one daughter, Emma, having preceded them in death. On October 2, 1942, he had the sad experience of losing his life's companion in death.

In 1895 the Hopefield congregation elected him to become their pastor, which great task he faithfully performed for twelve years. In 1907 he answered a call from a group in Kingman County to come and help organize a new church. The Bethany Mennonite Church was the result and for eighteen years he was their pastor. They located on a farm seven miles southeast of Kingman which was their home until the end. Those who learned to know him will long remember him as an outstanding Christian character.

He leaves to mourn his departure five sons: Edward, Gustav, Henry and Fred of Kingman County Kansas and Philip of Kinsley, Kansas; five daughters: Anna, Lydia, Clara and Esther of Kingman County, Kansas, and Amelia of Gentry, Arkansas; Thirty-one grandchildren, fourteen great-grandchildren; two brothers: Jacob J. of Kingman County, Kansas and Joe F. of Belpre, Kansas; two sisters: Mrs. Andrew Schroeder of Hutchinson, Kansas, and Mrs. J. H. Kaufman of Kingman, Kansas; and a host of friends and relatives.

Miss Elma Basinger, daughter of the late Moses and Sophia Aerni Basinger, was born December 28, 1894, and passed away June 14, 1946. Miss Basinger was a member of the St. John church, Pandora, Ohio, and continued a cheerful Christian throughout her seventeen years of invalidism, twelve of which she was bedfast. Surviving her are three sisters and three brothers. During all her sickness she was taken care of by her sister Mary and brother Cyrus with whom she made her home.

Christian C. Krehbiel, son of Tobias J. Krehbiel and Maria (Goering) Krehbiel, was born on March 6, 1884, on a farm near Moundridge, Kansas. He was baptized in 1899 and received into the membership of the Eden Church, Moundridge, Kansas. In 1902 he was joined in holy matrimony with Anna Wedel, who now survives him. He passed away suddenly July 17. He is mourned by his wife, two sons, Art and Ted, and one daughter, Alice (Mrs. Philbert Kaufman).

Sylvanus Welty, son of Amos and Sarah (Suter) Welty, was born March 25, 1893, and died of a heart attack at his home one mile west of Bluffton, Ohio, June 27, 1946. He is survived by his widow and two children, Omer and Mrs. Naomie Jones, both of Bluffton. Funeral services in charge of Rev. J. N. Smucker, assisted by Rev. G. T. Soldner, were held in the First Mennonite Church.—L. I. S. Corr.

'Tis Life Beyond

I watched a sail until it dropped from sight
Over the rounding sea. A gleam of white,
A last far-flashed farewell, and, like a thought
Slipt out of mind, it vanished and was not.

Yet to the helmsman standing at the wheel
Broad seas still stretched beneath the guiding keel.
Disaster? Change? He left no slightest sign,
Nor dreamed he of that far horizon line.

So may it be, perchance, when down the tide
Our dear ones vanish. Peacefully they glide
On level seas, nor mark the unknown bound.
We call it death—to them 'tis life beyond.

Responsibility

Grace Noll Crowell

I have a clean, soft bed on which to sleep,
I have a table set with gracious things—
How can I pray the Lord "my soul to keep?"
How can my heart lift up on joyous wings
While there are those about me in the night
Who toss on filthy rags and cannot rest,
Who have no food, no raiment, and no light?
How can I sleep unless I do my best
To ease and comfort them, and how can I
Be deemed a follower of the Christ until
I heed humanity's unbroken cry
And move to feed the hungry, heal the ill?
God help me keep remembering—help me to see How great is my responsibility.

rown rather hopeless in their search for help. Such eople are anxious to fellowship with those who can ay, "I too was troubled, but this is the way out that found." Then and there is given a message of the hrist that means life abundant. News which does not ve people a key to their perplexing problems is hardly ood news. The evangelist needs to know from experi- nce what he is talking about, otherwise his words will e empty. As evangelism takes on this honest, heart- -heart, helpful nature, it becomes the good news for hich many are eager.

HEADQUARTERS OFFICE CORNER

Quite often we are asked, "On what basis should our contributions to missions, C.P.S., relief, and others, be divided so as to be fair to the needs of each?"

If the budgets for the present year, totaling nearly $500,000, adopted at the Council of Boards Meeting, February 20, 1946, were to be met, each $10.00 gift sent through this office would need to be divided as follows:

$3.24 for Foreign Missions; $2.80 for C.P.S. and Peace Committee (estimate based on C.P.S. needs in February, 1946 ; $2.53 for Emergency Relief; 86c for Home Missions; 26c for Educational Rehabilitation (tuition for C.P.S. men in Mennonite Schools); 15c for the Board of Education; 7c for the Generel Conference treasury (including Conference expenses and funds for Historical Committee, Church Unity Committee, and Placement Committee); 1c for Doctrine and Conduct Committee; and 1c for general expenses of Mutual Aid Board (loans not included).

This does not include: (1) The fund for the aid of needy ministers and wives, for which 10c per member per year has been requested; (2) Office Equipment Fund (for the purchase of a new heating system in the Headquarters Office, etc); (3 Publications, for which no budget has been adopted; (4) Mennonite Biblical Seminary, which adopted an annual budget, and is now also soliciting funds for the purchase of a seminary property in Chicago. Contributions for the Seminary should be sent to E. W. Baumgartner, Berne, Indiana. ALL OTHER GIFTS may be sent to the GENERAL CONFERENCE HEADQUARTERS, 722 Main Street, Newton, Kansas. — July 30, 1946

—Waka, Texas: We are happy to have Rev. and Mrs. Gerhard H. Neufeld and children of Enid, Oklahoma, with us again for the summer to serve our church. Since our group is too small to conduct its own vacation Bible school, we joined with the Brethren and Full Gospel churches in the community school which was held in the Waka school house. Gospel Team of Meade, Kansas, gave a program in our church on the afternoon of June 30.—Mrs. Herman Wiebe, Corr.

Miss Viola Amstutz leaves July 22 also for three years service in China. Plans are under way for a complete renovation of the church organ which was installed thirty years ago. A gift from Andrew Carnegie at that time assisted in the purchase of the organ. Mr. Delvin Kirchhofer of Bluffton, who returned recently from two years of service for relief in Egypt, Italy, and Europe, gave the first showing of his pictures and told of his experiences to the audience at Grace Church Sunday evening.—Mrs. S. Will Never Thirst

Jesus answered, "Anyone who drinks this water will be thirsty again, but anyone who drinks the water that I shall give him will never thirst any more;" John 4:13,14, Moffatt. What is the essence of the living water that Jesus gives? Is is not the love which floods the heart of the one who is born of The Spirit? So many satisfactions are temporary, but love is a permanent one. The individual who is once enabled by God's grace to love has something on which he can always depend for satisfaction. Nothing can keep such a spiritually-born person from loving. He may be blocked in achieving health, material comfort, an education, etc., but he can always persist in an attitude of vital concern for others through the grace of God. The joy of loving is truly a spring of living water for such an individual. Undoubtedly, the Samaritan woman had been very unloving. It seems that she was so tied up in emotional knots that she had been unable to get along with five husbands. Her defensiveness in the conversation is further evidence of her unloving attitude. Love had not prompted her to be open with her life, so it was an event when someone told her everything that she had ever done. She saw herself as she was, and here was someone, who, seeing her as she was, did not despise her. Through him she experienced God's unmerited love. He offered her God's grace to the end that she might be transformed from an unloving wo-

"Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid which is Christ Jesus"

From the editor's point - of - view:

ANGER is an emotional response that can be considerably lessened by an understanding of its essential nature and function. Physiologically anger prepares the body for fighting. It causes additional sugar to be poured into the blood stream as the necessary fuel for action; it directs a large amount of blood to the large muscles of the arms and legs, and it causes the heart to beat faster. Thus physiologically anger seems to be a reaction preparing the body for the fight for self-protection. If one is much interested in self-protection and believes in fighting to insure it, then anger is something of a blessing. However, the rather common consensus is for the control of temper. An angry person, someone has pointed out, is not a very pleasant sight to most people. Jesus definitely taught the wrongness of anger. Yet anger comes to a good many people, and this is not strange, for it is the immature reaction we tend to slip into when we are frustrated beyond our capacity of grace. It is the hasty preparation we make for our security when the danger signal shows up. The trouble is that we fail to see in the hurry and worry moments of life that it is a very poor and ineffective preparation, for it hinders our power to think and certainly our power to love. As we grow in faith that we don't have to have our way just so and now, we do not sense the sharpness of the usual frustrations, and furthermore we learn to see how thinking and loving enable us to overcome or ameliorate our frustrations ever so much better than anger.

A DEPRESSION for the end of 1947 or the beginning quarter of 1948 is being predicted by some economic experts. This has serious implications when considered in connection with our prayer "Give us this day our daily bread." It is also being pointed out that when America goes into another depression, the whole world will again be very much affected by it. Such a a depression coming when millions are on the verge of stravation or starving, will make for incalculable tragedy. What should Christians think about such a possibility? It is being pointed out that Christians should realize that such depressions are inevitable in an economic system that permits such a large control of wealth in the hands of such a few. It is reported that it is not an exaggeration to say that the majority of the automobile industry is dominated by about a hundred men. The same is true of at least another great business. If one out of ten men on an island in the Pacific should get into his control ninety-nine of the hundred dollars in circulation on such an island, the chances are that business would slow up considerably. Christians help to bring on depressions whenever they support a mal-distribution of wealth that makes such depressions inevitable.

CHRISTIAN COOPERATION is making possible "the largest mass movement of mission personnel in foreign mission history," according to a report by the secretary of the Foreign Missions Conference of North America. "Approximately four hundred Christian missionaries returning to fields in China and the Philippines expect to sail from San Francisco on August 28 on the SS Marine Lynx." "The four hundred represent the vanguard of some eight thousand Protestant missionaries who will return to fields in various countries in East Asia and the Pacific Islands as rapidly as their employing mission boards in the United States and Canada can clear passports and passage, and supplies for their maintenance and the rehabilitation of their mission stations." Thus far missionaries going to China, etc., have been faced with a transportation bottleneck in the Pacific. The Marine Lynx is the first of two or more "missionary ships" being sponsored by the Foreign Missions Conference in the attempt to facilitate the transportation of missionaries. Twenty-nine mission boards with work in the two countries will send personnel on the first ship. Great and effective things can be done in the Spirit of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ.

The Problem of Financing in a "Spiritual" Vocation

by Lloyd L. Ramseyer

(This article was written at the request of the editor of The Mennonite)

It has always been assumed that he who enters a profession of full time work for the church should do it with a deep sense of commitment to the task. Consecration is one of the chief requirements for such work. No one should enter such a vocation because of hope for personal gain, prestige, ease, glory, or any other selfish purpose. One of the oaths which the Catholic clergy take is the oath of poverty. Personal possessions are given up for the good of the church.

We of the Mennonite church have taken unfair advantage of the consecration of our church leaders. We seem to forget that they, too, have financial obligations which must be met. The Catholic clergy take the oath of poverty, but they have no families to care for, and their own physical needs are guaranteed them. In periods of illness or old age, the church to which they gave their lives assumes the cost of their care.

Our full time leaders have families for which they must provide. Their children must be educated, and one cannot blame them for wanting an education for them at least equivalent to the college education which they themselves received. There is the "rainy day" to give concern and old age comes on for all, a period when expenses continue but income ceases. Our group has not yet evolved a workable pension system for our church employees.

Salaried employees are always caught short during an inflationary period such as this. While expenses mount, salaries do not keep pace. As a result, the margin between income and expenditures diminishes until one finds it difficult to meet living costs even after the utmost caution has been exercised. This is especially true when the salary received always has been so low that little if any margin remained and it has been impossible to lay aside any surplus for time of need.

Let us consider the situation with respect to our ministers. Inquiry reveals that many receive $1500 or less per year, $1200 is not uncommon, and some are getting even less. We expect them to have seven years of education above high school. If they are to bring refreshing and instructive sermons on Sunday morning, they must spend much time in reading and study. Pastoral calls must be made. There are numerous meetings of committees and organizations of the church which must be attended. If a pastor is to do his best there is no time left for earning "on the side" as many of our ministers used to do and some are still forced to do. To be sure the church may provide a rent-free parsonage for his living quarters, but he has other expenses which tend to balance this saving, for example, the item of automobile expense for pastoral calls which few church members even consider in estimating the financial requirements of their minister.

Members of college faculties are also expected to have a large investment in education. Their educational preparation should also be seven years above the high school, a type of education which is even more expensive than that of the minister. A survey made last school year of salaries paid by four senior Mennonite colleges indicated that the salaries paid to full professors averaged $2224.00 for a year of eleven months, running down to an average of $1546.00 for instructors. If these averages are applied to the staff of one of our colleges, its teaching employees would average $1816 for the eleven months. This does not include any living accomodations. One of our colleges is paying a top salary for professors next year of $2250 for eleven months. Another is paying a top salary of $2100 for nine months next year, with an average of $1780 for the entire full time teaching staff.

Let us compare these salaries with some others so as to get a little better idea of the sacrifice involved. One of our recent graduates is going into public school teaching in September, without experience and with only his Bluffton College education, at a salary of $2150. Two others get $1900 each and another $1800. On the other hand our faculty members with years of experience and with much greater investment in education receive not more than $2100 for the same period, and an average of less than $1800, with some as low as $1550.

Or let us see what some receive in industry with very little investment in education. The Ohio Bell Telephone Company recently ran the following advertisement in the daily papers, "Starting rates at the Telephone Company are now $28 for a 40-hour week. Earnings increase on a regular schedule. Many jobs pay over $145 per month after only three months experience. Vacations with pay and other attractive benefits." In other words, earn $1450 per year while you learn, then $1740 per year, without any investment in education above the high school level. The 1943 average annual earnings of Ohio workers in manufacturing was $2505.00, according to the Bureau of Business Research of the Ohio State University. Here, too, no expensive education is necessary and there are no high living standards to be maintained. The minister or faculty member, on the other hand, must wear reasonably good clothes, keep a good subscription list of magazines and buy books to keep himself informed, and belong to learned societies and clubs to keep up to date and maintain his social contacts. In addition, the government and employer help in providing the industrial worker with social security in his old age and unemployment insurance if he is laid off.

I have personally approached capable men to accept positions in the College who would reply something to this effect, "I am willing to make some sacrifice. I realize the importance of the work you are doing and which you want me to do. But I just don't see how, in fairness to my family, I could live on what you are able to pay." We lost two good faculty prospects from CPS during the last few months, both with Ph.D degrees, because they felt that after several years without income they must accept positions with better pay. As Christians, how much dare we expect in sacrifice from those who serve us above that which we ourselves are willing to make? Of course the servants of the church should serve with a sacrificial spirit, but is there any reason why this sacrifice should be so much above that of other members of the church? Suppose a minister earning $1500 per year serving the church could earn $2500 in industry, as factory workers in Ohio did in 1943. That means that he has given $1000 in a year as service to the church, or 40 per cent of his possible income. Or suppose a faculty member works for $2000 per year in one of our schools when he could earn $3500 in a state school. He is contributing 43 per cent of his possible income to Christian education. Yet so few church members give even 10 per cent of their income. It has often been said that if all Mennonites would tithe, the activities of the church would be well financed.

The needs of our full time workers could be better provided in two ways. One would be by giving more to church activities so that better salaries could be paid. The other would be to give full support to plans now being formulated for retirement allowances. The laymen of the church should insist that such plans be put into operation very soon. These retirement allowances should apply to all full time workers of the church rather than to any special group of such workers.

There must be a realization that we are all servants of the Lord. He has not set some apart to do the sacrificing for the entire group. Even though engaged in a so-called secular occupation, the chief aim of the Christian must be to glorify God. His willingness to sacrifice and to dedicate his all to God should be just as great as that of the minister. When each church member is willing to make his share of the sacrifices, then all will have plenty and none need fear the approach of the "rainy day," wondering how his family will live through that possible period of his own illness or how he will live during his old age without accepting charity or being a burden on his family. Then instead of feeling that some should have faith enough to trust the Lord for such periods while others lay by of material goods, we will all trust Him enough to give sacrificially so that all might have equal opportunities and the work of the Lord might progress.

By Cornelius Krahn

The Story of the MCC has been published in commemoration of its twenty-fifth anniversary. After some introductory chapters the Twenty-Five Years of service are summarized in three chapters: Russia Famine Relief, Paraguay Colonization, and Relief to War Sufferers. A map of the world clearly illustrates that the MCC operates Relief Collection Centers at Akron, Pa.; Newton, Kansas; Goshen, Indiana; Kalona, Iowa; Lehigh, Kansas; Silver Springs, Pa.; Winnipeg, Manitoba; Saskatoon, Saskatchewan; Yarrow British Columbia; Coaldale, Alberta; and Kitchener, Ontario. the supplies of which are distributed in fifteen American, European, African, and Asiatic countries. Contributions for this purpose from 1937 to 1944 totaled nearly a million dollars. Additional chapters deal with Civilian Public Service, Peace, Mutual Aid, and Organization of the MCC. Total contributions for Civilian Public Service through MCC channels exceeded two million dollars by November 30, 1944. This well illustrated booklet can be ordered for fifty cents from the MCC, Akron, Pa.

Problems of Dutch Mennonite Youth. Dutch Mennonite young people are frank and thorough in the discussion of their problems at local and camp meetings as well as in their youth paper entitled De Hoeksteen (The Cornerstone). In a column headed "In the World" they usually discuss Mennonite principles and their relationship to society. One of the youthful writers brusquely states: "Mennonitism and military service cannot be harmonized." (Remember Dutch Mennonites had given up nonresistance a century ago.) Another writer demands under the heading "Five Minutes of Twelve" the establishment of a Dutch Civilian Public Service system for those who conscientiously object to serving in the army. Others emphasize that the traditional Mennonite emphasis on the freedom of the individual conscience does not permit the enforcement of these principles even though they may be Scriptural and historic Mennonite principles.

Dutch Mennonite Young People Camp Again. From August 3-7 two youth retreats will be held at the Dutch Mennonite camping ground, Elspeet, these being the first retreats held since the war. Among the topics to be discussed are; "Mennonites, Past and Present," and "Righteousness and Mercy."

Sudermans Report from Oraibi, Arizona

"Where the word of a King is, there is power." Eccl. 8:4. Much of a missionary's time in definite mission work consists of the sowing of the Word of God. Some of the Hopi Christians are finding great joy in the study of the precious Word during our six weeks of daily morning Bible classes. During the worship period we review the accounts of the men and women of faith. Miss Baerg then directs the reading of the Gospel of Mark in the Hopi language. Then Miss Sprunger gives a series of lessons on the doctrines of salvation, such as: repentance, faith, regeneration, etc. Mr. Suderman then continues with a study in the dispensations. This study is deepening the spiritual insight of the Christians as to man's total depravity and increases their joy in God's so great a salvation in Christ Jesus. It also clarifies their minds as to the present increasing world apostasy and leads them to rejoice and look forward to the imminent return of the Lord in the clouds of heaven. The fact that those who now receive not the Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ shall after the rapture be given over to believe a lie and to follow after the man of sin is to them a great warning and concern for their unsaved people.

A while ago our missionary friends of Kingman, Arizona, knowing of our desire to have special evangelistic meetings, brought their speaker over after their meetings ended. His name is Tom Carrol from Oakland, California. He is a man filled to over-flowing with love unto the Lord. The precious gospel message just rolled over his lips. The Hopis enjoyed his simple, yet powerful, messages very much. On Sunday, the closing day, the Christians from the two neighboring Baptist missions were with us, also the Navajo Christians from a mission fifteen miles north. It was a wonderful day around the Word of God. For the simple noon meal, each family had been asked to contribute a cooked dish. In the afternoon all joined in an impromptu song festival.

It is often believed that the Indians are capable of grasping only the simple gospel stories. Quite the contrary is true. The Hopi Christians love the deep study of the Word. Willard Sakiestiwa, our interpreter, was given a few months of intensive study on the tabernacle. This he enjoyed very much. Then at the monthly Day of Prayer in December he was asked to give a message on the tabernacle. Miss Sprunger's miniature tabernacle was on display and he spoke for an hour and a half, just bubbling over with the message of salvation in Jesus Christ as portrayed in the tabernacle. Recently the study of the two witnesses in Revelation 11 brought on quite a discussion as to whether they would be Elijah and Moses or Elijah and Enoch. On our last Day of Prayer a rather prominent Christian worker from New York City beautifully and in simple terms gave a message on the subject of "Fellowship in Prayer." When on the following day a Hopi Christian was asked concerning that message he said, "It sounded good, very good. I tried to listen closely to get it all. But I did not hear anything much about Jesus nor about His precious blood." He had been aware of a deep lack—yea, of powerlessness in that message. To notice such spiritual discernment rejoices our hearts and gives us new courage to go on in teaching the Word!

During the last few years great changes have taken place here in Hopiland. Many families have moved off the reservation to secure good wages in railroad centers, defense plants, and powder dump areas. And now after the war the government is opening an irrigation project at Parker in southern Arizona for the Hopis. To shepherd this scattered group is almost impossible. The Lord marvelously is giving us entrance into the military area beyond Flagstaff (115 miles from Oraibi) for gospel work. Sunday School and preaching services are held there twice a month, your missionaries on the field taking turns.

The returning soldiers are restless and do not care

Summer Service in the Chicago Mission

(At the Chicago Mission 4221 S. Rockwell St., something new is taking place this summer. Something that the General Conference has not previously undertaken. A Summer Service Unit is working at the Mission there. Nine young people have volunteered their summer to teach Bible School, direct playground activities, and help with the mission program. They are helping in the Daily Vacation Bible School program which has enrolled a total of 185 children. They are also busy with the recreation of the children in the area of the mission and are helping in a crafts program.

This is a new venture sponsored by the Home Mission Board in cooperation with the Young Peoples Union. These young people are doing pioneer work. Possibly, through their and the churches efforts, such a program of service can be expanded to touch many areas of the work of the church. By calling upon young people who willingly volunteer their time, talent, and means (for they receive a $10.00 monthly allowance, nothing more), much can be accomplished in the future for the Church of Christ. We refer you to this series of articles describing the first General Conference sponsored Summer Service Unit.—The Editor.)

Introducing the Unit

by Jeanne Wedel

Coming into Chicago was quite an exciting experience, and of course we didn't know what to expect never having met Mr. Neufeld or the rest or knowing who was to meet us. Finally Virgil Flickinger, our Unit Director from Pretty Prairie, Kansas, approached us and introduced himself. I understand he was looking for girls that looked like Mennonites; maybe that's what took him so long.

After arriving at the Neufeld home we met someone from home. So there are three of us from the Aberdeen Mennonite Church, Wilma Harder, LaVerne Linscheid, and myself. Here we also met Katherine Neufeld from Inman, Kansas, and Irene Zehr from Aurora, Nebraska, The next morning our girl with the Canadian accent arrived, Leona Cressman from Kitchener, Ontario.

Several days later while visiting the Museum we met our next member—John Sprunger from Berne, Indiana. Robert Mountenay from Doylestown, Pennsylvania, arrived this week which concluded our unit membership.

Becoming Acquainted with the City

by Virgil Flickinger

The Chicago Summer Service Unit had its formal opening amid a very informal atmosphere in a back room of the Mennonite Bible Mission at 4221 South Rockwell Street on June 25, 1946. Rev. John T. Neufeld, the pastor of the mission, introduced us to our work with a brief history of and facts concerning Chicago, the mission, and the community in which we found ourselves. For those of us to whom Chicago was new, this provided an excellent background for our few weeks in the city. Mrs. Arnold Regier of the Mennonite Seminary is also to be thanked for giving of her time in introducing us to new materials for the handwork projects.

Our orientation to Chicago also included an afternoon in Chicago's famous Loop which was preceded by a general observation of the city from its highest observatory, the Board of Trade Building. Other interesting sights we have seen include the Museum of Science and Industry which stands by beautiful Lake Michigan. We have also seen Chicago by night, a sight resulting from a midnight cruise on Lake Michigan on which we were invited by the Hi-Crusaders Club of Chicago, an organization of Christian high school folk. Aboard the ship we had the pleasure of attending a program of singing, worship, and testimony to God's saving power. A tiring but enjoyable afternoon was spent at the zoo in Lincoln Park, and the Saturday before Bible School opened we had an opportunity to become acquainted with the people with whom we were to work by spending a day picnicking with them by the lake near Gary, Indiana. No Fourth of July would be complete without fireworks. For this bit of entertainment Soldiers' Field, Chicago's largest stadium, provided the background for another evening's pleasure.

Various speakers in and visiting the city have proven a source of inspiration and encouragement to us. Among these were Don Smucker who gave us a running exposition of the book of Galatians, Rev. Ernest Miller who spoke of his experiences as a chaplain of one of Chicago's large hospitals, and Dean Harold Bender of Goshen College who challenged us with "A Program of Evanelization for the Church."

The Work

by Katherine Neufeld

The work of our Summer Unit is teaching Bible school in various churches. Due to the lack of teachers we were sorry we could not fulfill all the demands for teachers. The classes continue only during the forenoon hours.

Five of the workers are teaching at the Mennonite Bible Mission. John Sprunger, Leona Cressman, Wilma Harder and Jeanne Wedel with Virgil Flickinger as leader and an enrollment of about sixty. The Bible School is to continue for five weeks. Recreation is also furnished on the Grade School play grounds from 4 P. M. to 6 P. M.

Irene Zehr and Laverne Linscheid have for the past two weeks taught at the First Mennonite Church with Mrs. Harvey Lutz as leader and an enrollment of about seventy-five. The closing exercises were held July 12 and for the next two weeks they will teach at the Branch Sunday School of the First Mennonite Church with Mrs. Harvey Lutz, as the leader there also.

Katherine Neufeld is teaching at the Mennonite Gospel Mission with Rev. Robert Summers as leader, and an enrollment of about fifty. After teaching two weeks there she will join the other two girls and teach at the Branch Sunday School.

Robert Mountenay, who arrived later than the others, is working at the Good Will Center, which is a settlement house reaching the youth in that area. He is to work in the music department there.

Life at the Mission

by Leona Cressman and Wilma Harder

Here is a glimpse of a day's activity at the Chicago Mission where our Summer Unit is located.

The first alarm clock in the morning to be heard usually awakens the majority of the occupants of the Mission home. However, it is not until some have departed for their destination before the remainder of the group put in an appearance. Thus begins a day's life at the Mission home. The boys room at the Mennonite Seminary.

The entire group is occupied with Daily Vacation Bible Schools during the morning hours.

All over the Mission flat there is evidence of the work which the Unit is doing. It overflows from tables and cupboards, and the very atmostphere is charged with Vacation Bible School. Our waking hours are long and well filled. At the piano, someone is trying out a new hymn or a chorus. The dinning room table has become a work shop for handcraft. Here the unit members experiment with new materials to see if it can be adapted to their age groups. In quiet corners some are studying with diligence. Always there are lively discussions concerning meals, lesson materials, programs, problem children. Often someone is planning a trip to a church supply house, and the others are busy making out long lists of needed materials.

Experimenting with the various types of handwork materials has proved to be very interesting and educational. The result has been that the girls themselves have excelled in shell craft.

As result of our shift system, two of the group prepare meals, two haunt the food markets, and two wash the dishes. After a bit of scheming the girls were able to devise a plan whereby the male section could use their brawny muscles to shine dishes. (P. S. Hasn't proved successful as yet!)

Supervision is given in the nearby playground during the afternoon hours.

Following lunch our entire group meets for prayer each day. It is here that we can discuss our problems, and share each other's burdens. This hour has indeed proved to be a blessing to us.

"If two of you agree on earth as touching any thing that they shall ask, it shall be done for them of my Father which is in Heaven. For where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them.—Matt. 18:19, 20.

Oklahoma Young People's Retreat

The annual Oklahoma Young People's Retreat was held at Camp Hydro, Hydro, Oklahoma from July 23-27, 1946. The Hydro camp had improved physical facilities making the stay at the camp more convenient. Secured by the Retreat Committee were the following leaders: Dr. H. Framer Smith of Philadelphia, Pa., noted Bible lecturer. Rev. Erland Waltner of the Bethel church, Mountain Lake, Minnesota, also was present. Dr. Smith and Rev. Waltner shared in conducting Bible Studies.

Immediately following the Retreat, a Bible Conference has been scheduled. This has been held from July 28-30. Dr. H. Framer Smith served as one of the main speakers and Rev. P. P. Tschetter of the First Mennonite church, Pretty Prairie, was the second speaker.

Youth Events

The tornado, which struck Windsor, Ontario, in June, was barely thirty miles from the church settlements in Leamington. Because the power lines were ripped to pieces, the Leamington community spent several days with candle light. A group of the people from Leamington visited Windsor and witnessed the devastation caused by the twister.

With Civilian Public Service demobilization continuing the expenses of operating the program have reduced from $68,000 per month at its peak to a monthly cost of about $38,000 at present. Continued demobilization will, it is expected, decrease costs about $3,300 per month. If the program is continued, as the National Service Act passed has continued Civilian Public Service until next March, the cost will likely become stabilized at about $20,000 per month.

In June of this year, it was reported that over 7,000,000 men are still being held as prisoners of war.

* * * *

In the eighty-eighth general assembly of the United Presbyterian Church of North America, unanimous vote adopted initial plans for a merger with the Reformed Church in America, that denomination had taken similar action the week previous. This will bring 400,000 Christians together in one denomination.

According to the CHRISTIAN HERALD'S analysis of the religious statistics of the United States, there are 225 Protestant denominations operating in 1946. This is an increase of fifty over 1936. Eighty-two per cent of all Protestants are members of thirteen of these denominations, and 97.4 per cent of all are to be found in fifty-five churches.

Although many new denominations are being formed by people dissatisfied with an existing denomination, the actual trend seems to be toward the merger of denominations and toward unity. Seldom is it that a new denomination newly developed has more than a few hundred or thousand members. It has been many years since 100,000 have developed a new denomination. But, merging denominations speak in the terms of hundreds of thousands and even millions.

* * * *

A part of the Seventh Day Adventist polity, it almost seems, is the way they tithe. They stand at the top of the list in American Protestantism in their giving. In 1944 the Seventh-Day Adventists of North America paid a per capita tithe of $72.77. Over and above this tithe, the following per capita contributions were made: $27.25 to foreign missions and $14.09 to home missions and local expenses. In 1944 the 206,908 Adventist members raised $14.057,373.74 in tithes, $5,638,986.01 for foreign missions, and $2,915,760.36 for home missions and local church work.

It is reported that a very active mission program is being undertaken in France now since the war is over. There seemingly is a connection between the Adventist mission program and the 1AO medics who were in the army and served on all fronts.

On Planning Young Peoples Meetings

We have heard on several occasions the cry for materials for planning Young Peoples Meetings. A constant challenge to the young people and their leaders is the question of what to do with the next meeting and how to make it meaningful and vital. The ability to do that depends greatly on individual initiative and understandng of the needs of young people. Further it depends on planning ahead and not permitting meetings to catch the leader unprepared. And, also, it depends on the individual's capacity to use a variety of types of meetings—music, social gatherings, retreats, projects, special tours and visits with other young people or churches and so on. Young people enjoy variety and have a variety of interests. The fact of God's presence wherever we are can be demonstrated by including such a variety of activity and interest in the long range program we plan. We recently heard a young person of one of our churches say that in her small rural community the only social activites offered were parking on the country roads with 'dates' or going to the movies. She preferred the movies. In such a situation, the church young people's meeting could and should do much by discussing the problem sincerely, openly, and frankly. A program which just condemns roadside parking and the movies will not solve the problem. More is needed. A program discussing the needs of young people socially, religiously, and recreationally and how those needs can best be met would open the way for a positive solution to a sad problem. Furthermore, that stands as a challenge to the church and community! Why aren't those young people challenged with a full program of zestful and joyous activity in the areas of education, religion, social, and recreational activity so that movies and roadside parking become a minor "attraction"? Too often it is not the young people who stand judged by what they do—it is the old people.

Program planning calls upon the creativity of the committee doing the planning? Primarily the success or failure of a program, just as the life of a community, rests on the ability of those who plan the program to relate themselves vitally with the life of their group and the faith in God their programs try to reveal.

In a Presbyterian youth paper, FORWARD, appears the following questions regarding meetings or programs. They are worthy of meditation and thought by those responsible for planning programs for the local churches.

First: It is best to place so much reliance on "canned' material for a socalled "topic" discussion without ever considering the needs and interest of youth and of the local church and community as well? Topic meetings as a steady plan, in which a few young people stand up to read, poorly, a statement or a sentence, are too dull ever to draw the wide-awake and the courageous. No topics magazine or even The Society Kit, if used mechanically, will make meetings click.

Second: Is it the best policy to plan a program that selects an idea from here, another from there, a third from some other interest, and so on? The result is a hodgepodge that has no single thread of purpose. Many youth programs, I am afraid, are a collection of a lot of miscellaneous interests that wouldn't even attract attention in a museum.

Third: Is it a good policy to thin down what Christianity means in order to make it taste good to the average youth? I'm afraid this is done sometimes in the interest of increasing numbers or as a bait to catch the unsuspecting. The firmest conviction I have is the one concerning the earnestness of youth to youth to know what Christianity means and how it is lived. Young people should not be expected to come to classes and meetings that are less than sincere about the Christian faith they are supposed to represent.

Fourth: Is it good policy to be concerned about just a "program"? This attitude is far too common. Too many programs are only a series of events that endeavor to hold young people in the Church while never letting them know what it is to be a Christian.

So, is it worth-while to continue with an earnest few, adding to the group one by one? Yes, it is. This is a time to win the most alert young people to Christ and to help them to witness to him in the years ahead. This is a time for a small group of Christian friends—a fellowship—to grow because they ask God to help them to be a cell of Christlike power. This is a time to have youth meetings that seek to grow in numbers because young people are in earnest about living by Christian faith.

RELIEF

Christen Phlicht

(Christian Duty) is a Mennonite relief organization in Baveria (American Zone of Germany) and has received its first shipment of M.C.C. clothing and food through the CRALOG channel. Michael Horsch, brother of the late John Horsch, is chairman of Christen Phlicht. This organization will be distributing M. C. C. contributed supplies to the nine-hundred or more Mennonite refugees in Bavaria. It is expected that the participation of the German Mennonites in the CRALOG program will increase in the coming weeks and months.

From the Philippines

Reports from the Philippine Islands indicate that there are still many hungry unclothed people in the Northern Provinces. A goodly number of church buildings, hospitals, and schools have been entirely burned or partially destroyed. Black markets, banditry, and transportation are major problems. Dale Nebel, Director of the M. C. C. Unit there, is making preparations for the opening of the 14-men Unit. He writes: "My big problem now is to transport the 50-bed hospital from Manila where we have it stored, to Vigan. I can take it by rail from Manila to San Fernando but that is only half way. From it will need to be trucked and that again is a problem because of the bandit-infested highways and the rainy season. We will need to ford several rivers and cross others on rafts made of bamboo and old gasoline drums. When there is rain in the mountains the rivers rise rapidly and cannot be forded or crossed by raft. The only thing to do is to wait a few hours for the waters to subside." Dr. James Brenneman has been appointed Medical Director of the new hospital and will leave in the near future.

News Briefs

Ellen Harder R. N. and Vernon Toews arrived in New York on July 20 after a period of relief service in England and Holland.

C. L. Graber who for the past few months has been on a commissioner visit to China and the Philippine Islands returned to his home in Goshen, Indiana, on July 22.

Brother and Sister Orie O. Miller arrived in the States on July 24. They visited points in Brazil, Paraguay, and Puerto Rico on their relief commissioner trip.

Sister Margaret Janzen who is under appointment for relief service in Holland is expecting to sail on July 27 on the SS Washington from New York.

MATERIAL AID NOTES

Community Canning Projects

We are rapidly approaching another canning season. Canning of fruits and vegetables has already begun. Housewives, in addition to a multitude of other duties, are aware of the necessity of replenishing their shelves by canning of the bounty with which God has so richly blessed them. Many of these will be canning over and above their own needs and this they are doing for relief. It is no easy task to spend hours at a time over a hot stove in July and August. This cannot be avoided while there is canning to be done.

A number of groups throughout the country are making use of commerical canneries when such canneries are close enough to be pracitcal. They haul their products to the cannery on a pre-arranged date and have them canned in tin. When canning in large quantities they have found it both cheaper and easier to can by this method than canning in glass jars in the home. It saves housewives many hours of exhausting labor.

Following is a list of communities who have used or are using commercial facilities: Hagertown, Maryland; Mantua, Ohio; Beatrice, Nebraska—Folks at Beatrice have taken goods to Lincoln to have them canned; Shafter, California—Recently completing a canning project. Four churches cooperated in canning potatoes and beef for relief. Took these goods to commercial cannery. Results: 23,924 cans potatoes, 2,500 cans beef; Pekin, Eureka, Metamora, Illinois—Take products to Peoria to have them canned. Kalona, Iowa —A lady here who does custom canning is enlarging her facilities in order that she might can for relief. Lancaster County, Pa.—Last fall completed a canning project. 48,000 No. 10 cans of meat. Also canned tomato juice. Harrisonburg, Virginia—Portable cannery now in operation in Virgnia canning chicken. Plan to soon start canning beef and pork. This cannery spent some time in Ohio canning meats.

Hesston, Kansas, is now in the process of building a portable cannery similar to the one built by the Virginia group. There is also the possibility of a cannery being erected at Newton, Kansas, but there is nothing definite as yet on this. Undoubtedly, there are also other groups who are carrying on canning projects of various types.

All these people who are contributing their time and goods are just as much relief workers as those who are privileged to go across to distribute the goods. Without the one, the other could not function.

With the food situation as it is, it is generally felt more advisable to donate and process our own goods than to sell these goods and then use the money to purchase relief goods in bulk. For instance if someone has a beef he would like to contribute for relief it would be better to can this beef, or have it canned, than to sell it and then donate the proceeds to relief. If canned beef could be bought on the open market, the money obtained from the sale of an animal would purchase only half the amount of canned meat that could be obtained by canning this beef in the first place. This is true because the livestock buyers will take out their profit, the packers their profit, and the wholesale and retail merchants another share. A contribution tends to dwindle rapidly as it goes through these various transactions.

Canned meat is desperately needed in European countries, especially in Germany, being rich in protein and a good body building food. Meat canned with plenty of fat is greatly appreciated by these people whose diet is sorely lacking in both fats and proteins. This item is number one on the list as an essential relief food. Canned and dried fruits are second, while canned and dried vegetables come third.

Those Mennonite people who live in urban communities and do not farm can make a very worthwhile contribution to the relief effort in the form of cash or items which they can purchase. A considerable amount of cash is needed in the operation of a program of this size and cash contributions to the general relief fund are greatly appreciated.

Released via Mennonite Central Committee, July 26, 1946.

ORIE MILLERS RETURN

Dear Readers:

Our six week's assignment from M.C.C. to visit the Committee's projects at Gulfport, Paraguay, Brazil, and in Puerto came to a close on returning home from New York Wednesday evening, July.

Although travel conditions in Paraguay and Brazil were most difficult this time on account of unusually wet weather, this visit to our colonies in these two countries was the happiest one so far. These several groups are now rapidly becoming established economically. They are also settled in mind and spirit to make in South America their permanent home. They are all working hard in building homes, churches, schools, hospital and health facilities. Their leadership is again unitedly concerned in establishing their individual and church life along the lines and principles of the nonresistant faith. They are deeply appreciative of all that the North American brotherhood has done and is doing to help them and are eager for our continued counsel. They are eager to cooperate in the needed help to the refugee brethren in Europe.—Orie and Elta Miller, July 26.

to live in these outlying desert villages. One said one day, "It's just like going to dark Africa!" One of our Hopi Christian girls, a graduate nurse, was a red cross nurse together with some eighty white nurses at a base hospital just behind the front lines in the European war. Our hearts ache as we see and realize what the Godless army life has done to her! How true is God's Word, "He gave them the desires of their heart (more money) but sent leanness into their soul"!

When casualty news reached this village the Hopis trembled; some came to church; some insisted on discontinuing dances on Sundays, etc. But now all seems to be forgotten and old heathen ceremonies and dances are revived. Little girls and boys are being initiated into the ceremonies.

Added to all of this, Satan has renewed his efforts to disrupt the work of the Lord through a more comfortable message than that of an eternal judgment upon all who now reject God's great offer of salvation in Christ Jesus.

Brethren, our hearts desire is that you, on the home base, would indeed lift up your hands and voices in unceasing prayer for the faithful Hopi Christians, for the indifferent and backsliding ones, and for the many yet unsaved! Pray for us.

Some years ago eight Kansas ministers volunteered to pray for Tom Mootzka. Within seven months he and his wife were saved. Tom is now almost totally blind, physically, but he loves the Lord and is a constant testimony to those about him. A few weeks ago an old man from Hotevilla brought his dying wife to Tom's house to seek not only shelter and care, but spiritual help. This old woman had, for sometime, secretly desired to become a Christian. Tom preached unto her Jesus Christ. She believed and accepted Jesus as her personal Saviour and called for baptism. The next morning she died. Truly a brand out of the fire!

"I must work the works of Him that sent me, while it is day: the night cometh, when no man can work." John 9:4.

Yours for the salvation of the Hopis,
John and Mabel Suderman

Youth Events

The Methodist church is sponsoring a Crusade for Christ which is a program of evangelization bringing in unchurched people into the church. The Southern California-Arizona Conference, meeting June 26 to July 1, gives the report that in that area some twenty-thousand new members have been received into the church.

* * * *

The Nanking Theological Seminary board in China had its first major meeting since the war in June. A budget was adopted to provide for fifty students in the coming term. Also, a series of short-term courses were planned to give pastors and religious education workers refreshers in the carrying on of their work.

* * * *

With the war's end with the Japanese in China, a vast migration is reported to have begun from the Western inlands back to the Eastern coastal areas. This is causing extreme strains on the facilities in the East as well as all types of lawlessness. Privation is hard on the heels of this condition.

* * * *

The American Bible Society has purchased three carloads of paper to continue its production of Chinese Scriptures. This paper is being shipped to China. In this country the printing of Chinese Scriptures is also continuing. Two thousand Korean Testaments have been shipped and fifty-thousand more are being readied for shipment.

IN MEMORIAM

Mrs. Arthur Siemens, nee Emma Warkentin, was born July 28, 1902, near Buhler, Kansas, and passed away in the Grace Hospital, Hutchinson, July 20. At eighteen she was baptized and received into the membership of the Hoffnungsau Church. In 1921 she was married to Arthur Siemens. He and the following children now mourn her: Mrs. Marvin Schmidt of Buhler; Melvin, recently returned from a relief voyage to Greece; Ruby, R. N., at Grace Hospital, Hutchinson; and Glennis and Marvel at home.

John J. Gaeddert was born May 30, 1866, in Wernersdorf, South Russia. In 1875 he migrated with his parents, John and Elisabeth Baerg Gaeddert, to McPherson County, Kansas. In 1885 John Gaeddert was baptized and received into the membership of the Alexanderwohl Church. In 1892 he married Anna Kliewer with whom he shared life until her death in 1931. Homesteading in Washita County, Oklahoma, they joined the Herold Church in 1902. Later they moved to Hobart where he was in business until health and age caused him to retire. He breathed his last June 28. He is mourned by: Mrs. Henry Duerksen, Hutchinson, Kansas; Mrs. Ed. Dozier, Hobart, Oklahoma; and Mrs. George Schmidt, Clinton, Oklahoma.

Mennonite Biblical Seminary and Bible School

Dr. S. F. Pannabecker, who has taken over the deanship of our Seminary for the coming school year, arrived in Chicago on July 21. He was welcomed by Mrs. Pannabecker and their children as well as other relatives and friends. Dr. Pannabecker has finished his two year service as relief commissioner to China and after a short rest will take over his responsibilities as dean and professor of church history and missions at the Seminary.

The Pannabeckers and their daughter Alice Ruth visited with their children the Richard Pannabeckers and other friends until July 24. They inspected the new Seminary headquarters and made preparations for their future living quarters.

The Seminary Board has purchased the Joyce estate on 4614-20 Woodlawn Ave. It comprises about three-fourths of an acre of land with three brick buildings. The whole place is beautifully landscaped and will accommodate about fifty people, offices, library etc.

Since this institution is a venture of faith and the Lord has provided more than was expected, the school trusts Him also for the future. In order to make the full payment of $45,000 for the estate on or before August 15 our treasury still needs $23,000.

Much more important, however, than the call for finances is the call for consecrated young people who are willing to give their body as a living sacrifice to the Lord. Our school is happy to tell such people that we have room for them. The Lord and His children have provided for the necessary accommodations. We have no doubt that the treasury will be able to make the payments when the time comes.

A folder with pictures of the outside and inside of the buildings and with the most needed information is in the printery and will be ready for distribution in the near future.

Until August 15 all correspondence and gifts are to be sent to our present adderss: 3435 Van Buren, Chicago 24, Illinois. — A. Warkentin man to one full of living water of love. Whoever thirsts again and again is in need of the ability to love. Such an individual can come to love by coming to the point where he sees himself as he truly is and by experiencing through the witness of some Christian the unmerited love of God that saves from sin. To love is never to thirst again, for love is a permanent satisfaction.

Will Never Thirst

Mennonites the World Over

A Unique Family Reunion. Raoul Auernheimer, born in Vienna, became a distinguished playwright, novelist and dramatic critic. Under Hitler he became acquainted with "Dachau" and came to this country in 1939, considering himself about the only Auernheimer anywhere. Inmagine his surprise when at Reedley, California, he was invited to an Auernheimer family reunion attended by forty to fifty members bearing that name. Words failed him when he learned that at an Auernheimer family reunion in Kansas there had been more than a hundred persons with that name. Finally he exclaimed, "Well, my 'relatives' are mushrooming in America, while we are dying out in Europe, and this is a fact!"

The Auernheimers came to America from South Germany three or more generations ago while the father of the writer went to Vienna. The famous writer says: "My 'relatives' in America are all Mennonites . . . The Mennonites are peace-loving people. To put it bluntly: they are pacifists, and in World War II their young men were one hundred per cent conscientious objectors."." (American-German Review, June, 1946).

China Mission Meeting

Because of the difficulties involved with the reopening of our Mission Field in China, the Foreign Mission Board called a meeting on Saturday, August 3, to discuss the China situation. All former missionaries to China and the officers of the Women's Mission Society were asked to meet with the Board members in the basement of the First Mennonite Church at Newton, Kansas. Rev. S. F. Pannabecker, who has very recently returned from China where he has done relief work for the MCC, presented a report on the situation in China.

New Couple for Moen Copi

The readers will be pleased to hear of the approaching marriage of Miss Marguerite Sprunger to Leonard Wiebe. Mr. Wiebe has been serving in CPS for the past few years and Miss Sprunger has been serving our Board as missionary in Oraibi, Arizona. After their marriage sometime about the middle of September, this couple will serve in our mission station at Moen Copi, Arizona. Let us pray that the Lord may bless this union and the services they will perform among the Indians at Moen Copi.

HEADQUARTERS OFFICE CORNER

The precious promise, "Jesus Christ the same yesterday, and today, and forever," has in its context a reminder that we should not forget our retiring missionaries and ministers of the gospel (Heb. 13:7-8).

The reminder is worded thus: "Remember your leaders, the men who spoke the word of God to you; look back upon the close of their career, and copy their faith." (A New Translation)

Brother P. H. Richert was recently asked whether he received much mail. He replied, "The first month I received a lot of mail." Brother Richert has been in the Bethesda Hospital, Goessel, Kansas, since last February. A card or letter of encouragement would be helpful to him.

Brother P. A. Penner, another of our ardent mission workers, now resting at his home at 108 South Walnut Street, Newton, Kansas, also appreciates letters from his friends.—Walter H. Dyck, Office Manager.

The society membership totals eighty-nine. Nine regular programs, one public program and one return program were presented. A letter was written to Sister Alida Schrag, who is a missionary in India, every month by a member of the Society. Some canning was done in the church basement. Ladies of the society came with pressure cookers and hot water pack cookers to can peaches, vegetables, soup, pork and beef. Money collected during the year amounted to $2,085.22 and was given to Foreign and Home Missions, Puerto Rico, Christmas gifts, C.P.S., Migrant Work, Northern Bible Institution, Newton Clothing Center, Relief, birtday money to Rev. Gering, wedding and Christmas gift to Alida Schrag, and to speakers who came to serve on special occasions.—Reported by Mrs. C. S. Goering.

Accepting Ourselves

by Paul Albrecht

Sooner or later, usually sooner, most of us sense a deep dissatisfaction with ourselves. Sometimes this may be because we have failed to live up to what society or our associates expected of us. More often it is because we have failed to live up to the goal we have set for ourselves. Between our actual selves, with our abilities and circumstances, and our desired selves, as our dreams have pictured us, is such a dispariity that they seem to have no practical relationship. When what we are and what we dearly want to be thus face each other in seemingly hopeless disproportion, inward civil war begins.

The desire to achieve and find useful avenues of self-expression is natural for all of us. One of the glories of man is that he is not so much driven by compulsion as pulled by a picture of desired ends. Ambition, when guided by a sincere desire to be in the will of God, is the springboard of man's Christian efforts. This noble faculty, however, even in the service of religious goals, may be misused. Disruptive tensions result when our ambitions lose touch with reality—when the gap between the actual and desired becomes too wide.

The question arises as to why we have this discouraging feeling that we haven't or cannot hope to live up to our ideals. We may have a feeling of inferiority because there is a real handicap—a physical disadvantage such as lameness or ill health. We may feel we have limited intelligence, unattractive appearance, or a host of other unfortunate attributes. These clear handicaps are frequently turned into humiliations. Or we may feel inferior because of what has been learned as a childhood attitude—brother and sister were favored or we as a child felt unwanted.

Perhaps, we don't have an over-developed sense of our own lack but rather have goals which are impossible for us to obtain. We have freedom within limitations. The child who was found seriously debating whether he wanted to be a man or a woman will grow up to find his possibilities somewhat less boundless than he had supposed. Parents, when they have not realized a cherished ambition, often transplant this goal in children for whom it is not suited.

Sometimes we have set our goals unwisely through no one's fault but our own. We are unwilling to face our own inclinations and even our own limitations. The story is told of a man who had some rather mistaken ideas about himself. He was asked if he ever gave serious thought to his defects. The man replied that whenever he sat down to contemplate his weaknesses, he invariably fell asleep.

When we feel this tension between what we are and what we would like to be, we often mishandle it. Sometimes the "smoke-screen" method is used. Feeling inferior and not wanting others to know it, the shy become aggressive and the timid bluster and brag. We are all familiar with the person who struts rather than

From the editor's point - of - view:

THE RETREAT, which is being planned for the ministers of the General Conference and their wives, ought to be a means whereby these workers can grow together in fellowship. Human beings need to know each other well to enjoy the riches of fellowship. As it is, not far all of the ministerial couples of the General Conference have a close acquaintanceship with each other. Furthermore, intimate fellowship stimulates growth. In close association individuals learn to see each other in rather plain terms, and each individual is enabled to get a better idea of what he is like. As those in the ministry come to see and to confess their common humanity, as well as their unity in Christ, their appreciation for each other grows. By contributing to this fellowship, the retreat will enrich the work of the General Conference.

THE CONFERENCE, held in Cambridge, England, August 4-7 by seventy-five church leaders from some twenty nations, including neutral and former enemy countries, was an important one even though it may not have a great immediate influence on international relations. The primary purpose of this international gathering was "to explore the possibility of coordinating the work now being done in the field of world order by the churches in various nations." It is commonly agreed by most Christians that they have the answer to the world's problems. To bring the answer of Jesus Christ definitely and concretely to the problems that vex world peace and to get that answer accepted by the mass of Christians is a tremendous task. What would we as individuals propose if we sat as delegates in such a conference? In view of the many branches among the Mennonites, what would Mennonite delegates have to suggest in regard to cooperating among nations? In view of the economics of Mennonite Communities, what would Mennonite delegates have to suggest in regard to world trade? How would Mennonites plead for disarmament? When we search our own hearts we may be moved to confess that the task which these church leaders faced was not an easy one. That Christians from the churches of many nations should discuss cooperation in promoting world order seems like a very Christian thing to do. What the great numbers of Christians back home will do about it all is another thing, but maybe the conference is the beginning of somehing greater.

THE ATOMIC BOMB is something so deadly that mankind had better get out of its age-old habit of thinking in the terms of war if it wants to survive. Atomic scientists are telling us that we can expect that every industrialized country will be capable of producing atomic bombs in a few years. Already there are atomic bombs a thousand times more devastating than the one used on Hiroshima. A number of such bombs exploded in the principal cities of a nation would reduce that nation's population very quickly and would blast to bits the economic life of such a part as might be left. We are told that there is no defense against the bomb. And yet our navy men and others go on planning for atomic war as though we could expect to come out of such a war very largely unscathed. There seems to be among the masses of people something of a half conscious hope that somehow we will not have to bear the fury of the atomic bomb, that it will not be us but somebody else. Perhaps, some of this is wishful thinking coupled up with man's habit of warring. It is hard for those who have put much stock in fighting to come to the realization that it all has become such a deadly business, that it had better be given up in favor of something more spiritual. As long as preparation for war holds our attention, we are going to give little attention to the development of relationships which can produce peace. We have all gone astray. America is a wonderful nation, born out of such opportunities as few nations on the earth have experienced. Yet it has its imperfections as our present economic ailments seem to indicate. We are not right in everything: therefore, we need to search our way of life as a nation and confess our shortcomings and make restitutions. We must definitely see where we are wrong. When we can do this sincerely and meaningfully, then Russia may see us as less self-righteous and more worthy. And when that happens Russia may be in more of a mood to learn from us. It appears that smoother working relationships will come when Russia and the United States learn to appreciate something in each other. Finding that something should be more conducive to peaceful relationships than preparing for an atomic war.

walks, with his toes at ten to two and his mouth at twenty past eight.

Then there is the "sour-grapes" method. We act as if what we really desire is undesirable or unethical. In the parable of the talents, the man with one talent convinced himself that his master was unjust and unscrupulous—". . . an hard man, reaping where thou hast not sown, and gathering where thou hast not strawed." Or, we may retreat into day-dreams and phantasy. In this way we can control everything that concerns us. Finally, some of us acknowledge our inferiority in an exaggerated fashion. We are familiar with the person who is always "running himself down." All Sunday School Superintendents have to deal with some of us who refuse to teach a class because there are one or two persons in the church who can do it better than we.

How then are these feelings of personal lack and failure to be handled constructively? The starting point is to know and accept ourselves. God has created his children according to infinitely variable patterns. Besides the many things common to all of us, there are real basic differences between us. There are the naturally dominant and the naturally submissive, the perfectionists who never get anything right and the rationalizers who never do anything wrong, the passive whose ideals are privacy, calmness, and security, and the active whose ideals are power, popularity, and applause. Paul states it in this way, "For the body is not one member, but many." Furthermore, this variability is necessary and desirable, "If the whole body were an eye, where were the hearing?"

If then in the body of Christ there are eyes, ears, feet, and hands, it behooves us to discover which we are. In order to make effective use of ourselves in the Kingdom, we must first know ourselves. This is an individual project. The preconceived ideas of families and friends may only confuse the issue. It takes courage to take time, perhaps with pencil and paper, to face ourselves—not only our limitations, but also our inclinations. Mistakes at this point of departure, however, carry heavy penalties. It is assuredly difficult but necessary to try with God's help to obtain self-knowledge. Working in cooperation with Him, each of us can learn to know this person called "I."

Perchance we do acquire a measure of understanding concerning ourselves. Some may be inclined to say, "Well, this is what I am and this is all that can be expected of me!" But, wait! This is only the point of departure—not the place to end with complacent folded hands but the place to begin. After we discover ourselves we confront one of life's fundamental responsibilities—what do we do with the ten, five, or one talent that we have.

Our lives are landscaping projects. We are given our plot of ground—be the soil rich, rocky, or dry—and we are to see what can be done with it. Some of us may feel we have been unfairly treated when our plot was given to us. It might be wiser to feel that we have been given special opportunities. Weaknesses often give impetus to effort—" . . . for my strength is made perfect in weakness." History is filled with examples of the "runts of the litter" making the most development. Peter's shallow impetuousness when constructively handled became Peter's driving enthusiasm.

We may feel that the effort is hardly worthwhile since we have so little in our lives that seems valuable. However, all the members of the body are essential. We are not the whole but we need to be whole parts. Some times it seems to many as if men's lives were bits of toys thrown down by some irresponsible baby upon a nursery floor. But the bits are more like pieces of a jigsaw puzzle. They all fit. Each needs the other. Rough edges and queer angles have an important place. "But now hath God set the members every one of them in the body, as it hath pleased him."

Although we often falter, in our best moments we know we should mobilize and dedicate all our resources. We must use them as best we can, knowing that in this world or in another, the God who has given us our talents and who regards them jealously as among the assets and treasures of the Kingdom, will require them at our hands.

—Paul A. Albrecht has been serving as Assistant Director of the Mennonite Civilian Public Service program since last May. Mr. Albrecht began his C.P.S. experience by going into the Goshen Relief Training Unit. From there he went to camp Grottoes and later to a mental hospital unit in Rhode Island. After this he became educational director at the Three Rivers, California, camp. From there he went to Akron to do research work in the history of C.P.S. This he gave up when asked to serve in his present capacity.

By Cornelius Krahn

A COMMUNICATION FROM HAMBURG

In a recent letter Rev. and Mrs. Otto Schowalter have related some of their experiences during the war. Rev. Schowalter has been pastor of the Mennonite Church of Hamburg-Altona for many years, succeeding the well known H. van der Smissen. While he was in service Mrs. Schowalter carried on the work. Both of them grew up in South Germany. Now Rev. Schowalter has returned and continues his work in the church and in the city that has experienced most severe destruction. The following lines give us a glimpse of the conditions, but to get a better understanding of what bombing has done to some of the cities one should read Vera Brittain's "Massacre by Bombing."

The Need in Hamburg

". . . . We have many refugees here from the East. Last summer I started to compile lists of those coming from West Prussia, Poland, and Russia. The first ones were able to bring some possessions with them, but those that are coming now have nothing and are half starved. We would so much like to help them, and have done as much as we could. But we are in need of clothing, linens, dishes and concentrated foods. Our district gets some food from Sweden. The Protestant Church has distributed much food, which is very scarce, in our city. We had visitors here twice from the MCC, but it is seemingly not so easy to get supplies into the British Zone. I understand that food packages can be sent now. It would be such a tremendous help if we could supply the members of our church with some food and the refugees in the country with some clothing and dishes (pots, plates and cups). Today we had with us one of the formerly wealthiest estate owners from Prussia. How happy his wife was to get one plate from us. Many large families have only one or two cups or plates. But I am afraid it will be hard to send these items. If only our manufacturing plants and industries could work we would soon be supplied with these items . . ."

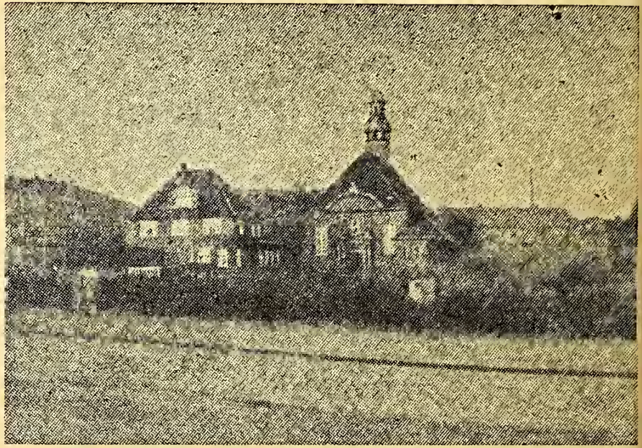
The Mennonite Church Spared

"We have many reasons to be thankful that we may live in our own home even though it is partly destroyed. From the Holstenbahnhof up to our place there is not a house left . . . Our Mennonite Church buildings have been damaged badly but comparing them with the heaps of rubble around us it is nothing. Now the buildings are being repaired. We had fire in them in 1943 and the windows had been shattered many times before we closed them with boards and paper. Now the rooms are brightening up again, but as yet not in all houses . . ."

"With hearty greetings, Your Schowalters"

Canadian C.O.'s To Be Released. August 14 has been set as the date when the service of all Canadian conscientious objectors to war is to terminate. It is generally known that while some Canadian C.O.'s did alternative service similar to those in the United States, others continued their regular occupations and made regular specified contributions to the Red Cross. The Dominion Department Minister, Arthur MacNamara, has said, "We are proud of the achievements of our C. O.'s because they have done much work and sacrificed much money."

Russia Willing to Relieve Denmark of German Refugees. The Danish Foreign Minister, Gustav Rasmussen announced at a press conference that Stalin had told him that Russia was willing to take half of the two hundred thousand German refugees from Denmark into the Russian Zone of Germany if the Western Allies would be willing to do the same. Denmark has informed London, Paris and Washington about this matter.



The Mennonite Church of Hamburg-Altona

During World War I this church, parsonage, library and other buildings were completed, and during World War II they were severely damaged. That they were not completely shattered like buildings in blocks all around them was due probably to the fact that they were surrounded by vacant lots. In a previous article we have seen that the church formerly occupied by this congregation, located in the heart of the city, was completely leveled to the ground. (B. Harder's Mission)

Songs in the Night

"And when they had sung an hymn they went out into the Mount Olives." This is the only record of our Lord singing when he was on earth. It was just as he was starting out to Gethsemane before the darkest hours of his life. He knew the agony and saw the cross that stood before Him. Yet he sang for the joy of doing the Father's will. Paul and Silas Sang in the middle of night in the prison with joy for the reward and glory they saw with their spiritual eyes. Even today we see people of this spirit. An old missionary lady in Champa Leper Asylum in India sings several times at night. One of her friends asked why she does so. The reply was that the songs at night give her strength to get up in the morning and do another days work. Are we following the footsteps of our Lord and his children to sing and praise God in joy and sorrows.—(The foregoing was written by Dr. Mrs. Samuel of Jagdeeshpur, C.P., India. Mrs. Samuel is a native Christian and serves as a doctor.)

Our New Seminary and Bible School Home in Chicago

The purchase of the property at 1614-20 South Woodlawn Avenue in Chicago is one of satisfaction to the members of the Board of Trustees, faculty, and others interested in the Mennonite Biblical Seminary and Bible School. Ever since the opening of school last fall, a constant search has been maintained to locate a property which would be suitable for a home for our institution. It was soon evident that such places were very scarce. Apartment houses could have been purchased, but possession would have required court action to evict tenants. Such a step our Board never considered.

It was thus necessary to turn to larger private homes to find a place which we could utilize. A number of places were considered. In each case it was necessary to spend considerable time in investigating many things about the building and the location. At two places, which the Board considered, obstacles were encountered which ruled out a possible purchase. This was the factor of Chicago Zoning, as those places were in restricted districts which barred the establishment of a school.

Finally we were led to the consideration of the property on South Woodlawn. Here the building was not as elaborate as either of the others, yet good and substantial. The size of the tract of land is large enough to erect other buildings if so desired sometime in the future. It is also in an unrestricted district which allows use of the building without limitation. There are two other brick buildings on this property beside the main residence. One is the two-story home of the caretaker which includes two apartments and room enough for the library. The other is the large two-story garage which offers possibilities for remodeling into a number of apartments. The price of this property is also less than that of the others considered, and we were able to make the purchase for forty-five thousand dollars.

For having been able to secure this satisfactory property, we feel like praising God for leading us in the search for a home. Many times it seemed that we were not getting anywhere but we kept on praying and trusting. Finally God led us to this place, and His leading was such that after having viewed and considered other properties, we can better appreciate the one we now have.

So much interest has been expressed in the Seminary and Bible School and so many prayers have been offered by the many friends of the school, that the Board feels confident that this purchase price can soon be raised. Contributions have already been made for this purpose and other gifts are already promised. The Board is asking for the help of our many friends in a financial way to pay for the new Seminary home. We truly feel that the purchase of this property is another step in the establishment of the institution on a secure basis to serve the cause of Christ as God leads us.

We would also like to announce at this time that Rev. J. T. Neufeld of the Mennonite Bible Mission will serve the institution on half time as business manager. Arrangements have been made with the Home Mission Board whereby Brother Neufeld will give part time to the school and use Seminary students to aid in the work of the Mission. We greatly appreciate the cooperation of the Home Mission Board in this respect. All gifts for the current fund, or for the purchase of the new home, should be sent to: Mennonite Biblical Seminary & Bible School, 4614 Woodlawn Ave. Chicago 15, Illinois. Brother Neufeld thus takes over much of the work which Elmer Baumgartner, as treasurer, has done up to this time, though Brother Baumgartner continues in the office of treasurer,

The new home of the Seminary and Bible School is so located as to make possible our continued affiliation with Bethany Biblical Seminary. It will, however, be necessary to work out ways of transportation between that institution and our new home. Bethany can be reached by public transportation in about an hour's time. Automobile travel takes about twenty-five minutes. When one considers the long distances that thousands travel daily in Chicago, the factor of travel does not loom too large. But it is one of those aspects of the housing situation that it was not possible to eliminate.

We need your continued prayers for the Seminary. Pray for Brother Warkentin who has given us such loyal and consecrated service during the first year of our present Seminary work; for our dean, Dr. S. F. Pannebecker, and our business manager, Brother Neufeld, and for all others connected with the school. The more the Lord is blessing us by giving us buildings and faculty members, the more we feel our responsibility to Him and His cause. The outlook for students for next year is very good, and we pray that their association with our Seminary and Bible School may continue to be in that Christ and Bible centered, consecrated, scholarly, prayerful spirit which we want to be the very heart of the institution. Pray that this may continue to be so, and be so in an increasing measure.—A. S. Rosenberger, President, Board of Trustees; J. N. Smucker, Secretary.

The Story of My Life

(The following article sent in by Brother Thiessen from India is very interesting, written by one of the boys in high school by the name of William who is nineteen years old. He has been a leper but is now well. — Howard G. Nyce)

I was born in a small village which population is not more than one and a half hundred. They are all farmers. I am of the caste of "Gara"; — who are used to play the Indian musical instruments. But my father did not play. He was not fond of such "Baja" (musical instrument). In such circumstances I was brought up till six years. My parents were poor and still they are in the same condition.

When I was six years old my father became a leper. My father was admitted in the leper home of Champa. And my mother, I do not know where she had gone. But suppose in summer vacation I was brought to Mouhadih where there was a boys' boarding conducted by Rev. John Thiessen. There were at least thirteen boys staying in the boarding. I was very sorry when I left my parents, and I thought and thought that—why did they leave me? But in the friendship of the boys I forgot them. I was very ambitious to read (study). Because, I saw in my village that the boys were reading something and they had slates. Also, I wanted to have that and I got it also and then I began to read and still I am reading. There were many difficulties in reading. Learning education I was working other work also. I was very happy at that time. But I thought of my past days and present days, how I became a man, this is all the kindness and blessings and grace of God. I thank Him for His kindness.

For six years I studied very well. After that I also became a leper. I was very sorry when I got myself in such condition. I was about to slay myself with a sharp and pointed knife one night. But I thought that it is sin which is written about in the Bible. Many people comforted me,—telling that it is God's will to suffer trouble (DO not do such damaging thing). Then I became a patient. Before I had not peace in my heart. But the days went on and I was getting better from my bad condition. Meanwhile, I began to think of my heavenly doctor who can cure every disease, I was sure that I would get rid of this bad disease. Even, though I was in very bad condition, yet I was so happy that I can not tell. But my character was very bad. Afterwards I improved my character and I was discharged from the leper home. I studied two years more. I thank God that he has given me good chance to study in the 9th class. If I would not have been brought to Mouhadih what then would I have become? I do not know; and I thank God that he made me a very interesting leper, because if not I would have not known Him. I thank God that he saved me from that dangerous life. And showed me eternal life. All can not be written even in a book of my life.

Elmer Dicks Describe Trip to Africa

Dear Friends in Christ:

The day for which we had been praying so long finally arrived and we boarded the M. S. Gripsholm for the land to which God has called us for service. We left Jersey City January 10, 1946. The ocean voyage was a pleasant one; the ocean was exceptionally calm for that time of the year, we were told.

We soon found that we were not the only missionaries aboard the ship. There were about eighty other missionaries and about thirty-five misisonary children bound for various points in the Near East and Africa. The fellowship was uplifting and the experiences as told by some of the older missionaries were educational—giving us a grand introduction to the new work which confronted us.

After stopping at Naples one day we arrived at Alexandria, Egypt, January 26 but were not allowed to disembark until the next day. One of the first impressions that we got of Egypt was its poverty which was evident everywhere. The people on the dock and everywhere else were dressed in rags and very few more wore any shoes in spite of the fact that it was quite cold. There was much shouting, fighting, bickering, and begging everywhere. All were fighting for a chance to earn a few "piastres" in order to keep body and soul together. Noticing immediately that we were Americans they began to flock around us and follow us like a pack of hungry wolves. They have heard so much of the wealth of America during this last war that they have the opinion that all Americans' pockets are bulging with money for which they have no use.

About fifty missionaries who were traveling under the American Express disembarked at Alexandria, so we were all taken through Egyptian customs as one unit which simplified that very much. We took a train from Alexandria, and we arrived at Cairo at midnight where the American Express had reserved rooms for us in a hotel.

The first concern of all the missionaries was to get further transportation, and much time was spent in investigating every possibility. We soon found that there were no prospects for an early departure from Cairo. A group of missionaries under the Southern Presbyterian Board, who are our nearest neighbors to the East, had been waiting for passage from Cairo since December.

A Place of Rest and Re-creation for Your Pastor and His Wife

THE DOCK
METHODIST CAMP ON WEST OKOBOJI LAKE
H-294

For the first time in the history of the General onference we are privileged to have a retreat for all inisters and missionaries and their wives. At the last ssion of the General Conference several resolutions ere passed which prepared the way for this new enture.

Resolution No. 47: "We recommend that the lead-rs in the General Conference dedicate themselves new to the teaching and experience of the founda-onal fact of regeneration through Jesus Christ and e resulting principles of conduct for which our fa-ers sacrificed so dearly."

Resolution No. 76: "We recommend Ministerial etreats where one of the main items of discussion nd consideration be the question of our Mennonite iblical position of peace and nonresistance, both now nd in the future."

The aims and purposes of this retreat are fourfold: 1) To provide for spiritual fellowship and growth hich is Christ-centered and Biblical in content. (2) o foster a spirit of fellowship and understanding among our ministers and missionaries. (3) To serve as a workshop where problems are studied in the light of God's Word. (4) To provide for a period of relaxation and recreation.

This retreat will be held on the Methodist Camp Grounds located beside the beautiful West Okoboji Lake, near Spirit Lake, Iowa, from August 29 to September 5. The expenses for these seven days, in addition to traveling expenses, will amount to $15.00 per person.

Perhaps your pastor may be reluctant to leave his flock and a word of encouragement from the church or lay-member may be all he needs. A few of the churches have encouraged their pastors by offering to pay all or part of the expenses incurred.

It is our prayer and sincere desire that this retreat may be blessed by our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. We covet your prayers for a spiritual and soul-stirring retreat.—For The Retreat Committee, by Ronald von Riesen

Since there were quite a group of us who were going approximately to the same area we began investigating the possibility of chartering a plane and finally succeeded in chartering a B.O.A.C. and one plane load went to Luluabourg, Congo Belge, from where they scattered to their various stations. When we tried to recharter the plane, since there was another plane load waiting, we were not successful. Since Luluabourg is only about 165 miles from Charlesville, our head station, and since it took the plane only three half days to cover that distance it made this mode of traveling very inviting. The overland route to which we had to resort finally covered that same distance in five weeks.

One ambition I have always had since my boyhood was to visit the land of Palestine. Since we were quite certain that we would have to stay in Cairo at least three weeks, a group of us began to investigate the possibility of a Palestinian tour. Seventeen of us finally made arrangements to take a six-day tour to the Holy Land.

As we entered Palestine we soon noticed the marked contrast between conditions in Palestine and those in Egypt. There is no evidence of progression in Egypt with the exception of a few changes that Western civilization has brought in. But this type of life is beyond the reach of the vast majority of the public. The children born into a poor family must remain poor and uneducated without any prospect while those born into a rich family have all the advantages and authority. In contrast we noticed the progession in Palestine where the homeless European Jew has fled for refuge and has caused the barren waste lands, the steep rocky mountain slopes, and the swampy valleys to yield to his ceaseless effort in making the country self-supporting. There are the modern villages and cities everywhere that have been built in about the last twenty years. There are the large irrigation projects and also the swamp draining programs which are of recent orgin. The fields were promising a bountiful harvest and the young citrus orchards were loaded with their ripe fruit. In the past centuries Palestine has depended mainly upon imported products. Today she is almost entirely self-supporting and within five years will be seeking her share in the world's markets for her own grown and manufactured products. This is the first year that they have been able to obtain any shipping space to export citrus fruits. She will be able to export about 10 percent of her crop to Europe. The opinion voiced on every side was that Palestine can safely absorb all the Jewish population left in Europe. Many of the refugees fleeing there have no passports nor visas. When we questioned as to what they did with such unwelcomed immigrants they shrugged their shoulders: "What can we do? We might as well shoot them on the spot as to send them back". They could no longer live in Europe so they might as well die trying to enter Palestine. When some of the plans for the future of Palestine were related to us we could not help but see that behind it all is the mighty hand of the Eternal God as He is bringing this age to a close and is again dealing with His chosen people.

We finally left Cairo February 19 enroute to our field of service. After seventeen days of traveling by trains and river steamers we arrived at Juba in the Egyptian Sudan. Since the Nile was so low we had to travel the last part of the way to Juba by motor cars.

In Juba we hired a car to take us as fas as Aba, Congo Belge, where we went through our final customs procedure. Upon arrival in Aba we were informed that we had plane reservations from Aba to Stanleyville and from Stanleyville to Leopoldville. Since there is no transportation of any kind directly through the Congo we must go around either by the Western or the Eastern route. To our disappointment the plane did not come on the promised date. We were told that it would come the next day but then we received a telegram saying that bad weather had forced him back. He promised to come the next day. Thursday morning dawned with a heavy overcast sky and a storm threatening. Finally we got word that the plane could not come through. We finally gave up the air trip and hired a car to Stanleyville. After two and one-half days of traveling we arrived in Stanleyville but too late to keep our plane reservation to Leopoldville. We found by experience that traveling here in the Congo is more expensive by car than by plane. The car, a '41 Mercury was in good condition mechanically and the roads over which we traveled were not bad. It was quite a scenic road as it wound its way up and down through the valleys and over the hills. The roadside was lined with timber and jungle. There were also many native villages, a sight to which we had already become accustomed on our Nile trip. We kept our eyes open for wild animals but saw nothing but a few monkeys. While on the Nile we saw many hippopotamuses and crocckodiles.

The first thing Monday morning we began investigating possibilities for the continuation of our journey. Our plans were to go to Leopoldville by plane or Congo river boat and then go up the Kasai river to Charlesville by river steamer. We found that the first plane possibility was April 28. There was a boat going down the Congo with mail and was to leave March 29 but all their space was sold. Another boat, a freighter, was leaving March 22 but it also had no space. Se we began investigating the possibility of a different route. We finally managed to get reservations on a plane leaving

The Beginning Voluntary Service Program

By Elmer Ediger

This summer the General Conference had its first official voluntary services project. Nine young people gave their time to extension of the Mennonite Bible Mission efforts in the city of Chicago. In February, 1946, the General Conference Executive Committee, with the recommendation of the Boards concerned, designated the Peace Committee and Young People's Union as responsible for beginning and developing voluntary services projects sponsored by the General Conference. A Voluntary Services Committee has been formed. It makes plans, gives publicity, accepts applications, and gives general supervision of the project. Albert Gaeddert represents the Peace Committee, Elmer Ediger, the Young People's Union and Carl Lehman is the third member.

Projects might conceivably be under different boards—Home Missions, Foreign Missions, Relief, Education, Peace. Boards may recommend projects or the Voluntary Service Committee might ask the boards to sponsor certain projects. Whichever board offers the project, uses the volunteers, will likely take the greater share of travel, maintenance, and allowance expenses.

At the February meeting of joint boards, the V. S. Committee and the Home Mission Board agreed on the 1946 Voluntary Service project in connection with the Mennonite Bible Mission in Chicago. The Home Mission Board granted a budget of six hundred dollars for this purpose, outlined in general the nature of the project, and asked Rev. John J. Neufeld of the Mennonite Bible Mission to work out the details with the V. S. Committee.

In May publicity on the project was sent to all the G. C. churches in the U. S. A mimeograph letter gave a general explanation and a Summer Service folder described this General Conference project as well as other Mennonite Summer Service opportunities. This joint publicity was to encourage a spirit of cooperation with other Mennonite groups rather than competition. The Old Mennonite Church sponsored projects for about thirty young people, and the M.C.C. for about seventy.

Now we are in a position to evaluate to some extent this experiment. Should the General Conference Voluntary Services Committee offer similar and more such opportunities? Reports from Chicago members are very encouraging. As yet the idea is new in our churches and more explaining and challenging will need to be done. Time and talent given during this time of war does seem to indicate that there are "servants" if the "need" is explained and there is the "service opportunity." Can we visualize how much further our church could extend its witness if these three-month or one-year volunteers were utilized. We pray God may lead us as a church to accept a great opportunity.

What is Our Concept of Missions?

by Carl Lehman

(The following article was written in reply to the question: "Has C.P.S. enlarged our concept of missions?" The answer is written in the light of the author's experience in Puerto Rico.)

I believe it has. I know it has enlarged the concept of those of us who have spent part of our CPS life in Puerto Rico. We have come to realize that when we choose CPS we put into concrete action a part of the faith that is in us. We are called upon to take our Christianity out of the realm of theory and theology and give it a chance to work out in our lives. Then as the everyday life of CPS with its temptations, frustrations, sneers and taunts becomes an actual experience in our Christian living and as we become strengthened in our convictions when we put them into practice and see them work, our confidence in the Christian life as lived and taught by our Saviour is increased and becomes a very part of our being.

It is inevitable then as Christianity has gotten more of us and as we have gotten more of the length and depth and breadth of Christianty that we should gain an enlarged concept of missions. In times past when missionaries talked about medical work and other social services in connection with missions we would eye them with suspicion. We could scarcely see what these had to do with preaching the gospel. There are still churches today which condemn such expressions of the complete Christian life as being the "social gospel." Most of these groups, however, were very inconsistent during the war, for they forgot that their outright endorsement of the war and wholehearted church support of militarism was an engagement in social and secular activity on a scale larger than the preaching of the so called "social gospel" ever had been.

The danger that we who have been in CPS should make of Christianity a mere "social gospel" does not seem so great. In the first place we know too much about the difficulties of living closely together, and of the sacrifices inherent in living a life of service to expect large-scale work of that nature done by people who have not had their lives transformed by the power of God. And people who have had their lives transformed by the power of God are not likely to go on the mission field without wanting to bring this transforming power to the people whom they serve.

For many years we have understood that a man can be a wonderful Christian—a pillar in the church—and be a farmer, or a carpenter, or perhaps a business man. In fact most of our churches are made up of just such men. What we have been slow to understand is that a church which endorses farming, building houses, and merchandising for its members can doubly endorse work which has as its objective the social betterment of our less fortunate fellow men. And if our best Christians can be good farmers why could not they also be social workers or doctors?

The point is simply this, we believe that the Christian life means that all of our life has been transformed and made new through Christ, and as a Christian all of life is a part of our Christian life. It is when we express our complete Christian life to other people of other lands that we truly bring to them Christianity. It is then that we "so make our lights shine that others may see our good works and glorify our Father which is in Heaven." It is then that we can tell them that they too can have their lives transformed through the power of the Son of God. It is then that missions take on a new and enlarged meaning. We found this true in Puerto Rico and see no reason why it should not also be true in other places. Perhaps if missionaries in Java had followed such a pattern, the fate of missions on that island would not be what it is today. — CPS Supplement.

Looking at People of Other Races

By Dr. Melvin Gingerich

Mennonites have been pioneers. They were the first group in modern history to advocate separation of church and state, to insist upon freedom of conscience, and to condemn war as entirely un-Christian. They were also pioneers in the field of race relations. Plockhoy's constitution of 1663 for the Mennonite colony on the Delaware, prohibited slavery and later a Mennonite joined in the first written protest against slavery in America. Slaveholding was forbidden Mennonite peoples living in the Southern states, and perhaps no religious group has as clear a record as they had during the entire slavery period up to the Civil War.

It may be that we have been too content to rest upon our reputation and that we have not asked ourselves seriously what is required of our generation if we too are to be pioneers. We are no longer pioneers in our protest against war. Thousands have made common cause with us in this crusade. A leader of another church recently said that this and the next generation must face the task of spiritual pioneering in the field of race relations.

It would seem that all groups who take seriously the New Testament teaching on loving all mankind will seek means of expressing that love towards those of other races and cultures. Race prejudices and anti-Semitism can have no influence in their midst. They will act as if they really believed that in Christ there is no "Jew nor Greek, no bond nor free." In fact, a group that has faith in such ideals will have a positive program to challenge the best talent and the greatest devotion found in their midst.

There can be no question but that "There are things to do" as Lillian Smith suggests, and many of the suggestions that she has to offer might easily be adapted to our own use. Here, then are ten points which are offered as a tentative program of action. Though not complete this list should get us moving in the right direction.

1. Have every person establish a friendship with a member of a race other than his own.
2. Pledge yourself to read several good books each year written by members of other races, in which they present their point of view of the race issue.
3. Pledge yourself never to use nicknames or derogatory names in referring to those of another race.
4. Schedule speakers of other races to speak in your community.
5. Help establish scholarships in our church schools for those of other races.
6. Help promote evangelistic work among the non-Christians of other races and take these converts into our so-called "white" congregations. (This is being done in some Mennonite churches.)
7. Write your Congressman encouraging him to take action which will guarantee to the non-whites the same civil liberties that the whites enjoy.
8. Write letters commending radio stations and newspapers that are going out of their way to be fair to those of other races.
9. Contribute money to those organizations that are attempting a Christian solution to the race problem.
10. Search the scripture diligently for guidance in the best method to show our love to these black and yellow neighbors, and then pray sincerely for wisdom and courage in following our best light. — CPS Supplement.

A Defender of the Infirm Passes

The death has occurred at Bielefeld, Germany, of r. Fritz von Bodelschwingh, esteemed over a large art of the Christian world for his remedial work for e mentally and physically disabled and, more reently, for his courageous stand against Hitler on bealf of the infirm whom Hitler would have liquidated.

He was the youngest son of the founder of the Colony of Mercy", established fifty years ago for pileptics, mentally deficient and incurables.

Before the war Dr. Bodelschwingh was elected eichsbischof by the Evangelical Church, but Hitler ersonally refused to accept the appointment, and it as then that a renegade Reichsbischof was set up by he Nazis, who was never accepted by the German onfessional Church.

During the war Dr. Bodelschwingh was summoned y the Nazis to give up the greatest proportion of is patients to be put to death, in accordance with e Nazi programme. Dr. von Bodelschwingh refused o do so, and went to Berlin in order to persuade Hitr's doctor not to allow this. Hitler was infuriated, and rdered that he should be arrested by the Gestapo, an rder which was never carried out for fear of an inurrection in Westphalia.

A British chaplain has described the memorial ervice and the procession to the cemetery as deeply oving. He laid a wreath at the grave on behalf of e British churches. Telling of the singing, he states at he will never forget the beautiful singing of the pileptics. At the grave, he says, the clergy stood round in ranks, the largest body of clergy he had ever een in Germany, and the sight was memorable. "I ave never seen such an assemblage of men who bore e signs of hard fighting; it was really a magnificent ght; one did feel that here was something of terrific trength."—The British Weekly

Student Arrives From Paraguay

Arriving in the United States Tuesday, July 30, was Jacob Friesen from the Chaco, Paraguay. The two-day trip from Asuncion, Paraguay, to New York culminated a seven-month wait for the completion of arrangements for the trip. Jacob left his home in the Chaco January 12. Until July 28, he waited in Asuncion for arrangements for his entry into the U. S. as a student. He then flew to New York City in two days. From there he went to Akron, Pennsylvania, to the M.C.C. headquarters. Six days after leaving Paraguay he arrived in Newton, Kansas.

Jacob will go to Freeman, South Dakota, to attend school there first. He will get his high school training there. At present he is able to speak high and low German proficiently. He has also learned an ample amount of English and Spanish during the last six months.

At the Western District C. E. convention held at Eden church, Moundridge, August 4, Jacob spoke telling of his experiences. He stated that, had he not known that he was awake, he would be sure that he was in a dream because of all that has occurred in the brief period of a week.

The Monkey's Disgrace

Three monkeys sat in a cocoanut tree
Discussing things as they're said to be.
Said one to the others, "Now listen, you two;
There's a certain rumor that can't be true;
That man descended from our noble race.
The very idea is a disgrace.

No monkey ever deserted his wife,
Starved her babies and ruined her life;
And you've never known a mother monk
To leave her babies with others to bunk,
Or pass them on from one to another,
Till they scarcely know who is their mother.

And another thing you'll never see;
A Monk build a fence 'round a cocoanut tree
And let the cocoanuts go to waste,
Forbidding all other monks to taste,
Why, if I put a fence around a tree,
Starvation will force you to steal from me.

Here's another thing a monk won't do;
Go out at night and get in a stew.
Or use a gun or club or knife
To take some other monkey's life.
We're fully convinced, without any fuss,
Man has descended, but not from us.

Youth Events

Under definite consideration by the Western District young people are several sites for retreat grounds. The most recent site under consideration is located near Camp Wood, the Y.M.C.A. camp used by the Western District for a number of years for their retreats. At the business meeting of the Western District C. E. it was decided to make a definite decision about the one site under consideration by next October.

Dr. Matthews, Dean of St. Paul's, London, says: "Amid all the ruin and desolation, there are two creative forces which Hitler was unable to destroy—the Church and the universities. The best news out of Germany is that they are alive and vigorous. With wise assistance by the Allies, they can lead the German people into a new era."

Death from tuberculosis among Negroes in Chicago is six times that among whites, as against a national ratio of three and a half to one.

Of the twenty-four Anglican Churches in Tokyo and its suburbs before the war, only three remain. All others were burned.

Protestant missions in China face an era of "superlative opportunity," declares Dr. J. Leighton Stuart, President of Yenching University at Peiping, China. "There will be no other religion in China in the future that will have any life in it. It will be Christianity or irreligion," he declares.

In Seattle a group representing many interests including the Y.M.C.A., Y.W.C.A., the Society for Mental Hygiene and others, report that in the United States forty-five million people use alcohol, two million five hundred thousand being excessive drinkers.

At Brilliant, B.C., fifty-one delegates met to form the Union of Doukhobors of Canada, and resolved to establish contacts with other pacifist groups in order to "offer each other a brotherly hand and to unite solidly in the struggle against militarism and all other forms of armed violence."

Preliminary steps were taken last year to form an Australian section of the World Council of Churches, and further progress is expected to be made this year by the seven major denominations of Protestantism in the Commonwealth.

The United Jewish Appeal announces in New York that it aims to raise one hundred million dollars this year, trebling the sum raised in 1945, to be spent in restoring normal living to the fourteen hundred thousand Jews still surviving in Europe.

Germany lost seven million, four hundred thousand in killed, permanently injured or permanently incapacitated by illness, during the war and its immediate aftermath, says Rt. Hon. Clement Attlee.

Ultimatum for Man

By Peggy Pond Church

Now the frontiers are all closed.
There is no other country we can run away to;
There is no ocean we can cross over.
At last we must turn and live with one another.

We cannot escape this any longer.
We cannot continue to choose between good and evil,
The good for ourselves, the evil for our neighbor.
We must all bear the equal burden.

At last we who have been running away must turn and face it;
There is no room left for hate in the world we must live in.
Now we must learn love. We can no longer escape it.
We can no longer escape from one another.

Love is no longer a theme for eloquence,
Or a way of life for a few to choose whose hearts can decide it.
It is the sternest necessity; the unequivocal ultimatum.
There is no way out. There is no country we can flee to;
There is no man on earth who must not face this task now.

MENNONITE AID SECTION NOTES

esettlement of Displaced Mennonites

The Mennonite Aid Section frequently receives tters of inquiry from United States and Canadian latives of displaced Mennonite people. There is also general interest on the part of those who do not ave displaced relatives but who have a deep concern at we as North American Mennonites help reibilitate those of our household of faith who have en uprooted by World War II.

Displaced Mennonite people are but a part of the ast number in the same circumstances. The United ations Special Committee on Refugees has estimated at there are at least 1,678,000 displaced people in urope alone. The scope of the problem is so large at the Economic and Social Council of the United ations has recommended that an International Reigee Organization (IRO) be set up to provide for eir maintenance and eventual resettlement. The nited Nations will discuss establishing IRO when it eets in General Assembly in New York this Sepember. The parliaments of participating nations must atify any organization recommended by UNO, hence is unlikely that an international refugee agency will ctively operate before 1947. There will undoubtedly e opportunity for such organizations as MCC to work ithin the international framework established and to ore specifically help rehabilitate Mennonite people. is possible even now to function in a limited way ough the future will probably remove many of the resent obstacles.

It appears that the principle places of refuge for isplaced Mennonites will continue to be the United tates, Canada and South America. There has been o general migration thus far due to the scarcity of cean transport and the inability of governments to gree on how the DP problem should be handled. igration possibilities in the three aforenamed places t present are:

The United States

President Truman directed that immigration quotas e filled though there is to be no easing of requireents for immigration. He also directed that for the me being efforts be concentrated in the American ones of occupation in Europe. Each person who aplies for immigration has to be approved by the U. S. onsul in his area as to health, loyalty, and the proability that he will not become a public charge. They re screened by Army Intelligence and by Public ealth Service as well as by representatives of the nmigration and Naturalization Service. Each must ave an affidavit that he will not become a public arge; this is usually given by American relatives r friends who are United States citizens.

The Mennonite Aid Section suggests that persons ith relatives who wish to come to the United States nd who reside in the U. S. Zones of occupation send e Akron office their relatives' names, country of irth and latest address. The American Zone of Occuation in Germany includes the following provinces: avaria (except a very small part which is in the rench Zone), most of Wurttemberg, Hesse-Darmstadt, most of Hesse-Nassau, the northern part of Baden and part of Thuringia. Within this zone are many well known and important cities; among them are Darmstadt, Frankfurt am Main, Fulda, Karlsruhe, Mannheim, Munich, Nurnberg, Regensburg, Stuttgart, Wiesbaden, Wurzburg. The American Zone of Austria is in the northwestern section of that country and consists of the province of Salzburg and that part of the province of Upper Austria which is situated on the right bank of the Danube.

Canada

At the present time one of the classes of immigrants admitted to Canada is "close relatives of any person legally admitted to and resident in Canada and in a position to maintain such relatives." With reference to this group, an Order in Council (No. 2070) issued May 28, 1946 authorizes the immigration of the following relatives of Canadian residents: wife, unmarried son (under 18 years of age), unmarried daughter (any age), mother, father, unmarried son (under 18 years of age), unmarried niece or nephew, who is under the age of 16 and whose parents are both dead. The Canadian government, like that of Australia and New Zealand, wishes to defer the immigration of refugees and displaced persons until Canadian ex-servicemen and their overseas wives and children may be brought to Canada. The Standing Committee on Immigration and Labor has shown a sympathetic attitude toward organizations and individuals who are pleading for extension of immigration policy, and it appears that such extension is likely in the not-too-distant future.

South America

Various South American countries have shown willingness to receive immigrants from Europe, particularly those who follow agricultural or industrial occupations. The government of Paraguay has expressed its willingness to receive such Mennonite displaced persons who wish to settle there.—William T. Snyder

Packages may now be sent to Belgium and the French sector of Berlin as of August 1. Elmer Dicks Describe Trip to Africa

March 20 for Elzabethville arriving there after eight hours of travel covering one thousand two hundred miles and thus shortening our journey considerably.

Friday, the twenty-second, we boarded the train for Luluabourg and arrived there after two days. We were now beginning to get somewhat excited since we were getting so close to our destination. We had understood that the Southern Presbyterians had a mission station at Luluabourg and we were looking forward to meeting our neighbors. We were disappointed when we found that their station was about twenty-five kilometers out and there was only a Roman Catholic mission located there. (The government has granted the Southern Presbyterians a plot of ground where they will build a station in the near future in Luluabourg.)

We hired a car, and Tuesday morning we left Luluabourg for Charlesville. The road was not too good, but it was passable. It was a thrilling experience to drive into the mission compound at Charlesville realizing that at last we had arrived on the field where our service is to take place. The natives, as well as the missionaries, had been anxiously waiting for our arrival and they gave us a hearty welcome. A number of the native Christian men came to the home of Brother and Sister Graber when we were eating our evning meal and sang a number of gospel hymns as a welcome to us and praise to God for safely bringing us to our destination. We expect to spend some time visiting with our sister Miss Anna Quiring at Nyanga before we proceed to our station at Kalamba.

As we look back over the weeks that we have been on our way, we can testify to the fact that throughout the journey our Lord has been very near. We do wish to thank our many friends who have so earnestly prayed to our Heavenly Father in our behalf feeling that that is the main reason why everything has gone so well. May the Lord bless you for what you have so lovingly done for us in His name.

Our address will be Kalamba, via Tshikapa, Kasai District, Congo Belge, Africa. Sincerely in Him, Elmer, Esther, and LaVerna Joyce Dick Freedom from What?

The Words of Jesus, "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free," are often quoted out of their context and thus are made to mean something that Jesus did not say. This well-known verse cannot be separated from the verse just prior, which reads, "Then said Jesus to those Jews who believed on him, if ye continue in my words, then are ye my disciples indeed; AND YE SHALL KNOW THE TRUTH AND THE TRUTH SHALL MAKE YOU FREE." There is here no encouragement for believing that truth in the sense of correct and accurate knowledge of a subject will make men free. In fact the very opposite may be true. Our knowledge of the atom along with the knowledge of the utter futility of another war fought with atomic power will not necessarily lead us into a peaceful world, but may lead us into greater bondage. Such truth may make us free from error, but the freedom of which Jesus speaks is freedom from the bondage of sin.

Our secular educational system has often adopted the Socratic assertion that "Knowledge is virtue" and while we would be the last to denounce the acquiring of knowledge, it still remains to be proved that knowledge will lead us into a more virtuous life. We do not give sufficient weight to the power of instinct and passion and the desire of the moment. Over and over again we do wrong knowingly. As the poet Ovid sings, "We know and approve the better course, but follow the worse." Which leads us to believe that there is a prerequisite for every virtuous life, namely, a personal relationship and allegiance to Jesus Christ. It is His light that enables men to see the truth and to follow it. "If the Son therefore shall make you free ye shall be free indeed." He alone can free a man from the bondage of sin. Said Jesus to THOSE WHO BELIEVED ON HIM, "If ye continue in my words . . . . ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free." Education without the wisdom of God is a dangerous thing. Education with a Christian foundation and a Christian outlook will bring a more abundant life to every believer in Christ.—Ronald von Riesen.

From the editor's point - of - view:

PARENTS may have more to do with the Christian education of their children or the lack of it than the schools—public or church. As the twig is bent so the tree will grow. Parents bend the twig in the first five years or so of life; so we are being told with increasing conviction. The fundamental emotional attitudes of the child are set in these years. They largely determine whether he will be shy, aggressive, or cooperative; proud or humble; bitterly critical or understanding and helpful; honest and open or closed and defensive; hopeful or discouraged; easily angered or exceedingly gracious; fearful or courageous; egocentric or mindful of the general welfare; determined to do the will of God or determined on his own will; a speaker of words that have meaning or an utterer of idle words; relaxed or highly strung; prayerful or feverishly self-dependent. Parents may not teach their child to read, write and do figures, but it is the parents that very largely determine to what use their child will put the reading, writing, arithmetic, chemistry, English, manual training, and so on that it may learn. "Parents are to their children as God is to the parents," was the thought recently expressed by a young father in Sunday School. There is a point in this that suggests that the parents very largely determine what happens to the child. If it is true that parents exert so great an influence upon their children, then parents are wise if they check into their own characters. This takes a questioning attitude towards one's own way of life, a willingness to confess failure and sin, and a hunger and thirst after righteousness that will enable God to make their lives and the lives of their children to come out right.

TO TALK OVER his problems with one or more of the faculty members is one of the most helpful things that a troubled student in a Christian college can do. Such a student will find it especially helpful to state his problems not in the realm of the intellect but rather in the realm of the emotions. As such a student honestly and humbly describes any feelings of shame, resentment, fear, inferiority, loneliness, guilt, etc., that he may have, he will find understanding and kindness that will help to heal the wounds of his life. He will find that those who mourn are comforted and that the poor in spirit are blessed. As he talks over his problems (matters which he generally keeps to himself and other matters he will find that the puzzle of his life will become more simple and that God's sunshine is behind the clouds. He will furthermore develop a very necessary trust in fellow human beings. He will develop the habit of getting right down to the brass tacks of life. It can make his whole education immensely more worthwhile as he learns to see the basic issues of life and as the truth of the Holy Spirit makes him free from sin and self. To shy away from such an approach when one is pained by problems is like refusing to go to the dentist when a decayed tooth sends throbbing pulsations of pain. Jesus packed meaning into the words "Blessed are they that mourn . . . " To miss out on help when it is sorely needed and can be given to at least a helpful degree is something tragic and yet only too common because of our human tendency to shrink away from that which is painful even though curative. The student who is pained by problems can get a lot more out of his education by asking for help. But let him see his problems as emotional ones and not as intellectual ones.

C.O.'s contributed manfully towards the national wealth in the years just gone by. According to an article in the Hutchinson (Kansas) News-Herald the following can be said of the C.O.'s: "For only $1.26 a day the American taxpayer has received more than 5,388,700 man-days of work from conscientious objectors since the start of the war, according to national selective service. This was work on soil conservation, road building, growing food and many other jobs—work that the taxpayer would have paid for anyway—including valuable volunteer work as guniea pigs in medical experiments. It saved the treasury of the United States about $18,000,0000. . . And it does not include an estimated $2,000,000 which individual states saved by the work conscientious objectors did in hospitals and asylums." These are big figures. However, they do not tell in dollar and cents what the C. O. witness may rightfully account for in the long run, for war means destruction of material wealth, and overcometh evil with good means construction.

Happy Is the Man that Getteth Understanding

by S. F. Pannabecker

Soon our children will be returning to school—from indergarten to graduate work. They will be trying, in formal way, to get the training that we all need for aily life and for which we never stop seeking. Three rords may be used to express the different phases of hat for which we seek. They are knowledge, wisdom, nderstanding.

Knowledge is fundamental and necessary. Like your elephone number or street address you cannot afford forget it. Consequnetly we spend many weary hours ith the multiplication table and the proper juxtaposi- on of letters, called spelling. We delve into the facts f geography, history, government. We learn about the tructure, activities, and habits of plants and animals, erms and cells, molecules and atoms.

As a result of the accumulation of knowledge with eference to these things which are taught and easily erceptible our generation has built up a marvelous ivilization, called "modern." No other age in history nd no other country in the world approaches ours in e multiplicity of conveniences, ease of communica- ons, variety of industries, and the wholesale partici- ation of the common man in these enrichments of fe. Worthwhile contributions of knowledge these are, ut the same accumulation of knowledge has made the ecent war most scientific and most effective ever in e destruction of life, property and character.

Wisdom also is fundamental. While knowledge deals ith facts and things, wisdom deals with matters that re not so tangible and easily perceptible. It is a simple atter to divide white sunlight into its component olors and to combine colored lights to produce white. hat is the subject matter of knowledge. It is much ore difficult to analyze conduct and determine what re the components of goodness. Wisdom deals with is type of subject which, like truth and beauty, is st as real and just as near but less easily grasped.

As knowledge is the basis of civilization so it may be said that wisdom is the basis of culture. Our modern, secular civilization is spreading throughout the world so that there is rapidly becoming a world civilization based on the contributions of western science. Our culture, which is based primarily on Christian contributions through the centuries, is not spreading throughout the world. In fact other countries, non-Christian in the main, discount our culture just as our country, in effect, discounts it by disregarding its elements—the study of morals, human relationships, and especially God.

Understanding may be taken to refer to the practical application of wisdom and knowledge to life. It demands a concern for others and a recognition of responsibilitiy to God. Only in the light of these can the importance of events and facts be realized. Knowledge blithely can invent an atomic bomb with complete disregard of consequences; wisdom may condemn its use on general principles; understanding trembles at the thought of its possibilities of destruction of life and character and refuses to participate.

In practical use in the Scriptures and elsewhere the distinctions here drawn between the three words—knowledge, wisdom understanding—are not always carried out. The significance of the ideas however cannot be neglected. Knowledge in general has no moral quality and is not concerned with results, while wisdom and understanding are primarily interested in effects and thus questions of right and wrong.

Today our world is facing a cataclysm which can only be avoided by a concern for others. This, in turn, can only come with love for God. Knowledge offers us no vital help at this point. Wisdom teaches us to recognize the hand of God in the world about us and our responsibility to Him. Understanding enlists our sympathy with our fellowmen and prompts us to sacrifice personal advantage for the good of the whole. Jesus Christ was the embodiment of understanding—divine understanding, divine love. It is His spirit and His life in us which only can save us or save our generation.

Job says, "Behold the fear of the Lord, that is wisdom; and to depart from evil is understanding." In getting education get knowledge, of course, but forget not wisdom and understanding which makes knowledge of worth. True happiness only comes to him that getteth understanding.

Dr. S. F. Pannabecker is the new dean of the Men- nite Biblical Seminary, Chicago. He has had years missionary experience in China, and for the past veral years he served as M.C.C. relief commissioner that country. He is the author of two books, each which traces the development of a Mennonite con- rence.

Teacher Training in Your Church

by Erland Waltner

If a public school board would employ a teacher who had received no training whatever for his work, their action would be criticized as being unfair to the pupils attending the school. In our Sunday Schools, however, probably most of our teachers are untrained, superintendents feel relieved if they can get almost "anyone" to take the classes, and we take it for granted that in church "things are that way." Some of our untrained teachers are doing splendid work though they had to learn by the hard and costly method of experience; yet is it not a sensible view that if the public school teacher needs to be trained to teach "reading, writing, and arithmetic," the Christian teacher should also be trained for his task?

The Christian teacher ought to be trained because God's Word says that he should be "a workman that needeth not to be ashamed." He can be such only if he will "Study to show himself approved unto God." In other words, the Christian teacher must be a student. He who would teach, must himself be taught.

Moreover, the Christian teacher should be trained because he deals with the most delicate and sensitive objects in the world—the souls of little children. When we consider the tremendous possibilities for good or ill which are wrapped up in the soul of a child, we must admit that the very best of preparation—physical, intellectual, and spiritual—is none too good for the task of leading the fact of a child into the ways of the Lord Jesus Christ.

Furthermore, the Christian teacher should be trained because the public school teacher who guides the education of the child for five days of the week is usually well trained. If the child observes that the public school teacher is efficient, orderly, and effective in teaching while the Sunday School teacher is incompetent and ineffective, he will quickly develop a wrong attitude toward the Sunday School, accompanied with a wrong attitude toward the church and toward spiritual things.

We recognize, of course, that Teacher Training alone will not produce qualified teachers. A teacher may be highly trained and yet be spiritually ineffective because he lacks the prime requisite of a Spirit-controlled personality. However, almost invairably, Teacher Training can help to make a good teacher better. Live teachers are growing teachers who are ever on the alert to learn how they may become more effective in the art of teaching the Word of God.

Most of our Conference Churches, unfortunately do not have a Teacher Training program in the local church. A recent survey revealed that only 8 percent of the churches were conducting Teacher Training Courses. This is pathetic. If your church has no provision for the training of Sunday School workers, your pastor and your Sunday School superintendent should take the initiative to set up such a program for this fall or winter. While our Curriculm Commitee is working in the direction of a unified Teacher Training Course, the following courses have been found useful in several of our churches: C. H. Benson, The Evangelical Teacher Training Association Course (800 N. Clark St., Chicago, 10, Ill.), The International Council of Religious Education Courses (203 N. Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill.) and Charles A. Oliver, Preparation for Teaching (The Westminister Press, Philadelphia, Pa.) The Board of Education issues diplomas to such who have satisfactorily completed one of the above courses.

If you as a Christian teacher, after having read this article, feel that you are inadequately prepared for your tremendous responsibility as a Sunday School worker, go to your superintendent, not to tell him that you are discouraged about your work, but to tell him that you would like to have the opportunity of receiving instruction as to how you may become "a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth."

Rev. Erland Waltner is a member of the Board of Education. As a member of the board he is in charge of Sunday School matters. He is pastor of the Bethel Mennonite Church, Mountain Lake, Minnesota. This church has sponsored such a training course as he mentions.

Our contention that war creates more problems than it settles is supported by Richard T. Baker, wa correspondent. "The more I see of this victory we wo at tremendous cost of life and property," he said, "th more I see of how little it settled the outstanding problems of the world. War, as it is fought today does not settle problems. It creates them. It confound the normal processes of history. It negates its ow goals. It fights for economic plenty at such cost tha want is spread more widely among the people. I fights for a world society of nations, but it produce individual nations armed with such unprecedente concentrations of power that to make them wor together is more difficult after victory than befor Governing Germany and Japan, meeting the foreig ministers in Paris, atomic energy commission dead locks in New York, fascists in Spain and Argentina displaced Jews in Europe, riots in Trieste and Palestin —these are our victory, the paradoxical victory, th Pyrrhic victory, that produced more problems tha it solved."—"Gospel Herald"

The Present Relief Needs

It is a remarkable fact that the Emergency Relief Board in all these war years had not once had to make an appeal for funds. That is a genuine tribute to the fact that there is present among us a Christian concern of love deep enough that it does not need prodding and pleading. Through all these years there was a steady, spontaneous, and generous flow of gifts in kind (wheat, clothes and canned goods), of contributions of money and even of personal service. As a result our Emergency Relief Board can face the heavy demands on relief funds with a splendid reserve of cash in the treasury.

Relief needs and opportunities, however, have been steadily mounting until MCC cash relief expenditures have reached a total for the United States and Canada of over $80,000.00 per month. This peak of expenditures is likely to continue for several months. Freight and shipping costs involved in sending clothing, food, flour, and tools to points of destination take a heavy portion of this monthly expenditure. In the last twelve-month period some 4,200 tons of wheat and flour contributions were shipped by MCC to foreign fields, likewise, 2,400 tons of canned and dried foods, and over 300 tons of clothing. In addition we have had an increasing number of displaced Mennonites to take care of, in various sectors of Europe. Then there is, of course, the continuing cost of sending out and maintaining necessary personnel on the field. At present there are 169 workers in various fields of need.

If the churches of our Conference in the United States and Canada contribute a proportionate share, figured according to membership, then our contribution would amount to about $19,000.00 per month. This high peak of our relief expenditure determined by the urgency of the present need is likely to continue in the next six months or more. Additional expenditures will arise as soon as displaced Mennonites can be moved to new areas of settlement. Then there will doubtless come appeals for additional contributions to this specific cause.

In view of these added needs our church members are urged to contribute generously and as unto the Lord to the cause of relief and this ministry of Christian love to people who are "strangers, hungry, cold, and in need of friendship." (Matthew 25:31-46) Please remember that it is best to send your contribution not directly to MCC Headquarters but rather to our Conference Treasurer, General Conference Headquarters, Newton, Kansas, indicating that your gift is for the cause of relief.—Henry A. Fast, Chairman, Emergency Relief Board; D. C. Wedel Financial Secretary.

The 1947 Conference Program

"Go and make disciples of all nations, and teach them to obey all the commands I have laid on you;" this is the overall assignment to us Christians, to us as conference. How well are we as individual Christians or as committees or boards of the General Conference carrying on this work? How can we come closer to living up to Christ's expectations?

In August, 1947, a year from now, our next General Conference session takes place at Berne, Indiana. What can we do now in preparation so that conference can bring the richest blessings upon all the phases of our conference work? Boards are actively at work to promote missions, relief, education, publications, peace, and other elements contributing to Christ's command of "making disciples;" churches, individuals, other groups and societies are doing their part. New problems and questions arise within boards; other suggest entirely new endeavors which our conference should take up.

The Business Committee is soliciting suggestions for a strong program for our next meeting. The world is full of problems now in this post-war era and thoughts come to many of us that might be helpful to form a better program. Please send them on to any one of the three members of the committee so they may take them up for consideration. Brother J. J. Thiessen is in Saskatoon, Saskatchewan; Brother Walter Gering is serving our brethren in war-torn Europe. Since his address is not continuously at hand, I am sure he can be reached by addressing mail to his home at Moundridge and asking that it be forwarded. I shall be glad to have suggestions sent to me at Bluffton, Ohio. We pray God for guidance and ask your assistance in this important task of preparing the most helpful program for our next conference session. May Christ, our Saviour bless us as a conference and make us a blessing to many in many ways. —The Business Committee, J. S. Schultz, Chairman.

By Cornelius Krahn

A TIME OF TERROR

The following letter was written by Mrs. M. Hohmann, formerly from Elbing, West Prussia, now in the British Zone, to her mother in Canada and was published in Der Bote, July 17, 1946.

"Sunday, January 21, 1945, soldiers told us to leave Elbing as quickly as possible because the Russians were coming. Those who wished to do so could go to Dirschau by military trucks and from there by train. There had been no train through Elbing since January 12. . . We did not get away. By 5:00 P.M. the Russians had arrived, surrounded the city, and demanded surrender. Since Elbing refused to surrender the battle raged for seventeen days and nights."

In the Basement during the Siege

"All during this time we were waiting in the basement, could not cook; ate what we had brought with us. Finally the house to house fight began. The Russians got us out and forced us to follow them through the rubble with hands raised. We had to jump down an embankment four yards deep at such speed that four women and nine children were trampled to death, and we had to walk over them. . . We had come from two basements. . . . We were placed into a corner and forced to stand there four hours, backed by the Russians who were ready to fire. Next we were led, through a burning house, to the "Margaretenschule" and put into its basement. The capacity of the basement was probably twenty-five, but we seventy were forced into it living there on water and sixty gram bread per day."

In the Basement after the Siege

"Every fifteen minutes the guards came to get women and girls for rape, many of whom had to submit to twenty-five men in succession. Among them were ten-year-old children who were returned torn to pieces so badly that four of them died. . .

Because two girls escaped through the window when they were taken up, we were all punished severely being denied bread, water and toilet privileges. One woman and two girls became hysterical and were shot in the basement and left in our midst. We endured that for three days and then collapsed becoming completely indifferent as to whether we were shot or not. At an opportune moment in the morning we broke the lock and escaped."

The Flight

Many times we fell exhausted but managed to get up again until we reached our home. It had been hit twice, but we lived four days in the rubble. Thirty of the escaped women were shot. We attribute it to the grace of God that Ella, Mrs. Sattler, and I had been protected both in the basement and during the flight. . .

"Finally we located Lena and went to the settlement. We again had no rest, day or night, because the Russians wanted the women. But the Lord protected us. The more the Russians insisted the more the women shouted and the children shrieked until the Russians left. In March the Russian authorities prohibited rape. It still went on, but was investigated and punished very severely."

Working in the Hospital

"Now a change came. They established a hospital for Russian soldiers in the house next door to Lena. Ella and Lena worked in the laundry and so we had our. . . Now we were safe and not assaulted anymore, but we had no contact by mail, newspaper, or radio, and we did not understand Russian. . ."

"May 9 our army capitulated and May 13 one hundred sixty thousand German soldiers of the Nehrung went into Russian captivity. We brought some of them coffee, and they gave us canned meat, cheese, bread, coats, blankets, and many, many addresses which we were to submit to their relatives. . . Soon the hospital was closed and the Poles came."

Leaving Elbing

"Conditions were worse under the Poles than they had been under the Russians. They beat us when they could and took everything from us. Then it was announced that everyone who wanted to leave Elbing could do so and would get a free passage to the border. September 25 it was our turn and we were on our way until November 7. . . After surmounting many difficulties including barbed wire, swamps, forest and a river we finally got across the border. . .

"If only I had the certainty that our boys are alive. . .or that I knew that they were gone and could mourn for them. . . But this uncertainty ruins my nerves. Ella is breaking down. All day she looks through the window to the sky. If only we had some work, but there is none. We cannot sew, darn and patch because we have nothing to work on. We do not even have thread. Little Herbert and Hein have no wool socks. Please send us some cast off clothes no matter how bad they are so that we can make use of them. . . ."

Dr. Joseph Krenek, moderator of a Presbyterian church in Czechoslovakia, says that communism in that country "is not the old type of materialistic, Marxist communism. We have many Communists who are very faithful members of the church." He points out that religious instruction is being given in the public schools and that the theological school in Prague has an enrollment of two hundred students, the largest since 1918, In orienting ourselves to the rising tide of communism in the world, it is good to remember that the church of Jesus Christ is not identical to or dependent upon any political, social or economic system. Many Communists are irreligious. That may not be the same thing as saying that every Communist must be irreligious.—"Gospel Herald"

German Pastors Send Letters of Gratitude

Some time ago the Hillsboro, Kansas, community got up a number of carloads of flour for foreign relief. Reports now coming back indicate that some of this flour reached parts of Germany and Holland. Rev. J. M. Regier, who served as chairman of the community drive, has by now received hundreds of letters expressing gratitude. Herewith we present several letters which came to him out of the American Zone in Germany. Particularly noteworthy is the sense of fellowship which is expressed in the letters. Tragic is the need described in them.

Wiesloch, Baden
July 4, 1946

In a sack with flour, handed over to us from the Relief-Works of the Protestant Church and designed for the people suffering distress in my parish, I have found your address. I thank you very much for this gift, with which I can help some poor family here. It is a sign of faithful and kind connexion which goes beyond all frontiers and which is only able to bring us the peace for which all peoples long. Just during these months before the harvest the distress is very large, the more so as just now all the fugitives are coming to us who were forced to leave their country in the eastern part of Germany. There they have had plenty of all and with us they are compelled to increase it so much, that our position is hardly bearable and hopeless.

As for me, I am the parson of the Protestant church of Wiesloch near Heidelberg and besides them the chairman of the diocese of Upper-Heidelberg, which comprises 18 parishes. My only son, who studied theology, was killed in action, likewise the fiance of my daughter who is studying also theology at Heidelberg.

Sending to you many thanks I remain in Connexion of faith,

Yours,
Dekan H. Durr

Gemmingen, Baden

Dear Friend in the Lord,

In the Name and for the sake of the Lord Jesus Christ our Saviour of whom we are fellow workers and servants and with whom we are co-workers for him, We thank you very much for your great kindness. You have sent us one sack of flour for our poor and hungry parish at Gemmingen Baden Germany. Be please so kind as to give all who sent us this flour our great thanks. Perhaps you may be so kind as to read from your pulpit this letter. If you would have seen the poor people and their sparkled eyes, when we could give them the flour. If there would be somewhere in your congregation who speaks German, I could write you a long letter in German and they could translate it in English. We are 1700 inhabitants and about 500 fugitives who have nothing as their clothes on their body. We got now two sacks of flour another one from the Mennonite Committee. We do not know what it will be in winter if we have no clothing and shoes.

We are very grateful to you for all your goodness done to us.

I am yours grateful brother in Christ,
C. Gunthur, Pastor

Oberliederbach near Frankfort on Main Germany

These days the first charity-gift arrived from the U.S.A. and has been distributed through the mediation of the "Hilfswerk der evangelischen Kirche in Deutschland" in our area. As chairman of the charity-work of the deanery Kronberg near Frankfort on Main I was able to distribute 53 bags a 100 lbs. of flour and other food-gift (beef and evaporated milk) to the 12 parishes of the deanery and thereby I could help to mitigate the most urgent need. The gift just arrived at a moment, which being critical as to the food rationing, was most wonderful because the food rations are below the existence-minimum of people.

I wish to thank you as well as your congregation for the great sacrifice in the name of all those members of the parishes who could be helped by it. I only wish that for once you could witness the joy which redeemed upon the arrival of your gifts. Chiefly we gave to those refugees who are undernourished and in bitter need of it, and who some time ago have been lead out of the eastern areas into our own districts; especially ill people, children, old people and pregnant and nurishing mothers. Then we take care of those brothers who having been dismissed out of P.W. camps are without homes or means and who absolutely need additional food supply in order to recover their strength. And at last we give also to other undernourished members of the congregation.

You may be assured that every single pound of your food gift goes where it ought to go and where it is needed most urgently. And you may also be assured of it that all the members of my congregation, who aid me in the handling of it are absolutely trustworthy. From what I have seen at the distribution in my own congregation I should like to tell you of a few examples only which however will show you best how great is the want; but also with how much gratitude and joy your gifts were received.

At first there is a refugee-family of Silesia, the couple and their six children ranging 1 to 14 years. Since a year they already have been banished from their native district before they have found a new provisional abode with us. They are short of everything, and they have neither bed nor chair. Their clothing is defective because their best things, which they had taken along from home, were taken away from them on their way here. They all are undernourished and without strength. The wife hardly can manage to talk to me, she is so feeble that her intellectual functions and her memory fail her. The children look pale and miserable, they look at me with great big hungry eyes. And still these people are, after all those hard sacrifices forced upon them, touchingly grateful that with the Lord's help they got over this hard time without losing the life of their dear ones. Here a gift of your food, placed at our disposition by you was suitable and welcome. Beside that we buy for this family, out of the cash funds of the "Hilfswerk der evangelischen Kirche" the necessary furniture as far as is possible under the present, hardly to be imagined shortage in goods, so that these people may have a somewhat human existance.

Furthermore there is another refugee-woman, who has come to stay with her 12 year old son in my parish. Once she has seen better days because she owned a large farm-estate in Thuringia which was expropriated without payment. She looks frightful, and has grown lean to the point of a skeleton. The muscles have become weak and have languished. She is 45 years old and only weighs 80 lbs only. Her son had 18 abscesses, which left large dark marks upon his body; typical signs of starvation as it often occurs with the undernourished German youth of the hunger areas. A half a year ago her husband died of starvation; her mother died on her way here of weakness. She told me that since months they had not eaten a single gram of meat or fat. How grateful was she for the food-ration that we could grant her out of your donation.

And furthermore I see an old woman, who leaning upon her cane drags herself to the place where the flour is issued. I know her from the services in my church because she is one of my most eager church attending members. However hard the way might be for her, she is not only hungry for bread but she is also eager to hear the word of our Lord. She tells me that in Frankfort where she used to live, she has lost all her possessions by bombs. She only has half her weight of former years, weighing 40 kilos now.

And at last I want to state another example. Our parish-nurse brings an old couple, who also are bombed out and who cannot manage the long way to the parish-church, where the flour is distributed, their flour-ration to their home; they also stay in my parish now. At first they absolutely do not understand because they are unable to believe it. The parish-nurse has to repeat it to them several times that the Mennonite-church of America has collected this flour and lets it be distributed by the "Hilfswerk der evangelischen Kirche." Both exclaim simultaneously, "Ah, is that possible that someone thinks of us, that someone bestows such love upon us?" With trembling hands they accept the gift. Tears string into their eyes, tears of joy and gratitude.

I know that the Mennonites especially live up to the commandment of charity and compassion. "It is more blessed to give than to take, says Jesus Christ, our Lord (apostle 20 V 35). The bliss that lies in giving, you could not experience because the expansion of the ocean lies between you, the spenders, and the receivers. I wish to give you this joy and bliss with this summary of the grateful joy with which your charity was accepted. And I also want to thank you as a reverend that you put the protestant church of Germany into the position to give proof of the vitality of our Christian belief and faith, showing itself in actual charity and mercy. The love of Christ alone has the Power to rebuild all that was destroyed and parted by hate. Your gifts also, which shall help to soothe the most urgent need of the body, will find their way to the hearts of our people. They will refill many a desperate person with new confidence and thereby help build the Lord's Kingdom on earth.

Governor's Wife Visits Mission at Jagdeeshpore

Soon after New Years the Governor of the Central Province came for a tiger hunt some fifty miles from our mission station. I made bold to write him an invitation to come the fifty miles and see this place. I did not receive a reply at that time, but about two weeks later the information came that His Excellency was coming to our area for a brief vacation and outing; and he might come to Jagdeeshpore too. That was good news. However, soon a second message came saying that the Governor himself might not come to our place, but that his wife, Lady Twynam would be willing to come. The occasion for us was that we wished these Province authorities to lay the corner-stone of our Jansen Memorial School extension; i.e., the hall and additional classrooms. The day was set, and our District Commissioner came to give us advise as to what to do and how to do it so that these authorities might be properly received. We Americans are always a bit uncouth when it comes to entertaining high authorities because in the land of our birth every man is Mr. and every married woman is Mrs. and that is all there is to it. But in the Orient it is different. It strictly means Honour to whom honuor is due. So the District Commissioner gave careful instructions just what to do first, second, and third, etc., and how all the roads were to be fixed up and decorated, what welcome signs were to be put up, what was to be shown, and what kind of a program was to be rendered and what not. So on the exact time, at 9:40 in the morning, all were

About Mental Hospital Service Units

This Summer about sixty girls volunteered to work for ten weeks in three mental hospitals—at Howard, Rhode Island; Norristown, Pennsylvania; and Cleveland, Ohio. This service opportunity, sponsored by the Mennonite Central Committee, has been underway for three years. The volunteers for this service are employed by the hospital to do work as ward attendants, in occupational and recreational therapy, as office workers, or other regular hospital tasks. The units, as well as doing their regular tasks, develop a summer program of activity including social and recreational activity, group worship services, classes in mental hygiene, and many little things a group of young people are able to do together.

This series of three articles describes the sort of activity and program a Summer Service Unit in a Mental Hospital does. Each unit has contributed an article about a different phase of their activity: the fellowship of the unit in its life together, the work done on the ward, the tour made in the vicinity of the hospital.

An additional word should be said about the work of the hospital units. To many people, work in a mental hospital is an odd way to spend one's summer. It is so odd it is news. In Cleveland, the Religious News radio broadcast about the unit, and a newspaper wrote a feature article on the unit and took pictures of their activity including these as a part of the feature. Although to many this is an odd service, it is a very needed service. Because people think mental hospital work is hardly dignified, the need is all the greater. The attitude of the people toward mental illness and mental hospitals is the reason why conditions in mental hospitals are so sad. More people need to see mental illness as they see physical illness and be concerned about mental illness as they are about physical illness. Only so can mental hospitals become the well-staffed, efficient, well-equipped institutions general hospitals are in general.

So long as that is not the case and the public places their mentally ill out of sight in poorly-equipped, poorly-staffed, and poorly-financed mental hospitals, the need for Summer Service Units will be ongoing and dire. A part of the task of Summer Service Units is to convince people that mental illness is illness as much as appendicitis is. And they need to convince people that the popular attitudes toward mental illness are what causes the inhuman conditions existing in many mental hospitals today. It is the people, ultimately, who are responsible for much that happens in mental hospitals. Certainly the service of loving care performed by young people who feel deeply the counsel of Christ concerning "whatsoever ye have done to the least of these" is a lowly service with a high calling.

The accompanying articles tell a bit of the work and experience of these young people.

Work on the Ward at Howard

By Rosie Siemens

Since you are interested in the work on the ward, I would enjoy so much to have you travel in thought to Howard and take a glimpse of our work.

The early morning dew is fresh on the grass—everything seems to be peaceful and contented. The world is in perfect harmony until we step into the ward.

As we open the door we stop short and wonder how anyone could exist in a place where such a repulsive odor prevails, but after being on the ward a few days the odor tends to become more faint, and one doesn't mind it at all.

My ward has a capacity of seventy patients, and most of the time there is no vacancy. The patients are senile and many of them are completely helpless. The majority of the patients are very careless about their personal appearance and do not take care of their bodily needs. Each morning they must be dressed, fed, and washed. After breakfast they are placed in a large porch where they occupy themselves by sitting on hard wooden benches doing nothing. They are too ill mentally and physically to do any manual labor. It appears pathetic to see these poor subnormal creatures with their abscessed sores sit and lie on the benches and floor chatting insanely to each other. Some patients enjoy catching the roaches and water bugs that scurry out of the cracks in the floor. Occassionally, I have seen them slip one or two in their mouth and eat them as though they were confectionery delicacies. Several of our patients spend their time shredding their clothes until they look as though they were wearing grass skirts.

Many patients are in the hospital as a result of sin, but by far not all of them. The majority are here because they were faced with a conflict in life that became too difficult for them to solve, and instead of facing their conflict they built up a world of perfection in their own mind which is a reality to them. For an example of this type, we have a lady on our ward who believes that she is the queen of heaven, and with the help of a little imagination one would almost believe her because she can give a vivid description of her kingdom.

Some patients are uncooperative and dissatisfied with their environment. The other day I placed a bowl of salad before a patient; she frowned at the food and remarked, " 'God loveth a cheerful giver.' Do you have any lamb chops?"

It is surprising to notice how readily the patients respond to a smile and a few kind words. Speaking softly and calmly to a patient as though they were your friend helps them to understand themselves and others more favorably. Force and violent treatment can be abolished when individuals with the love of Christ in their heart come to take care of these insane patients. What a challenge for any Christian to convey that spirit of love and kindness to these poor unfortunate people.

The Inspiration of Group Life at Norristown

By Maurine Siemens

This ten weeks' experience of group life in the Summer Service Unit at Norristown has meant a growth in appreciation of other people. We have always appreciated the kindly deeds and the pleasant words of others, but now we have developed an appreciation for the thoughts, the ideals and the faiths of all members of our voluntary service unit.

The inspiration and fellowship of a group life are not sensations aroused through sight, ear, smell, or touch, but rather are spiritual perceptions received through the communion of minds and souls. They are known only through emotional experience.

Perhaps a better insight into the real meaning of fellowship is best explained in the words of one of our COGS, "It's not the hospital work that I'll miss the most at summer's end, though I'll miss that too, it's the feeling of unity, a belonging togetherness, which needs be broken as we separate to return to our home community." The need for unity is best understood when one realizes that the summer unit is composed of volunteers from various Mennonite branches. For example, the Summer Service Unit at Norristown had representatives from the Conservative Amish, the Amish Mennonite, the "old" Mennonites, and the "new" or General Conference Mennonite Churches. If a unit life was to exist, it must exist mid conditions of varying church and home backgrounds. The inspiration and fellowship perhaps can be made more vivid through a discussion of diversified unit activities. Our unit life—living, playing, studying, and worshiping—are discussed here.

Dormitory life teaches us how to live and love together despite arising difficulties. Conflicting attitudes are ironed out in friendly discussions which result in a more intelligent understanding of the other Mennonite branches.

Norristown's recreational emphasis provides an excellent opportunity for playing together and developing skill in active sports. Twice a week the CPS fellows play softball. Enthusiasm runs high when the hospital team plays competing YMCA teams from surrounding towns. Tennis, badminton, croquet, table tennis, and bicycling are among the other sports participated in frequently.

Study has been an enjoyable part of our unit life. Recreational studies were made of home communities to analyze the need of our home communities and to solve recreational problems. As one project, a social was planned and given in honor of unit leaders attending a leaders' conference. Mental hygiene lectures given by members of the hospital staff, as well as the privilege of attending staff meetings twice a week, answered many questions about our patients and gave us much food for thought and discussion.

The inspiration of group worship was felt especially in outdoor devotional services. Devotions read against a background of music from a trickling brook and the sleepy song of the robin truly brought us closer to God's great out-of-doors.

This four-square life—living, playing, studying, and worshiping together has deepened our fellowship and inspired us to higher ideals for service in the name of Christ.

Tours Made by the Cleveland Service Unit

By Janice Welty

Aside from actual ward work and the educational pursuits of the Cleveland Summer Service Unit, a portion of the time was devoted to touring in and around the city of Cleveland. These tours included historical, cultural, and recreational points of interest.

The Health Museum, Museum of Natural History, Art Museum and the Terminal Tower were visited first. In the Terminal Tower, which is the dominant unit in the Public Square, visitors may view the city, and if it is a clear day, see areas within a radius of twenty-five miles.

Public Auditorium is a magnificent building in which fourteen events may be held simultaneously. One section of the building, Music Hall, was visited many times by individual groups, who attended the summer concerts by the Cleveland Symphony Orchestra.

A settlement house was visited to learn about its purpose and management. Settlement houses are community centers or gathering places for young people to spend their leisure time in something constructive or worthwhile. The emphasis is on group activity. Such a house provides recreational facilities, equipment for use in the fine arts and dramatics, and also sponsors outings for young people. An exceptional settlement house is Karamu, which is especially for Negro people.

A cruise to Cedar Point proved to be a very enjoyable outing for us. Games, and singing took up some of the time spent on the decks of the S S Alabama, while a picinic, swimming, canoeing, and other activities kept the group busy till it was time to make the return trip.

Of special interest to all were the various church services which we attended. Among others, the following were visited: A Quaker service, the St. Theodosius Russian Orthodox, Euclid Avenue Baptist, Episcopal Cathedral, Shilon Baptist (a negro church), Catholic, Welsh Presbyterian, Pentecostal services, and others. These different visitations gave us a little insight on some of the customs, practices, and work of the various denominational churches.

Sunday evening services by members of the Summer Service Unit were given at the following Mennonite churches: the Oak Grove church near Smithville, Ohio; the Salem church at Dalton, Ohio; and the Midway church at Columbiana, Ohio. In these services the work and experiences of the Unit members was presented to the congregations.

We feel that our experiences have been enriched and that we have profited from the various tours which we have taken this summer.

The Ward

The morn was fresh and beautiful,
And the sun was shining bright,
And all the birds were singing
And everything seemed right.

And then I stepped into the ward
Where mental patients stay,
And was greeted by the odor
In a most familiar way.

Near the door sat little Agnes,
Sprawled limply on the floor.
Her eyes were gazing blankly
Seeing things she had known before.

I smiled and said, "Good Morning;"
But she only cursed at me
And then she groaned and turned about
In terrifying agony.

And then I began to ponder
What conflict there must be
To so disturb the mental realm
With fitful misery.

From whence those charged emotions
That break forth in a curse
And then subdue in calmness.
What anguish could be worse.

What agony must grip the brain
In that convulsive snare
That makes them act the way they do
And peer with glazen stare.

"Oh God," I prayed, "Thy image
Can hardly be found here
Where all is in confusion
That should be bright and clear."

But the Saviour whispered back to me
In distinctness from above
"These are my own creations Serve them all in love."

And then the day was bright again,
In my heart there was a song.
And I could give the patients
The love for which they long.

Youth Events

Appearing for the first time in new form is the C. E. WITNESS, the bi-monthly young people's paper published by the Eastern District Conference Young People's Union. The C. E. WITNESS is now in printed form. It contains several articles, a letter by the president of the Eastern District, Ralph N. Lewis, and items from the local societies. Such items as the following are gleaned from the WITNESS: The Springfield church celebrates its 122 Anniversary, the Intermediate Fellowship at the Souderton church is collecting paper and now has an estimated five tons or $7500 worth. Sixty-nine young people from the West Swamp church were planning to attend retreat.

* * * *

A number of local retreats have been held which have not been reported in these pages because of not having information about them. Aberdeen, Idaho; Mountain Lake, Minnesota; the Stirling Mennonite Church of Kitchener, Ontario; the churches in Iowa are among those reported to have annual retreats. A report has been received stating that 125 young people from the Stirling Church at Kitchener are attending the retreat.

On Sunday, August 4, the annual C. E. Convention of the Westren District was held at Eden church near Moundridge, Kansas. Among business items discussed was the consideration of a retreat grounds. Several sites have been visited or investigated by the committee assigned this task. A site ten miles South of Elmdale, Kansas, (near Camp Wood) has been under particular consideration. At a special October meeting, the matter of retreat grounds will again be given consideration. It became evident at the meeting that many factors are involved in deciding upon a site for a retreat grounds much less on the matter of building the site up into a usable camp. Another site under consideration at present is a large home near Arlington, Kansas.

The Young People's Union Executive Committee met at North Newton, Kansas, August 2, to discuss some of the problems of the Y. P. U. work. Under consideration especially at the meeting was the Missionary Education Fund and the matter of bringing students to the States to study and prepare for further service among their people in their communities. The matter of financing this project received special consideration. Another matter import was that regardng the Voluntary Service program. The Chicago Summer Service Program was discussed and the continuation of this sort of work was considered. The Committee ended its meeting by meeting the train on which Jacob Friesen arrived from Paraguay to attend school in the States under the sponsorship of the Young People's Union Missionary Education Fund.

Ruth Ewert, secretary of the Young People's Union, is to be married to Ernst Harder this month. They will attend school at Mennonite Biblical Seminary until December after which they will go to Paraguay where Ernst will take up his work among his people.

groomed and ready. Over three hundred school children stood stiff at attention, all chairs were placed where they should be, and all of us missionaries at Jagdeeshpore and the friends who were invited stood ready and correct. Then the fine government car came rolling in. A tall military secretary attended Lady Twynam. He stiffly got out of the car and then Lady Twynam came out. It was a tense moment.

But the good Lady soon showed us that she is a human being too. She soon made us feel at home with her. She shook hands with us in a most gracious manner and took to us like a friend. The students sang a welcome song, and a brief welcome address was given. Then the important event of the corner-stone laying took place. We could not get a marble slab, so one of our brethren prepared a wood plank, thirty by sixteen inches, and two inches thick; and on that we had written, "Jansen Memorial Agricultural High School Extension Corner Stone, laid by Lady Twynam, on Jan. 27th 1946." It all gave a dignified appearance.

After this event she inspected all the school children, also their handwork. She was especially impressed with the weaving work the students had done. Then we took her across the school farm. It is true, the farm is just now in January at its best. The vegetables are plentiful and very beautiful. Most of our officers feel that India can produce much more than it does; and here on the mission school farm is a demonstration that it actually can be done and is being done here in Jagdeeshphore.

This visit was of the highest type from the official point of view, we have ever had here. What Lady Twynam saw was largely the external, but we feel sure that she detected that behind all this external is a spirit and a soul, which inspires all this, viz., our Lord and Saviour, and the souls yielded to Him. In the songs that the students sang to her this came out very clearly; and personally I am sure that our high officials recognize that fact. This visit has helped us also to pray more sincerely for those in government positions, as the apostle Paul enjoins us to do (Romans 13).—John Thiessen

The Waldensian

People located in the valleys of northern Italy are among the ones who recently received clothing from our relief workers in Italy. A favorable agreement has been worked out with UNRRA for a separate project in aid of the Waldenses. Their chief need is aid to hospitals, orphanages, and old people's homes, and provision for more food, clothing, and medical supplies. Eleven workers are serving in the M.C.C. Unit in Italy at the present time.

Individual Requests

Robert Kreider, MCC-CRALOG representative in Germany, has been receiving a large number of individual requests in the form of letters from people in the United States. These requests, he says, are for aid to relatives in Germany and in many cases for small and incidental items . . . flashlight batteries, cigarettes, insulin, and children's clothing. "This week I forwarded a number of letters received from both people in Germany and the States. It is really a problem . . .".

CRALOG representatives do not have actual supplies at their disposal but are charged with the responsibility of channeling relief supplies to the civilian distributing agencies. We would urge people to make their requests and relief contributions through the regular channels provided by the Mennonite Central Committee instead of writing direct to Germany since most of these requests are eventually referred back to this country.

Individual food packages may be sent to individual addresses in Germany through C.A.R.E.

C.A.R.E.

Both the United States and Canadian constituencies are finding in C.A.R.E. a channel for sending packages of food to specified individuals in foreign countries. To date 734 C.A.R.E. applications have been routed through the M.C.C. offices. Most of the packages are going to the American and British Zones of Germany. Application has been made for a block of twenty-five parcels to be sent to Robert Kreider in Germany who will channel the packages to whatever area the need is most urgent.

Goodwill Christmas Bundles

Pamphlets describing this project have been sent to interested groups and churches and may be obtained by writing to Akron, Pa. The plan is to send Bundles, each containing clothing, toilet articles, games, and other necessities which can be packed in a towel and fastened with safety pins, to needy children in Europe. The Bundles should be sent to M.C.C. Akron, Pa., before September 15.

News Briefs

Farewell services were held on the evening of August 6 for Elizabeth Brauer, Coalville, Alberta, who sailed from New York on August 7 for South Hampton, England.

James Brenneman, M.D. is scheduled to leave on August 10 from San Francisco, for Manila. The State Department granted priority making possible his flight to the Philippine Islands.

The following workers arrived at their destination: Margaret Janzen, South Hampton, England, August 3; Magdalene Friesen, South Hampton, England, August 5; Mary E. Amstutz, Bombay India, July 25.

H. Ernest Bennett, who served as a relief worker on the foreign field and as Assistant Treasurer and office manager at the Akron headquarters, brought to a close his period of service with the Mennonite Central Committee as of August 1. His new address is Elkhart, Indiana.

Relief Cereal

The manufacturer of the special relief cereal has informed the Material Aid Section that it is no longer necessary to ship wheat, oats, and soybeans to their mill in order to secure their cereal. The reason for the previous request for grain was because of the scarcity of those grains earlier in the season.

This cereal is being sent overseas in quantity. Other relief agencies have found it to be very satisfactory and highly recommend it as a relief food. Quantities of this cereal could be used in the areas of Germany, Austria, China and the Philippines where the Mennonite Central Committee will have relief units for the distribution of food supplies.

Those groups who are interested in purchasing this relief cereal from cash on hand or from possible donations of grain should contact the Material Aid Section in Akron.

Flour

Arrangements have been completed with the U. S. Government officials whereby anyone grinding wheat into flour for relief purposes through the Mennonite Central Committee may do so without regard to War Food Order No. 144. This allows the miller to grind as much wheat for relief as he wishes and does not hold the miller to any now existing quotas. Photostatic copies of this permission may be obtained from the Akron office by anyone who desires to mill flour for relief. It is necessary that the miller have this in his possession in order to claim exemption from the existing quotas.

Cracked Wheat

Quantities of cracked wheat can also be used to a good advantage in the relief program in China and the Philippines. It has been pointed out that cracked wheat consists of a part of the average diet of the people in those countries. It has also been pointed out that flour should not be shipped to those areas because of climatic conditions.

OFFERING FOR DEHYDRATED MILK

The Mennonite Central Committee invites the churches of the Western District Conference to hold an offering during August or September, the proceeds of which are to be used by the M. C. C. for the purchase of dehydrated milk. According to Rev. B. H Janzen, who helps to coordinate M. C. C. relief activities for the Mennonite churches in Kansas and Oklahoma, several churches around Hillsboro and Inman had begun the project of buying dehydrated milk for relief, when it was found out that the M. C. C could purchase such milk for a lower price in the East Since interest has been manifested in buying dehydrated milk for relief, the M.C.C. is now inviting each church of the Western District Conference to hold, during August or September, an offering for this project. The churches should send their offerings to Mennonite Headquarters, 722 Main Street, Newton Kansas. This office will then forward the money to the M. C. C. For further information in regard to this project, write to Rev. B. H. Janzen. Request for information should be addressed to Rev. B. H Janzen, Lehigh, Kansas.

It is being pointed out by the M. C. C. that dehydrated whole milk is preferable to dehydrated skim milk because the former contains the fat which i so very much needed by the starving peoples o Europe.

Let me but do my work from day to day,
In field or forest, at the desk or loom,
In roaring market-place or tranquil room;
Let me but find it in my heart to say,
When vagrant wishes beckon me astray,
"This is my work; my blessing, not my doom;
Of all who live, I am the one by whom
This work can best be done, in the right way,"
Then shall I see it not too great, nor small,
To suit my spirit and to prove my powers;
Then shall I cheerful greet the laboring hours,
And cheerful turn, when the long shadows fall
At eventide, to play and love and rest,
Because I know for me my work is best.

"Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid which is Christ Jesus"

From the editor's point - of - view:

A CHRISTIAN ATTITUDE towards the public schools is the privilege and obligation of all Christian parents. The teachers in a public school are generally anxious to cooperate with the parents in regard to the welfare of the children. There are certain things that the parents can do to help the teachers in their work. It is up to Christian parents to discover how they can be helpful. It is always better to befriend teachers than to denounce them. As parents and teachers unite in seeking an excellent education for all children, there will be an improvement in public education.

WORK is a blessing under the right conditions. Work at its best is love in action. It blesses both the recipient and the giver. Work at its best is a witness of God who is love. This witness is particularly effective because work does not come as easily as a great many words; it represents at its best substantial effort. Work done lovingly tells of God and makes the recipient inclined in a good many cases to want to know more about the Power behind such work. Work is a blessing when it fits the talents of the one who has to perform it. God has created each individual with certain talents to be used in such a way as to make the most of them. Work to be a blessing must be balanced with other aspects of life and therefore must not be overdone. Rightly used, work is a blessing for man.

A LABOR SUNDAY MESSAGE which will be read in many churches, says some very important things. The first part of it reads:

"On Labor Sunday the depth of human suffering in many lands must oppress the Christian conscience with particular force. In the true Christian community all persons and peoples are members one of another under the searching judgment of One who is Sovereign, and beneath the tender care of a Father who is God. An ill-clad body protests every idle machine. A homeless or poorly housed family pulls at the sinews of every idle hand. A slave worker anywhere jeopardizes the rights of all free men.

"In our own country the storms of war were a distant rumbling. In consequence we are left strong and prosperous beyond compare. But in the agony of the world we are threatened by a new spiritual isolation—the hardening of our hearts against humanity's pain. From our fields and hands and machines might come a flow of food and tools for the rebuilding of all nations. From our spirits might rise a greater sense of world fellowship and a passion for freedom which will embrace all men.

"We shall not meet our obligations to the world unless we meet them to each other in our own land. The unity of work and purpose we knew at war is now replaced by a struggle for profit and power. Out of this controversy that brings to light shortcomings in our economic practices, a higher life may come, but only if the needs of all men are the standard of living, an economy of high production and full employment, the provision of decent housing and assured medical care, equal access to employment and other benefits of our society regardless of race and creed, the wider distribution of property and income and power—the achievement of these goals for all persons, families and nations is indispensable to the realization of the common good."

PROFIT-SHARING may be one important step in lessening the conflict between management and labor. Dr. Albert E. Day, in talking about profit-sharing, tells about the store of Jack and Heitnz in Cleveland, Ohio. He says: "There employees did share generously, according to the usual standards fabulously, in the profits of the concern. And Agnes Meyer, in her Journey Through Chaos, found that industry was a paradise in contrast with the chaos which existed in many of the war plants she visited. There was little absenteeism, no idling, no shoddy work. The Navy found it necessary to maintain only a skeleton corps of inspectors. There was happiness and zest in toil — for it was the toil of a self-disciplined, co-operative family, all for each and each for all. 'They' had become 'we' and 'we' were doing a magnificent job." Are there disadvantages to profit-sharing? Perhaps, there are. One is reminded that industry needs to lay aside capital for expansion. It is possible that the laborers in a factory might be very reluctant to cut down their share in profits so that there might be expansion. Yet the question comes, should there be expansion when wages are so low as to make

On Labor Relations

by C. T. Habegger

The happiest labor relations experienced in our forty-six years existed when there were few Federal or State labor rules—when it was popular to earn one's rewards—when there was practically no feeling of belonging to this or that class of society.

But—these days are gone. As businesses grew bigger and bigger—operating in many localities and states—both our State and Federal Governments had to make rules to protect the workers. When governments make such rules, they have to make them all-inclusive—not only for the big fellows, but for everybody. Big organizations can interpret and live by complicated government rules better than the independent and small organizations. They have attorneys, accountants and staffs for such purposes. They even have their own "missionaries at large" who live pretty close to the law makers, to see that the new law will not hurt the big fellows too much. So far, our Federal and State rules have encouraged bigness more than independence in business.

Generally speaking, it should be evident that it is the Mr. Bigs in business, labor, agriculture, and government who limit the freedom of the Mr. Smalls—and it is the Mr. Bigs in business who precipitate bureaucratic and dictatorial agencies in government.

Who is to blame for all this? Nearly everybody. In recent decades, who of us hasn't given preferential patronage to the Mr. Bigs in business, rather than to the Mr. Smalls—our neighbors and fellow citizens? At any rate, the problem of labor relations as we know it today, is a by-product of big business.

And—it is going to take more than pension plans, profit-sharing plans, hospitalization insurance, vacations with pay, or above average wage rates to solve the problem. We, ourselves, have or are employing all of these. While our own labor relations are reasonably satisfactory, we can't boast that we have solved the problem. The fault, of course, is mainly ours—although outside conditions beyond our control are also a conributing factor.

What we really face is the old problem of human elations. This is everybody's problem. Perhaps if we ould solve our problems in human relations, we might utomatically solve the problem of labor relations as well.

Good human relations are encouraged particularly when no one—whether he be a preacher, deacon, parent, manager or bootblack—considers himself so all-wise as to look down on anyone else with a supercilious know-it-all, smart man's look. Men who make no mistakes—admit no errors—and blame others when they get in trouble—seldom contribute anything to good human relations.

What is it that propells too many of us up an imaginative plane of bossiness? Usually the propeller starts spinning after one has tasted too much power—power of personality, power of position, or power of ownership.

Don't get me wrong. All of us need to feel important—sufficiently so that we will put forth a genuine effort to exercise our various talents diligently — to have enough confidence in ourselves to dare to speak our minds openly, even when we may be wrong—but at the same time to have enough good manners to admit our errors when we are shown up.

Good human relations are primarily based on philosophical and religious foundations. Therefore, if we wish to establish good human relations, we must once again review our basic concepts of man and his relationship to other men. The important questions we face, therefore, are questions like these:

Do we still believe in freedom?

Is freedom still our most cherished asset?

Do we still want to remain free men?

What do we really mean by the words "freedom" and "free men"?

How do free men deal with each other?

To answer these questions intelligently, isn't easy—cannot be done in a three-hundred word presentation. It requires effort—persistent sustained effort—to think straight, and a willingness to act on the results. In an age of "effortless acceptors" this isn't easy—but—it is a must if freedom is to live.

The job cannot be undertaken by business alone because it concerns us all. Not only our economic freedom is at stake, but also our political, educational and religious freedom as well. That's everybody's business.

If this sort of an assignment were accepted boldly by our religious press—by our schools and colleges—and by parents-teachers groups and town meetings, we could get somewhere—not quickly, but in time.

At least, we could then decide—and decide with intelligence—whether we wish to choose to be mere mechanized men (robots) who, like the deluded youth of Germany, dance to the tune of an all-powerful master—the master of the forces of domination; or whether we wish to choose to be thinking people who, like Zwingli, Lincoln and many others, looked on man as an inviolable personality, capable of reasoning and cooperating with other souls, recognizing only one Master—the Master of the forces of freedom.

If on Labor Day, 1946, we as individuals and communities could resolve bravely to study this central problem of our time—of which labor relations is only a phase—the day would be well spent.

I hope The Mennonite, along with other religious journals, will lead right out with frank discussions that provide us with the answers to the basic questions on freedom referred to in this article.

MENNONITES THE WORLD OVER

By Cornelius Krahn

THE FATE OF THE MOLOTSCHNA COLONY

(Note: This letter repeats what hundreds of others have stated. It summarizes comprehensively how the Molotschna Colony was destroyed and what happened to the once prosperous settlers.)

The German Army Approaches

"All of us, 8000 women and children, were taken to the depot at Waldheim in 1941. The men from 16 to 60 had all been taken September 2. Heinrich Baergen, Greta's husband, wrote a letter from Charkov in which he stated that they had to walk 40 kilometers every day. In Charkov they were put into trains and sent to Siberia.

One Returns

"In November one of the men returned. Was that an excitement! All women ran to see him and hoped that their husbands also would come. But their hope was in vain. He told us their experiences. They had traveled in a freight train seventeen days, receiving a small piece of bread and a fish head per man per day, and one bucket of water for fifty men. They nearly died for hunger and thirst. Sometimes the train would stop in a field and they would get out to get some beets and cabbage. After seventeen days they were unloaded on the open steppes of Siberia where they were supposed to provide themselves shelter for the winter in order to build a railroad. The reporter escaped. Although he was shot at and had other extreme difficulties, he finally reached home. He knew nothing about the fate of the others."

A Prelude

"My husband was taken in 1937 and I never learned what happened to him. My son Tobias was taken in 1938 to be shot to death but was released after 16 months. After that he and his wife were caught at the Ohrloff school. They had been graduated from the Teachers' Training Institute at Odessa. In 1941 he was exiled to Siberia and a month later his wife and little daughter were also exiled. We have no report from them. Brother Heinrich Janz, the Elder of the Lanskrone Church for a number of years, was condemned to be shot because he had some American addresses. The verdict was altered and he was exiled to Krasnojarsk for 10 years and his wife and children to Kasakstan. His son Peter who had been in prison for two years, was released, but had to report every ten days for examination, until he could stand it no longer and threw himself under a train. He had been married for three weeks. Our neighbor Heinrich Martens hanged himself in 1940 and his brother Jakob Martens in 1936. The people were tortured to such a degree that they despaired. The men that were exiled from 1936-38 were badly mistreated.

The Fate of the Villages

"The following villagers were all sent to Kasakstan: Franzthal, Groszweide, Alexanderthal, Schardau, Elisabethtal, Steinfeld, Friendensruh, Alexanderkrone, Kleefeld, Rosenort, Blumenort, Tiege, Ohrloff, Altenau, Meunsterberg, Blumenstein, Lichtenau. The other half of the Molotschna settlement, the villages from Rudnerweide to Pordenau, from Tiegerweide to Waldheim, from Klippenfeld to Hamberg and Fischchau, Lindenau, Gnadenthal, Margenau, Nikolaidorf and Sparau, all came under German occupation.

For five days, from October 2-7, we waited at the Waldheim depot and watched people pass through on trains, some on open and some on closed cars. It was a terrible sight to watch them being exiled to Kasakstan under the accusation of being enemies of the country. I could write volumes on what Greta and I have experienced on our trip since that time until we arrived in Holland . . . . If we should get affidavits from Canada we can go there. If not we do not know what will happen to us since we cannot stay here . . .

With hearty greetings,

COMMENT ON COMMUNISM?

Francis Starr, Canadian Young Friend in the China Friends Ambulance Unit writes,

"One of the first things we were told when we arrived in China was not to let anything out of our sight that we wanted to see again. I learned the truth of this as have most FAUers.

One of the first things we were told when we got into Red China was that there is no theft there. My experience says that that is also true. I left the truck unlocked and uncovered out in the street one night with no losses. When I went to Youngnien I left the truck on the beach at Lanch'ow with lots of little articles in it that could easily be pinched but weren't. If I had done such a thing (and I wouldn't even consider it) in Nationalist China, all the articles would have disappeared and quite likely the truck also.—Th American Friend.

a laborer forge still greater returns in order to conserv what he can get. Furthermore, higher income for a laborers through such a plan would increase the tota consumption so that industry could better afford t expand. It is to be hoped that the examples of profit sharing will be held before the public in such a clear an definite way, that it will be possible to judge the meri of the plan more accurately. It is indeed commendab from the point of bringing people together.

Labor Conditions in a Small Kansas Town

by Milo Goering

In the past year our newspapers have been full of news about the labor situation in our country. Labor has consistently demanded higher wages and better working conditions. Anyone who has visited a large industrial city will be aware that the demands of labor are not entirely out of line.

No all problems are big. Neither are all labor problems to be identified with large cities. Let us take a glimpse into a small (Population about 900) town in central Kansas. The following table shows some interesting facts about five of its leading businesses.

Working conditions in small factories are seldom as hazardous as in large factories. The danger of occupational disease due to poor sunlight and ventilation is somewhat eliminated in the factory that is not producing in mass quantities.

All of the employers in this case give their employees vacation with pay. Ten to fourteen days are usually granted. No deduction is made from the pay envelope in case of illness. One employee was carried on the payroll for six weeks while he was ill.

It is well to notice that in only one of the five businesses do the employees sign a written contract or an agreement. This indicates the personal relationship between employer and employee which is a very important factor in the solution of their problems.

These five business were all well established and therefore do not present a picture that is entirely accurate.

Kind of Business	Local Corporation	Local Corporation	Private Business	Cooperative	Cooperative
Approx. volume of Business	2 million	180 thousand	150 thousand	150 thousand	1 million
Number Employed	40 to 80	9	11	8	10
Average wage per week	$40	$37.50	$35	$40	$37.50
Extra benifits	Vacation Sick leave	Vacation Sick leave	Vacation Sick leave	Vacation Sick leave	Vacation Sick leave
Length of contract	1 year	1 year	agreement	Verbal Agreement	1 year
Social Security	yes	yes	yes	yes	yes
Attitude of employer toward labor unions	favorable	indifferent	unfavorable	indifferent	indifferent
elongs usiness rganization	yes	yes	yes	yes	no

The table shows that the average weekly wage is thirty-eight dollars. Whether or not that is an adequate wage or a small town is a question that can only be answered by circumstances.

The Gospel--No More, No Less

"For a great door and effectual is opened unto me, nd there are many adversaries." I Cor. 16:9.

Attacks and methods of the adversary differ, but e aim is always the same—to thwart the purpose of od.

God has opened the eyes of some folks here to the uth of salvation by grace alone. We so rejoiced in is and then almost immediately were confronted by esh oppostion in the person of a preacher and his aching that Christ and baptism are both necessary. Some are wavering as they listen to him.

Added to this a new element has sought entrance to this community. While they are fundamental, they stress denominational affiliation so strongly that they are seemingly hindering instead of being the help they could be. We know our God is able even for these circumstances, and we want to be trustful and faithful in every way for the glory of God and the welfare of the souls of these people.

Folks are eager for "preaching services" so we are trying to have a program of Sunday School and preaching for each Sunday. Also gathering one night a week for Bible Study and prayer.

Twenty-six schools have been entered by Miss Joy and myself and we plan to meet these children semimonthly throughout the school year. We covet your prayer for this ministry to these rural children, many of whom hear the gospel from no one else, as well as for the ministry in this community where we live. — Elsie Pfister, Incline, Kentucky, August 8, 1946.

Men and Hunger

— a book review by H. A. Fast

Men and Hunger by Guetzkow and Bowman. Published by Brethren Publishing House, Elgin, Illinois. Price $1.00. 72 pp.

Among a variety of very important projects sponsored by the Civilian Public Service program certainly one of the most significant was the experimental starvation project conducted by the University of Minnesota in co-operation with the Brethren Service Committee, American Friends Service Committee, and Mennonite Central Committee. Many people in a general way knew of the experiment, but comparatively few sensed how significant its results would be in the postwar period when half the world is living on a semi-starvation level.

The full results of this experiment have not yet been written up but a preliminary and very valuable interpretation of its significance and its implications has been made by two young men who themselves were actively associated with this "guinea pig" project. Harold Guetzkow, a trained psychologist, and Paul Bowman, a relief worker under the Brethren Service Committee from the days of the civil war in Spain, deserve our thanks for making available at this early date an inside analysis of what happens to people who are slowly starving or who exist for months on a very deficient diet.

They trace not only the terrible consequences of insufficient diet on bodily strength and vigor, but also the tragic deterioration of the whole personality. They describe the lack of ambition, the effort required in making decisions, and the consequent tendency to postpone action, the terrible sense of frustration, hopelessness, and despair, the increasing irritability even over trifles, the difficulty of exercising patience, the lowering of morale, the increasing preoccupation with self and with the ever present and pressing bodily needs, the loss of a high sense of idealism and of moral values generally, and so forth. Interestingly enough, they point out that starvation in their observation and experience definitely does not quicken but rather distressingly weakens a person's religious interests.

Guetzkow does an excellent job in analyzing what happens to the human personality under conditions of insufficient diet and starvation. Bowman in the light of his relief experience does an equally commendable job in analyzing some of the implications of this experiment on the type of service relief workers ought to render in areas of starvation.

The experiment was perhaps not altogether realistic in every respect. This was laboratory starvation in which practically all basic factors in the starvation process were under careful scientific control. The men who participated in this voluntary starvation experiment were fully aware that they were taking serious risks with their health, but they also knew that they were under expert care and that every precaution would be taken to prevent permanent injury. Starving peoples generally have none of these alleviating certainties and assurances to buoy them up. Nevertheless, this experiment was so carefully conducted and received such conscientious participation on the part of the "guinea pigs" that the results observed and measured are a dependable index of what happens to people in various stages of starvation. Shocking as some of these revelations are, it is well to remember that the results under conditions of actual starvation are even more terribly tragic, especially when one thinks of children as the victims.

Here is a book that should be read widely and thoughtfully in all our churches and especially by relief workers. It should give us a deeper and more sympathetic understanding of the plight of starving people; it should give us a keener appreciation of how terribly necessary is food, but also how supremely important is a service of relief that is performed in the "name of Christ" and carried on in His spirit and with His understanding of real human need.

It Is August--1965

by William K. Anderson

The other day I was wandering over the shore line of North Jersey looking beyond the river at the rubble that once had been New York City. Everything seemed very peaceful in the hot August sun. There were two sailboats on the bay, and I wondered where they could have come from. I had not seen any since the bombs came. As I walked along, stepping over the derbis which no one had cleared away, although the last bomb fell over a year ago, I came across an elderly citizen who sat on the ground looking sadly over the scene.

He was startled when I spoke to him. "Sir, you look old enough to have a memory of other days," I began. "Why did all this destruction have to come to such a powerful nation as we were?" I give you his story as I remember it.

"Even to this day," he answered, "every adult still living remembers August 6, 1945, just twenty-one years ago. It was only a few days before the close of World War II. A little load of 'dead matter,' drifting down under a parachute so the carrying plane could get away, suddenly came alive and even in that first atomic explosion of history (not counting the trial in New Mexico) 60,000 Japanese were suddenly cremated.

"We have seen a hundred times worse since then, but in that day the world was terrified. Shortly afterward came a request for peace from Japan, because no nation could stand against the new form of warfare.

"Then the allied nations that had been united by hate and fear of their enemies began to be divided by suspicion. America had what was then called the new 'secret weapon' and the powerful leaders decided to keep it. The scientists who invented it tried valiantly to show that no such secret could be kept, let alone one that had tremendous possible profits. But the military people had already begun to be powerful in those days and they said, 'We've got this now and we must keep it for ourselves.' It was back in those days of 1945 and 1946 that the important decisions were made.

"Soon other nations began to be envious of our new power and this made America think, 'How are we going to make ourselves safe in a world of growing resentment?' And the military people came up glibly with an answer. They said, 'We'll have to make a soldier out of every American citizen.' This was resisted for a time by people who claimed, 'That's what Germany did and look what has happened to her'. But the military people kept reiterating, 'God helps those who help themselves!' They added: 'Our word has been powerful in the world recently because we have been well armed. And as we discharge our soldiers rapidly, the other nations lose their respect for us. If we are going to have an influence for peace we must remain strong. Otherwise we shall sink back to where they disregard us as they did before the war when we were weak.'

"And those who feared to lose our democracy and world friendship said, 'What do you mean—disregarded? Wendell Willkie went around the world in 1942 and told us when he came back of a marvelous "reservoir of good will" toward America all over the world. Now you want to build up gigantic military powers so that we can push people around and tell them what to do, and that is blasting the dam in front of the reservoir.'

"But the military people replied: 'We must keep America safe, and the way to do it is to make ourselves stronger than all possible enemies.'

"Critical people who remembered prewar idealistic promises like the Atlantic Charter said, 'That's a return of the old power politics which we in the United States have always scorned.' But the military folks said, 'You must be realistic in a realistic world, and this is the way to avoid mistakes.'

"And there were people who said: 'Look! We are destroying militarism in Japan and dismantling it in Germany and what is the idea of setting it up in America? Didn't we fight two wars against militarism? Let's outlaw the dirty business all over the world.' But the military people had an answer and said: "Depend on the promises of those Russians? You wouldn't be so foolish, would you?' "

The old man carefully chose a stalk of timothy and chewed it thoughtfully—then broke out into another chapter of his story. "There were people who said: 'Here's this new United Nations organization. Why not develop that into an effective world organization which can punish international racketeers by law before they get started, and still give each nation a chance to continue in its own cultural traditions? Let America lead the nations in working this out and then give to this world government custody over atomic bombs and other war paraphernalia.' But there were too many skeptics who believed in the outworn sovereignty of nations and disbelieved in their ability to get together except in war time. The world was really a neighborhood but short-sighted people could not believe that peaceful neighborly living was possible.

"And folks asked, 'What are you going to do when other nations find the secret of atomic energy and make their own bombs?' The military people replied, 'We'll put spies in all other countries who will warn us ahead of what they are doing. Then we can build bigger bombs and faster rockets, because our industrial resources are the bast in the world.' But the scientists kept soberly telling those who would listen the facts we now know—that there was no defense against atomic warfare.

"And there was a general who said, 'We've had our last chance; now we have to learn to live together,' and millions of people then thought he was talking sense. But others would have none of it.

"There were people who asked, 'If you are determined to have war it will be atomic, so what's the use of soldiers and conscription?' And the military men countered with this, 'The strong nations of history have always been nations that were ready to fight if they had to!' People asked, 'Do you mean Greece and Rome and the Holy Roman Empire and Spain and Napoleon's France and Hitler's Germany and poor old Mussolini? They were ready to fight and look what happened to them.' But the military replied, 'We live in a bad world and we must prepare for the worst.'

" 'If you prepare for the worst, you'll get it,' the people answered.

"So that was the way things worked out and the peace of 1945 never came. Revolutions and wars continued, and the more powerful America became, the more other nations feared us. So finally, as you know they all combined against us, and it was the old world against the new.

"You may not know much real history because textbooks have all been changed," the old man continued. "But you know that America used to be a democracy. The old democracy gradually disappeared as the youngger generation became ardent militarists. So we have been a military dictatorship since 1950.

"And you are familiar with the rest of the story. There are only a few of us left—not enough to rebuild our cities in fifty years. Now that the world is totalitarian, maybe the new international government will meet the hopes of the 25,000,000 people they say we still have alive in the earth. But it's hard for me to accept what has come. I keep thinking that it was all unnecessary.

"I have never stopped wishing that the giant America that I knew, with its free religion and free schools and free speech and big industrial production, had possessed the vision to use its power for universal peace. I think it could have been done but instead we sought our own protection which we now know was so foolish in the atomic age. We were guided by fears instead of faith.

"You're young," the old fellow added. "I wish you could have known the demorcacy of America before militarism got hold of us. It was much better." He sat reminiscing for a few moments and then concluded, "Well, we've got our lesson. They that take the atomic bomb shall perish by the atomic bomb."

I went along to the little shelter where my brother and I have stayed since the rest of the family were killed, and I wished I could go back to school, but there are no schools. I am puzzled about this democracy that he spoke of because all of my military instructors have always told us that, back in the democratic period, the government was loose and inefficient and that we never had any real protection. I wonder!

The Milk Supply in Jagdeeshpore

With this short note we want to thank all of you who have helped with the buying of cows for our boarding homes in Jagdeeshpore. We have at this time one hundred-fifty boys and girls in our boarding homes; and often there is sickness among these children. Some are undernourished and weak. Then we always have some children and adults in our Christian community outside of the boarding homes who need milk.

At present we have eight cows giving milk and five more will be fresh before long. And we have seven heifers. About six months ago we bought a very good cow and four calves, on faith. We did not have the money at that time, but we needed the milk, and we trusted God for the help needed. But we were sorely tested when that good cow died, and also one of the good grade calves. That was a severe blow. But we have gone on in hope, and you have helped us, for which we are very grateful. With milk, and vegetables from the school farm, we see how the physical health of our school children increases. Above all, we do all we can to supply spiritual health. Our heavenly Father supplies the needful for this also.

(To show the scarcity of milk in India where the cow is considered holy, it will interest you to know that we had to send two of our cows seventeen miles to the Camp where the Governor of these Provinces had his headquarters when he visited in this area. There is practically no milk in this country; yet there are millions of cattle.)

Yours, Gratefully,

John Thiessen

Eight High School Graduates in Jagdeeshpore, India

Last year was the first year that a full high school course could be offered by Jansen Memorial School in Jagdeeshpore mission, in Champa Province, India. Eight young people graduated, the first to graduate from the high school. A few facts are submitted herewith by Rev. John Thiessen about this event and the young people as well as his hopes for their future.

Upon reading of this event, there are some striking facts which impress one. First of all, is the fact that this is the first graduating class of a high school. Contrast that with our country which expects everyone to be a high school graduate and nearly everyone is. This would indicate that the educational needs are great and will require heroism to meet in the Indian mission field.

A more striking fact is that regarding the background of these eight young people. Most of the readers of this paper have a background which has a long tradition of Christian thought and training. Theirs is a solid stable heritage of good churches communities, schools, families, food, and income. Especially is this true when compared with the brief story of the eight graduates of the new high school in Jagdeeshpore. Theirs is a story of illiteracy, poverty, a Hindu culture which looks down on the Christian message, and all the rest that goes with a quite unstable, insecure existance.

We quote the following from Rev. Thiessen's letter:

"With this I would like to introduce our eight young men who will be the first graduates of our young high school at Jagdeeshpore station I think many of the young people of our conference will be glad to know their names . . . These eight are Christian young men. There are two non-Christians in the class besides these eight. They will graduate next March. The eight are: Samodhan Kumar, Nocodeem Sona, Sukho Das, Bishwas Singh, Arjoon Pandeo, Zacharia Gardia, Cornelius Das, Seth Chandra.

"It is our fond hope that these eight young men will be worthy of further education after finishing high school, so that they may become our co-workers as ministers of the gospel, serving as pastors of churches, and as teachers in our own high school. We are so glad that the young people of our conference also take part in building up a student fund, so that these young men and others may be further prepared to serve in our Master's kingdom as evangelists and teachers and medical people.

Here is a word about each of the eight students which shows what can become of people who submit to the grace of God.

Samodhan Kumar's parents were beggars, and even now his father is not capable of doing anything more than to serve as a cheap watchman. Neither his father nor mother can write or read a word. Yet some years ago they accepted Christ, and willed to give their children a better chance.

Nocodeem Sona's father is a farmer-preacher. Has a little education so that he can read his Bible and preach in an informal way. His mother is illiterate.

Sukho Das' father is one of our leading evangelists. Just at present he serves as my assistant pastor in the Bethel church at Jagdeeshpore. Sukho's brother-in-law is the head-teacher in our primary school here in Jadeesphore.

Biswas Singh's father is blind Sundarsingh from Mauhadih station, whom many readers of our Mennonite papers know for years already as our blind evangelist. His mother has died. She was also illiterate.

Arjoon Pandeo is the son of a crippled father who has a very large family whom he cannot support. Yet the parents are both very faithful Christians. The father serves as a watchman at the Mauhadih mission station.

Zacharia Gardia is the son of one of our richest Christian farmers. Both father and mother are enterprizing and intelligent people, though they have had very little chance at education. They want their children to have a better chance.

Cornelius Das is the son of Garib Das. In our mission literature is a pamphlet called, "The Conversion of Garib." This was written by Miss Burkhalter some years ago. Garib is one of our most faithful Christians. One of his other sons is school clerk in Jangjir, another is now student in a theological seminary, and a third is a teacher. Cornelius is a senior in High School.

Seth Chandra is the son of a medical compounder who has worked for some years in our leper home in Champa Leper Asylum.

This is the first year we have a full high school in our mission. To build up this high school has taken and is taking a lot of my best energy. There is much to be done yet before our furlough in March, 1949; but by the grace of God much can done yet. We believe it is right that we build up the Christian youth in India to carry on the work which we as missionaries under God have started. We trust that we have the support of our home constituency in this—support in good-will, prayer, and material ways.

Oregon Young People Hold Fifth Annual Retreat

by Elaine Widmer

July 8-15 was marked a happy and well-spent week for many Oregon retreaters. The retreat was held at Trout Creek Camp, an ideal camp up in the mountains located about twenty miles northeast of Portland. There was something about the mountain atmosphere, the tall trees and the cool, flowing creek that brought you close to nature and to God. It seemed you were in a world of your own, away from civilization and it's many cares and problems.

The registration on Monday, July 8, registered sixty-nine young people; by Sunday this total had risen to one-hundred thirty-five or more.

The theme for the retreat this year was "Christian Youth in the Post War World." Each class was centered around this theme. Scriptural reference for the theme was Romans 8:6,37.

Rev. Homer Leisy of Dallas taught a class on "Christian Youth and the Holy Spirit." He explained the Holy Spirit and His place in our lives, and gave each retreater a clearer vision of the Holy Spirit. Rev. W. A. Regier of Pratum, Oregon, was instructor of the class. "Christian Youth as Soul Winners," based on the text book, "Personal Soul Winning" by William Evans. This also was an interesting and very profitable class. Rev. Paul Kuhlman, Dean of the Grace Bible Institute of Omaha, Nebraska, was the guest speaker of the retreat. He also, with Rev. P. A. Kliewer of Albany, taught a class on missions entitled "Christian Youth and the Missionary Challenge." This class dealt with the missionary and his message. Mr. and Mrs. Burt Russell of Portland were in charge of the general assembly class "Christian Youth and Music." This music period consisted of special musical numbers each day, chorus singing, and choir numbers which were worked up for the Sunday services.

Other retreat leaders who filled their place wonderfully were Mr. Wm. Zehr, Dean of the camp; Mrs. Wm. Zehr, Dean of Women; Mrs. Yoder, an excellent cook! Mrs. Paul Hinnamon, camp nurse, who proved herself very useful; Mrs. Homer Leisy, serving us as a real dining room hostess; Elaine Widmer, as "Camp News" editor.

Mrs. Wm. Zehr and Mrs. Ted Toews were the recreation directors who kept everyone busy with their well-planned recreational program. Such sports as swimming, hiking, softball, horseshoe, volleyball and croquet were enjoyed each afternoon by all. Each evening some special event was planned such as hikes, treasures hunts, get-to-gether games, stunt nights etc. The evening recreation was followed by the campfire services which ended the days program.

A big improvement of this year's retreat was the public address system. Records of chimes were played over the loud speaker each morning at 6:30, by this waking us up. Organ music was played in the evenings while we were getting ready for bed. This music was enjoyed very much by the retreaters.

Many visitors were at the camp on Sunday. Regular Sunday services were held beginning with Sunday School and church in the morning, a singspiration in the afternoon, followed by a recreational period. We had Christian Endeavor in the evening; and a challenging message by Rev. Clyde Dirks closed the evening service.

We enjoyed the retreat this year immensely and wish to thank everyone who made it a successful retreat.

A Project for a Young People's Group

Often young people's societies are seeking to find some special project which they can take up and work on throughout the year. It is not easy sometimes to find a project which will be both worthwhile in itself and of interest to the group. And it is important to choose a project which has the right qualifications all around—one that is of personal interest, one that fills a real need, that is not too big for the group to be able to do much with, that challenges the group to greater undertakings in the future.

Here is one project that came to our attention which should interest some young people's group. Rev. John Thiessen, missionary in India, wrote stating that they have need for good Christian literature. His letter is as follows: "Since our Indian students learn English and those in the high school department read English well, we are always in need of good Christian literature. In The Mennonite of January 5, 1946, I notice a list of books recommended for children. If any society would be interested to supply our school with some of them, especially those listed as: books that emphasize some Christian truth; and also such books as "Bible pictures and what they teach," and others. Such and similar books would serve a fine Christian purpose among our young people in India."

Perhaps a young people's society, or several, would be interested in this as a project of theirs. If so, further details may be obtained by writing the editor of this section.

"No Complaining in Our Streets"

The writer of the one hundred and forty-fourth Psalm ends up his striking little poem with a prayer, a prayer for the happiness and prosperity of his people, not an unusual prayer for the Psalm writers to make, by the way. He hopes that their sons may be as plants grown up in their youth, strong and sound and lusty; that their daughters may be as polished corner-stones of a palace; that their fields may yield wonderful harvest; that their sheep may bring forth tens of thousands, and their oxen be strong and lusty for labour. Then follows the climax and purpose of his prayer and hoping—"That there be no complaining in our streets."

It was a long time ago that that prayer was made; I wonder what has happened to the answer! Reading Israel's history one does not see much sign of its ever having been answered in their case. The Children of Abraham always seemed ready to do their fair share of complaining. And if we look around at other lands in other ages we seem to see plenty of it, too. Certainly we will not see many indications of the dawning of this day for which the Psalmist prayed in our America in the twentieth century. How we do complain, in the street, in the market-place, in Congress, perhaps in the church quite as much as anywhere! Without doubt ours is a day greatly given to complaining.

It surely is a quaint idea that the Psalmist had, that if you gave people plenty they would be won away from their complaining, that people haven't any very good ground or reason for complaining doesn't at all say that they will not do it, as history and experience very clearly show. Of course, we have our ways of explaining and justifying the complaining that we do, and sometimes take many grains of comfort from the thought that the dissatisfactions that lead on to our complaining may not be altogether bad, as indeed they may not be. But the fact that those of us who complain most are not usually the ones who have the clearest vision of what is the matter or are doing the most to bring about remedies, should quite distinctly modify our feeling of satisfaction.

I wonder if most of the complaining that is done isn't done by people who have just got themselves into a habit of doing it. And however we may try to justify it, it is very difficult to see it as a good habit. I wonder, too, if some of us haven't done enough complaining to last for the rest of our lifetime, and if it wouldn't be an excellent idea if we gave up the habit altogether. It is just about certain that there are other attitudes toward the life about us and toward our fellows that we could assume that would be considerably more helpful.

Perhaps we couldn't say that complaining never did any good, but it looks as if the good done at best was small in comparison with the energy expended, and then there is always the risk that there might be considerable evil mixed up with the good. Certainly complaining is apt not to be very good for the one who indulges in it. For one thing, it may very easily grow until it becomes a rather fixed habit, and in the end turn what was a reasonably cheerful and hopeful person into a whiner. Even if we feel rather sure that we have some reason to complain it might be better to wait quite a while before starting in to do it.—Onward.

Attention on People, Not Causes

A writer says, "It is people not causes which awaken love; and love is the secret of joyous giving." Sympathies are aroused not by abstract ideas but by personal contact with suffering and sorrow. Ask a man to give to a poor fund and he may meet you with an excuse; show him a father unemployed, a mother sick and three or four little children hungry and half-naked, and he cheerfully hands out a five or ten-dollar bill. A speaker may talk eloquently about Christian missions generally; it is the missionary who has first-hand knowledge of heathenism and who has come face to face with men and women in its bondage who gets the contributions. Recently an appeal was made for our ministers in the West, a simple statement of their destitution owing to the drought—a bountiful response far exceeding expectations was the result; had there been a general appeal for help, budgeted up with two or three other causes, quite likely less would have been received for all than for one.

Heart responds to heart and eye to eye. If one works for the Church as a mere cause he is not likely to accomplish much; if he concentrates his thought and activities on persons, it may be one person, one family, one Sunday School class, he will probably do successful work. A young people's society must think of the young people, not the society. The New Testament has little to say of the Church as a cause, an institution, everywhere is dealing with people—their needs, their sins, their salvation Jesus came primarily not to establish a Church, but to save people from their sins.—Onward.

Youth Events

The budget for the present fiscal year of the U.S. Government is approximately 24 billion dollars. Of this, the army receives $7,263,541,000 which does not include War Department Civilian Functions amounting to $333,230,498. The Navy's budget is $4,119,659,300, the Veterans Administration $4,431,142,415. Selective Service receives about twenty-seven million dollars. In round figures this totals sixteen billion dollars for America's armed might.

In comparison to this, the Department of Agriculture receives $573,601,949, Congress and the Legislative Establishment receive $53,809,736, the Department of the Interior has $247,167,036. In other words, sixteen billions are to be used for America's mailed fist and eight billions will be used for all the other functions of the government.

Avaiable from the Friends Committee on National Legislation, 2111 Florida Avenue, N. W., Washington 8, D. C. is a chart indicating the way Congressman and Senators voted on seven major bills. This chart thus indicates the stand the Congressman and Senators have taken, whether they are consistent, whether they are reactionary or progressive in their viewpoints. The price of the "Voting Record" is ten cents per copy and there are special quotations in quantity purchases.

Word from the Bartow, Florida C. P. S. camp indicates that it is finding many opportunities for service in its new location. This camp had previously been located at Mulberry, Florida. Last Spring it moved from there to a former army air base. The following is a quotation from a report on Bartow:

"The camp is located on a main highway about halfway between Bartow and Winter Haven, cities of about 8,000 population. Housing facilities are former officers' Quarters, divided into three-room apartments for two men. There are adequate facilities for offices, library, kitchen, dining hall, as well as adequate recreational facilities, including a large lake for swimming and boating within three miles of the camp. Some work is yet needed to get some of the buildings into shape for use. At present the work will center around hookworm control and tuberculosis control though it may branch out farther if adequate personnel and facilities can be made available at a later date. In hookworm control, plans are for setting up a large plant for the production of prefabricated sanitary pit privies on a mass production scale similar to the plant formerly at Mulberry, though with different design and state wide distribution. Plans are also started for a TB isolation hospital for negro patients who cannot be admitted to the already overflowing sanitorium. This is an opportunity for real service in these very needy fields for anyone who is willing to serve a year or more."

Reports from Bluffton and Bethel College indicate that the two schools will be completely filled for the coming year. Efforts are being made by both schools to accomodate the married couples who will be on the campus. A folder has been released describing more fully the Mennonite Biblical Seminary and the new property purchased in Chicago in July. A good enrollment is reported for the Seminary also.

In the above paragraph mention is made of military appropriations as being sixteen billion of dollars. An interesting additional comment is the following: The army requested an appropriation of $693,000,000 for government and relief in occupied areas which include Japan, Korea, Austria, and the American Zone in Germany. The Budget Bureau cut this request to $500,000,000, the House Subcommittee on Military Appropriations slashed the amount to $350,000,000. The Senate restored it to $500,000,000 and it finally was compromised at $425,000,000 which is 268 millions less than the original request.

At the same time, the appropriation for atomic bomb activities was increased from $200,000,000 to $375,000,000, and the appropriations for the Engineering Service which is largely for overseas military bases was increased to $375,544,000. An interesting commentary on Washington trends in mailed fist thinking.

C. P. S.

The Voluntary Service Units which were operating in three mental hospitals and public health project came to a close on August 14. Twenty-two girls worked at the Cleveland State Hospital, Cleveland, Ohio; twenty at Norristown State Hospital, Norristown, Pennsylvania; eighteen at Howard State Hospital, Howard, Rhode Island; and seven full-time, two part-time at the Gulfport, Missisippi Public Health Center. The program emphasized special training in each unit: Norristown, recreation; Howard, relief; Cleveland, church youth work; and Gulfport, religous education.

Hulda Gaede recently made a tour of the three Mental Hospital Units in the interests of the MCC to evaluate the summer service program. In the visit she attempted to: 1) see the unit at work: 2) get an evaluation of the summer's work from the viewpoints of the unit members, the women's unit leader, the CPS unit leader, and the hospital staff; 3) to learn the consensus of opinion among the unit members regarding the continuation of the women's summer project in the future and, 4) to gather data for the purpose of recording the achievments, the problems, and some unrealized potentialities of the unit as an aid in organizing and operatng future units.

In almost every case Hulda Gaede observed that the unit was a success. The hospitals were glad to have the girls there because of the high quality of their work, and the girls thought the experience was enriching for their own lives. There was a general feeling that the summer service program should be continued next summer, although they felt that future units should include men and women.

Units to Close

A number of CPS units are scheduled to close in the near future: August 15: Harrisburg State Hospital, Harrisburg, Pennsylvania; and Spring Grove State Hospital, Catonsville, Maryland. September 1: Western State Hospital, Staunton, Virginia. October 1: Ypsilanti State Hospital, Ypsilanti, Michigan; and Norristown State Hospital, Norristown, Pennsyvania.

RELIEF

Two notable letters of appreciation came to the Akron office this week from the city of Kassel, Germany. Several weeks ago we called attention to the hild feeding program in Kassel where 4,500 children re receiving daily supplementary rations. Apparenty the letters are from this group of children who reeived a bowl of thick, hot soup and a "brotchen," the atter baked from M. C. C.-contributed flour.

"Dear Friends and Brethren: We have to thank ou for your great and affectionate help. Since last ear we shelter children who are homeless by war ction. Most of them are orphans. To care for these nnocents is a wonderful task in the name of Christ. ur difficulties to afford it were enormous. We had o clothing and no bread. Last time we baked bread ut of potato-pealings, from boiled potatoes. Our chilren suffered starvation. Now we received your flour nd bread and meat and clothing. You cannot imagine vhat it means for us. We distributed the good bread n the presence of our Lord and Master Jesus Christ o the hungry children. We praise God for it. MENNONITE BIBLICAL SEMINARY AND MENNONITE BIBLE SCHOOL

On Wednesday, August 14, at 3 p. m., the full payment for our Seminary home was made. The deed and the keys have been turned over into our hands, and Rev. and Mrs. Arnold Regier have moved into the premises. Other students are expected next week.

The Lord has answered prayers. May our lives and services be a testimony to His goodness. To all who have contributed to this deal most hearty thanks.

Some money had to be borrowed, but we trust the Lord and His people for future help.

Pictures of the estate are in the engravery. They shall be ready for the next issue of The Mennonite.

All correspondence from now on should be addressed to the Mennonite Biblical Seminary and Bible School, 4614 Woodlawn Avenue, Chicago 15, Illinois.

Jottings

—Arlington Mennonite Church, Arlington, Kansas: Our pastor, David Cone, has spent part of the summer as a leader at various young people's camps. He was the song leader and director of music at all the camps he attended and taught Bible courses at several of them. He attended camps at Bonner Springs, Girard, Stirling, and Emporia and also a young people's conference at Emporia. August 11, Rev. R. R. Kaiser of Herrington brought us the message while Mr. Cone filled the pulpit at Rev. Kaiser's church in Herrington,—Mrs. Lester Ewy, Corr.

—Wymark, Saskatchewan: Rev. V. E. Nickel attended the Conference at Vineland, Ontario, June 30-July 3. The Lord richly blessed us at the Children's Bible Camp, July 14:21 and the Young People's Retreat, July 21-28 at Elim Gospel Beach. We were privileged to have with us the following speakers: Rev. J. J. Esau, Rev. P. R. Shelly, Rev. J. D. Unruh, and Marvin Dirks. There were a number of decisions for Christ and twenty-two young people dedicated themselves for His consecration to full time Christian service.—Ruby Brown, Corr.

—Walton Mennonite Church, Walton, Kansas: Rev. C. B. Friesen and family have moved to Walton. A reception dinner in the church basement was enjoyed by the congregation in their honor on August 4. Installation services were held August 18 with Rev. D. C. Wedel as speaker. An outdoor C. E. program was enjoyed by all on the church lawn August 11. A social hour followed.

—First Church of Christian Mennonite, Moundridge, Kansas: A special "Welcome Home Service" for the church members, who were in the service of our country, was held August 18. Of the forty-four members in the service all have been discharged except one who inducted since VJ Day. Three lost their lives.—Linda V. Kaufman, Corr.

—Rev. Herbert H. Peters, who has been serving the church at Arena, North Dakota, writes that he plans to attend Grace Bible School and that the church has given him a nine months leave-of-absence.

—Dr. Ed G. Kaufman of Bethel College and Dr. E. E. Miller of Goshen College returned from their trip to Europe on August 12. The two men, who had been assigned, by the Council of American Mennonite and Affiliated Colleges and the M.C.C., the special mission of going to Europe this summer in the interest of the European and American student exchange, visited Mennonite communities and M.C.C. relief centers in Europe. According to Dr. Kaufman they succeeded in making arrangements for about twenty-five students to come to the United States this fall to study at Hesston, Bethel, Tabor, Freeman, Bluffton, Goshen, Eastern Mennonite School, Messiah Bible College, and Mennonite Biblical Seminary. Sixteen of these students will be from Holland, two from Belgium, three of four from Alsace and Switzerland, and four (Waldensians) from Italy. Some of these will be academy students, but most of them will enroll in college. Most of them talk fairly good English. Thirty young people from Holland applied for the privilege of studying in the United States. The invitation to do so was broadcast over the Dutch radio. Dr. Kaufman reports that the Mennonites of Holland are a substantial class and well educated. Many of them occupy important positions. The president of the chamber of commerce of the large city of Amsterdam is a Mennonite. The president of the seminary connected with the University of Amsterdam (Lutherans and Reformed also participate in the seminary) is a Mennonite. The head of the Holland American Steamship Line is a Mennonite. Many of the Mennonites have been rather well-to-do. Dr. Kaufman and Dr. Miller also succeeded in making plans whereby Mennonite students from America could study in European centers next summer. In the rough, Dr. Kaufman's itinerary was as follows: England, Holland, Belgium, France, Switzerland, Italy, back to Basel, Switzerland. From there the men took a bus through Germany to Copenhagen, Denmark. All food had to be taken along for this trip. Streets in German cities were still full of litter, whereas in many other places they were bing cleared. In Copenhagen they saw Rev. Walter Gering and visited camps for displaced persons. There are some two hundred thousand. German refugees in camps in Denmark. From here Kaufman and Miller flew to Amsterdam where they spent their last week before leaving by boat from

Dutch Ministers Want To Know Us Better

Due to the graciousness of some individuals and a Sunday School class twenty Dutch Mennonite ministers are now receiving The Mennonite. As mentioned previously in this paper a goodly number of Dutch ministers have expressed their interest in coming into closer fellowship with the Mennonites of America. They are anxious to get The Mennonite, the official English organ of our Conference. These Dutch ministers can read the English. As we understand it, a Dutch government regulation prohibits sending money out of the country for such a matter as subscriptions. Hence these ministers cannot subscribe at the present time. Therefore, the Board of Publication is welcoming gifts for the purpose of sending the official English organ of our Conference to these ministers. Although enough money has come in to put twenty names on the mailing list, there are still twenty-seven on the waiting list. Contributions for this purpose should be addressed to the Mennonite Publication Office, 722 Main Street, Newton, Kansas.

Rotterdam for America. All over Europe there are many displaced people. Dr. Kaufman reports that in general crops all over Europe looked good, but still there is much hunger and starvation, especially in the larger bombed cities.

—Johannestal Church, Hillsboro, Kansas: Mrs. William Ratzlaff, nee Martens, passed on to her heavenly reward on July 26 at the age of sixty-three years. Only three of our young folks were at the retreat this year, and they were of the Junior group.—Mrs. Arnold A. Plenert, Corr.

—First Mennonite Church, McPherson, Kansas: We held our first harvest festival on August 11. We used the new church basement for the occasion. Rev. D. C. Wedel, President of the Western District Conference, was our guest speaker at this special event. The thank offering, which was held, has been added to our building fund. The church dinner after the services was held in the basement.—Mrs. Homer Kaufman, Corr.

—First Church, Mountain Lake, Minnesota: A very fitting and impressive service was held in our church on August 11 when Miss Gladys A. Klassen was ordained as a missionary to India. The program was opened by Rev. I. J. Dick. His introductory remarks were followed by a choir number. Then Rev. August Ewert, returned missionary from China, gave a few words of counsel to Miss Klassen. After that Rev. Walter J. Dick of Philadelphia, Pa., gave a short talk on Matt. 14:16, "They need not depart; give ye them to eat." Rev. D. J. Unruh from Newton, Kansas, sang "Great is Thy Faithfulness." Mrs. . J. Dick and Mrs. John Janzen each read a poem as a response from their respective missionary societies. Then followed the sermon and ordination by Rev. D. J. Unruh, a member of the General Conference Mission Board. He spoke on Rom. 10:15, "How beautiful are the feet of them that preach the gospel of peace and bring glad tidings of good things." After the ordination Miss Klassen gave the response, expressing her gratitude to her parents and friends for the Christian training which helped her in the decision to become a missionary. Rev. V. M. Gerig then gave the closing remarks and prayer.—Mrs. Willmar Loewen, Corr.

—Bethel Church, Inman, Kansas: Edna E. Neufeld and Dan S. Neufeld were united in marriage August 14. Refreshments were served in the church basement to about three hundred guests. The couple is at home in Medora. Rev. Marvin J. Dirks, returned missionary from China, spoke at the union services Sunday night, August 18. Rev. and Mrs. John T. Neufeld from Chicago are visiting with relatives around Inman. They came to see Grandma Neufeld who has been sick for a week.—Dan E. Neufeld, Corr.

—Ebenezer Church, Bluffton, Ohio: The tenth annual young peoples rally of the four churches was held at the Ebenezer Church with Rev. Olin A. Krehbiel of Berne, Indiana, as speaker. Miss Cassie Niswander, city mission worker from Philadelphia, attended services Sunday and gave a short talk in Sunday School. Rev. John Esau, representative of the Grace Bible School of Omaha, Nebraska, attended services Sunday. He is spending several days at home with his wife and son. His sister, Miss Emma Esau a nurse from Chicago, accompanied her brother here and is spending several days with the Esau family.—Mrs. Hiram Neuenschwander, Corr.

—An education conference, sponsored by the Mennonite colleges, was held just previous to the Mennonite Cultural Problems Conference that was held at Freeman, South Dakota. The educational conference convened in two sessions. At the first session on Tuesday forenoon, Dr. E. G. Kaufman, and Dr. E. E. Miller, who just recently returned from a trip to Europe, in which they represented the Council of Mennonite and Affiliated Colleges, reported on their trip. They told of the progress made with respect to securing European students for study here and of the plans made for setting up study centers for American students in Europe. They also reported on the educational situation in Europe. In the afternoon the following topics were treated: "Terminal Education for Mennonite Colleges" by Prof Harold Gross of Freeman College; "A program of Adult Education for Mennonite Colleges" discussed by a panel representing the senior colleges, and "Assimilation of C. P. S. and G. I. men into Campus Life" by Dr. Brubaker of Beulah College.

—First Church, Nappanee, Indiana: Thirty-six children were enrolled in the daily vacation Bible school and twelve others visited several days. There were four classes: Beginners, Primaries, Juniors, and Intermediates. A missionary offering was taken each day and totalled $20.84. Of this $11.32 was spent for a Christmas Bundle to be sent to a five-year-old German boy. This had a complete set of clothng, toys, towels, etc., in it. A committee of three children bought these things. They also bought supplies for six Klen-Up Kits for migrant children. The third missionary gift was school supplies bought for work in Kentucky mountains. The children gave a program in which they recited Bible verses, sang songs, retold stories, put on a quiz program and reviewed missionary stories. They also held an exhibit on a Sunday morning. Eighteen received rewards for perfect attendance. —Mrs. Irene Stahly, Reporter.

—Menno Church, Lind, Washington: We are all looking forward to seeing the Rev. Edmund J. Miller family. Rev. Miller will stop here en route east the eighteenth of this month to bring us the morning message. That same day we are having a potluck farewell dinner for the Rev. Miller family. We wish them much success and God's blessing in their new work.—Mrs. Henry J. Franz, Corr.

—Grace Church, Enid, Oklahoma: July 11 Rev. and Mrs. Ben Rahn returned from their extensive vacation trip up north. On July 13 the young people had a rally on the P. U. grounds. Rev. Waldo Kaufman of Hydro spoke in behalf of C. E. in our church on the evening of July 17. The following day Dr. and Mrs. Herbert Dester spoke and showed pictures of their work in India to a full house. A number of young people and Rev. Rahn attended the young people's retreat at Hydro. It is still very dry and hot here. Vegetation is burning up. Enids water supply has been critical for quite some time.—Mrs. J. F. Kliewer, Corr.

—Bethesda Church, Henderson, Nebraska: Rev. Hugo Mierau preached the morning of August 11. On August 18 Rev. Arnold Epp of Burrton, Kansas, brought the message. The Lord willing, Missionary Herbert Dester will be with us the evening of August 28. The M. C. C. is sending a representative to our church to explain to us more clearly about "Portable Canning." Our church has decided to send Goodwill Christmas packages for the needy.— Mrs. Ruben H. Friesen, Corr.

—Rev. and Mrs. Sam Goering and Robert came back to Newton, Kansas, August 17 after doing relief work in Europe, Rev. Goering from about December, 1944, to the present and Mrs. Goering and Robert from August, 1945, to the present. Miss Jessie Brown, a niece of the Goerings, who had accompanied Mrs. Goering and Robert, also returned to this country but went from Akron to Tennessee to visit with Dr. and Mrs. John Warkentin. Rev. Sam Goering, who served as European Relief Director for the M. C. C., had his headquarters at different times in London, Holland, France, and Basel, Switzerland. Son Robert did trucking for quite some time in Holland and France, and Miss Jessie Brown served as secretary to Mr. Goering. Howard Yoder is succeeding Rev. Goering as Relief Director. He has been stationed in London until now, but he will be stationed in Holland in the future. We hope to have a report by the Goerings in the next issue of this paper.

—Salem Mennonite Church, Dalton, Ohio: The anniversary sermon on the occasion of the observance of the sixtieth anniversary of the founding of Salem Church was preached by the Rev. M. A. Niswander of Upland California, a former pastor of the church from 1919 to 1923. He gave a message that led us closer to God through whose help the work of the congregation has prospered. During the afternoon service two much appreciated messages were given by Rev. J. E. Amstutz of Trenton, Ohio, and Rev. A. R. Keiser of the Bath Ohio Federated Church. This is the home church of Rev. J. E. Amstutz, and Rev. A. R. Keiser was our former pastor from 1923 to 1938. This is also the home church of Mrs. Keiser. There were also some responses by present and former members of the church, including reminiscenses of the early days by Mrs. N. G. Frankhauser. At the evening service, Delvin Kirchhofer, also a former member, who has recently returned from almost three years of relief service in Egypt and Italy, gave a splendid message on relief activities and showed many fine pictures taken on his journey. The day was also a homecoming, and the services were attended by a large number of people who filled the church to capacity. Former Sunday School teachers took charge of the Sunday School classes for the day. Recognition was made of Miss Anna Lehman, as the only remaining charter member of the congregation. In recent years there was one other living charter member, Rev. A. A. Sommers, whose death occurred August 7 at Glendale, California. Rev. and Mrs. S. F. Pannabecker had also been invited to be with us for the day but due to a conflict were unable to be present. Mrs. Pannabecker is also a former member of the congregation.

And Teaching Them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you:—and, lo, I am with you alway—even unto the end of the world

Cut courtesy "Gospel Messenger"

It seems that throughout the centuries the Christian faith has been devitalized by man's self-saving impulses. The Christian faith was wanted—indeed insisted upon—but not in too thorough-going a way. And so man rationalized and set up creeds and rituals until he had substituted something for the essence of the Christian faith. To care for the general welfare of all peoples in the world was too exacting a teaching. And so Christians helped to sow and reap a second World War. And what about the Mennonite Church which insists upon obesrving all things? How well has it taught others about caring for the general welfare? For over four hundred years it has possessed the teaching of non-resistance. Is it not true that it has kept this teaching very much to itself? Only too literally have Mennonites been the "quiet in the land," so much so that they may have hidden their light under a bushel. The world is in desperate need of an alternative to war. Is the Mennonite Church a skillful and effective teacher of the way of peace? If it is not, how can it be?

From the editor's point - of - view:

THE LAW OF SUPPLY AND DEMAND has a very un-Christian aspect to it when it cuts off supply to those who are in need but are incapable of paying inflationary prices. Economists tell us that the function of prices in our economic system is to bring supply and demand into agreement. A New York Times editorial of April 22 lamented that price control interfered with this "normal" function of prices. It said, "Higher prices cut off the less urgent demand and steer available supplies to those buyers who are willing to pay more because of more urgent demand." That all sounds quite harmless, but its viciousness is brought out by a comment that the Economic Outlook makes on this particular statement. The Outlook comments: "Urgency of a child's hunger, presumably, is measured by the size of its parents' purse. Rising prices recognize this distinction and channel scarce foods to those children whose parents are able to pay." This bit of sarcasm points to the fact that our economy is not carefully planned to minister to the needs of people. It indicates that profit determines whether or not needs will be met. A concern for general welfare would seem to demand that the fulfillment of need be balanced with the making of profit —profit in this case being the fulfillment of one's own need. A hundred-forty million people need to make a great many complex adjustments in their economic system if the welfare of all is to be promoted. The Christian principle seems to be that where there is need there ought to be supply. It is upon this principle that Christian hospitals take in those who are able to pay only part or nothing. It is upon this principle that we forgive our debtors. Christian planning might take some of the tragedy out of the law of supply and demand.

AMERICA should be made secure, but this cannot be done through military might. Samuel R. Levering, a Quaker, says: "Now, as always, 'security' for one through increasing military might, alliances, bases, etc., can only mean insecurity for the other. The second tries to remedy its insecurity by increasing its military might, alliances, bases, etc. This, in turn, makes the first insecure. The mad race continues until one, thinking that it has a temporary advantage, strikes first. There is no reason to think that an atomic arms race will end otherwise." In order for America to be secure it must win the goodwill of other nations. This it can only do by showing its sincere interest in the welfare of other nations. Only by helping other nations to fee secure can it find its own security. By seeking first the Kingdom of right relationships, it will be more likely to find ultimate economic prosperity than by seeking first control over large areas of the world's remaining oil resources, etc., or than by spending for armaments sixteen billions out of total national budget of twenty-four billions. Not by might or power, but by His Spiri can the security of America be established.

APPEASEMENT is a comparatively futile attemp towards peace. However, the commonly accepted alternative, war, is also not the way out. Appeasemen usually comes to pass when people neither greatly desire war nor peace. It is a condition of lukewarmness The suggestion of appeasement usually comes when people have failed to take such constructive actions of goodwill as to win the goodwill of other nations Then rather than go to war, which like building fo peace takes tremendous sacrifice, the suggestion o appeasement comes to the fore. In itself it must be comparatively futile as long as the rest of a nation's efforts do not back it up. Then it is one act of conciliation among a thousand or more that pull just the other way. As such appeasement must fail. The tragedy is that war is selected as the alternative to appeasement. The real, Christian alternative is a general attitude of faith, trust, and goodwill that will calm those who are angry and fearful and will give them that feeling of security that makes for peace. This is a long-range program and calls for faith in spiritua forces.

FORGIVENESS is inseparably linked with loving Forgiveness in specific instances is always very difficult as long as the general attitude is not one of understanding people and of feeling with them. In order to be able to forgive we need insight into the transgressor so that we can appreciate why he does as he does. Unless we make it a practice to know how others think and feel, the necessary insight for specific instances of forgiving will not come to us easily. He who loves is empowered to forgive, for he knows why someone does as he does.

Home Again

by Sam Goering

Only one who has seen war torn Europe, lived for ne time with its people, talked with the many re- ees and homeless there, can understand fully the one experiences on returning again to one's own ne, especially if that home is in the United States. is privilege and great joy was ours recently when we urned home bringing to a close my service since cember, 1944, with the Mennonite Central Com- ttee as director of European Relief. Words fail one trying to describe this feeling of joy, on the one d, or the sad plight of the many needy in Europe on other.

The condition of the many thousands and thousands homeless people there is especially pitiful. They scattered throughout Europe, destitute, depending others for their livelihood. Among these people are usands of Russian Mennonites, mostly women and ldren who were forced to evacuate from the Ukraine now find it impossible to return to their former nes. One finds individuals and groups of these peo- in Poland, Austria, Holland, Germany, etc. They on farms, in UNRRA camps, in former army bar- ks, in bombed out buildings, and even in dugouts. ey are entirely dependent on others for food, clothing, shelter. What little they took with them when they home was soon lost, stolen, or in the case of food, sumed along the way so that now in most cases ir only earthly possessions are the clothes they wear.

The hardships that most of these people endured dur- the years of war are indescribable. Some of them have n homeless since 1939; all of them have been going m place to place for years. Tired from their long grimage all are seeking a haven of rest and peace— y want a home again. Many of them will never have an thly home of their own again. For others what home y may be able to get will at best be only very tem- ary. Most of them sing and speak much of a hea- nly home prepared for them by a kind heavenly fa- r where they will be reunited with loved ones whom y here not knowing now where they are or whether y are still alive.

Through all the years of hardships and trials these ople retained a deep religious faith. They gather on ndays in groups for worship. In a number of places se groups formed congregations, coming together for nmunion, baptismal and other special services. It is their religious life, willingness to live and to work hard that differentiates them from many of the other refugees. We need to remember these unfortunate people prayerfully and do what we can to help them.

When we left Europe, the general conditions on the continent had improved greatly in every country over what they were a year ago with the exception of Germany, and even there the crops looked good.

Relief supplies will still be needed this coming winter but not nearly in as large quantities as before. Among those who must be helped are the many refugees.

In the past the Mennonites of the United States and Canada have contributed very liberally toward the needs not only of Europe but the world. Both the food and clothing sent to Europe arrived there in excellent condition. The quality was good, and the quantity at times seemed larger than we could handle effectively at the moment. However, we were very glad for what came and the many thousands of needy who were helped were truly grateful. As opportunity presents itself we will want to tell you more about the work and the experiences we had in Europe.

We thank all in the homeland and those on the field who helped to make the work possible. We are back again, but the work goes on. I know we all will want to continue to give it our support through gift and prayer.

Thy Neighbor

Who is thy neighbor? He whom thou
Hast power to aid or bless,
Whose aching heart or burning brow
Thy soothing hand may press.

Thy neighbor? 'Tis the fainting poor
Whose eye with want is dim.
Oh, enter thou his humble door
With aid and peace for him.

Thy neighbor? He who drinks the cup
When sorrow drowns the brim;
With words of high sustaining hope
Go thou and comfort him.

Thy neighbor? 'Tis the weary slave,
Fettered in mind and limb;
He hath no hope this side the grave.
Go thou and ransom him.

Thy neighbor? Pass no mourner by.
Perhaps thou canst redeem
A breaking heart from misery.
Go share thy lot with him.

Rev. David Toews Resigns

Rev. David Toews, D. D. Rosthern, Saskatchewan, has resigned as member of the Board of Home Missions. Brother Toews has been in failing health, which was the cause of the resignation. Thus comes to an end a long period of great service and usefulness in the Kingdom of God and in the Mennonite Church.

For more than fifty years Rev. Toews was a very busy man serving mankind in many capacities. In his early years he served as school teacher. In 1901 he was elected as Pastor of the Mennonite Church, Rosthern, Saskatchewan. He became Principal of the German-English Academy Rosthern, in 1905 and he held this position until 1920.

In 1911 he was elected by the General Conference to serve as a member of the Board of Home Missions, which office he filled most nobly till 1946-a period of thirty-five years. As Canadian member of the Board he was itimately associated with all the developments of the many Canadian fields.

In 1922 he became a member and in 1925 Chairman of the Canadian Mennonite Board of Colonization. This office likewise had to be given up because of failing health. During this period of time more than twenty thousand Russian Mennonites were helped in their trek to Canada to find new homes.

REV. G. G. EPP, APPOINTED

The officers of General Conference appointed Rev. Gerhard G. Epp. Rosthern, Saskatchewan. He was born in Rosthern, 1895, and has lived in this community all his life, thus having opportunity to observe the growth of General Conference work in Canada as it centered in Rosthern. In 1918 he was married to Justina Wiebe, Gotebo, Oklahoma. Seven children are in the family. Rev. Epp is Elder of the Eigenheim Church, Rosthern, where the family resides on a farm. For a number of years Rev. Epp has been a member of the Canadian Home Mission Committee, serving as Secretary and more recently as Chairman. Thus the new member of the Board has an intimate knowledge of the Canadian Mennonite mission fields.

CANADIAN CONTRIBUTIONS

Canadian contributions for General Conference Home Mission work are hereafter to be sent to Rev G. G. Epp, Rosthern, Saskatchewan.

THANKSGIVING AND INTERCESSION

We also solici the earnest prayer support for the new member of th Board, Brother Epp, and for the Board.—In Christiar love, A. J. Neuenschwander, Sec., Board of Home Missions.

Lubin Jantzens To Go to India

Dear Friends:

We have looked forward to the time when we could write to you and tell you this news . . .

The Lord is sending us to India.

On July 9, 1946, we received a letter from Rev. Nyce, secretary of the General Conference Foreign Mission Board, stating that our application to the Board had been accepted. The following resolution was passed by the Board at their last meeting: "Resolved, that we instruct the secretary to make preparations to send Rev. and Mrs. Lubin W. Jantzen to India this coming fall if feasible."

We praise the Lord, that in the years past, we have heard His call to India individually. Since our marriage, the call has come repeatedly and with increasing force, "For the love of Christ constraineth us." He has led us through the long years of preparation, in study and in teaching, and now is opening doors to make Him known to the heathen. Our application for passports and visas is now being made.

At present, I am attending summer school at the University of California. I expect to complete my wor for the degree by mid-September. Matilda is busil engaged in sewing, canning and planning the outfit re quired for our family of four, for the eight-year tern Present conditions make this no little task. But ou great Lord has already shown us that before we cal He will answer. About a week before our final accep tance from the Board came, the Pacific District Co ference Women's Missionary Societies surprised us b undertaking, as their project of the year, to provide th single bedding which we will need. To the Lord and these ladies we are deeply grateful.

"To the regions beyond I must go, I must go,
Where the story has never been told;
To the millions who never have heard of His lo
I must tell the sweet story of old."

India waits; our Lord commands; we must go. Will yo pray?—Joyfully His for India, Mathilda and L. V Jantzen, Dainel and Esther, 126 W. 58th Street, L Angeles, 37, California.

Religion

Among the Old Colony Mennonites of Mexico

by J. Winfield Fretz

It was my second privilege recently to visit the ld Colony Mennonites in Mexico. Many of the aders of The Mennonite will be surprised to know at twelve thousand fellow Mennonites reside in exico. Practically all of them are members of the lt Kolonier group of Mennonites. A small group be- ng to the Sommerfelders who allow the use of ucks and allow slightly more freedom in matters dress. Roughly, this group is to the Russian Men- onites what the Amish are to the Swiss Mennonites. he Old Colony Mennonites migrated to Mexico from anada between 1922 and 1927 because they felt the anadian Government was encroaching on their re- gious freedom when it required that English be ught in the public schools. The Old Colony Men- nites objected to this because to them it seemed threat to their religious beliefs and ways of life. In exico they have enjoyed continuous religious freedom ith the exception of a brief period about 1935 when e Mexican Government wished to raise the standards education in the Colony schools.

The Sommerfelder Church where the recent visitors to Mexico attended services.

EDUCATION

The church very definitely controls education in the colony. Each village has its own school. The school term lasts five or six months from November to April. School teachers are not trained for their job but are secured on the basis of people who are available and willing to teach. Very often teachers are hired men and day laborers who earn a living by the combined efforts of teaching and part time work on farms or in shops or in local cheese factories. In the schools there are only four books used: The Bible, the Fibel, the Gesangbuch and a catechism. No arithmetic, geography, church history, or current events of any kind are taught. All instructions are carried on in the German language and very frequently the teacher resorts to the Low German dialect which he and all the children speak and understand much better than the High German. The boys go to school from the ages of six to thirteen and the girls from six to twelve. There are no women teachers as women are expected to serve exclusively in the home.

A CHURCH SERVICE

It was my privilege to attend a Sommerfelder church service. For the interest of the reader I shall describe in some detail the nature and order of the service as well as the church building. Most of the buildings are made of adobe which is the word used to describe the buildings made out of clay found in the local area. Some of the churches are frame, but in neither case is the woodwork painted. All of the churches are a drab color from without. Inside the churches are painted a neat and clean steel gray. The pulpit extends lengthwise about three fourths across the church. The benches are backless and are placed parallel to the pulpit. The women sit to the right of the visitor as he enters the church and the men to the left with the older men and women to the front and the younger people to the rear. It is not customary among the Sommerfelder or the Old Colony people to take their children to church. I was impressed with the fact that in the congregation of the morning service I attended there were not a half dozen children under twelve years of age.

J. Winfield Fretz, author of a pamphlet on coloni- tion in Mexico, has made two trips there, one of em having been made just recently.

The service begins by the Vorsinger announcing a hymn and the congregation singing it. The hymn book used is the Gesangbuch without notes. After the first hymn is sung or perhaps better described as chanted, the ministers walk in and take their place on the long bench behind the pulpit along with the two Vorsingers. The preacher of the morning then makes the introduction which is called the Einleitung. This is very formal in that it is always written and read. It is the same one each Sunday. The Einleitung is followed by everyone kneeling for silent prayer. Following this the minister reads the text which is always a part of the sermon. The sermon is then read without expository comment. The time required for the reading of a sermon ranges from three-quarters of an hour to an hour. The sermons are not always, in fact seldom, written by the preachers who give them. They are more likely sermons handed down from older to younger men or from those who are more creative to the more unimaginative. Each minister takes his turn conducting the service. In the church we attended there were three preachers; one was the Aeltester of the Colony. The sermon is ended and followed by another silent prayer by the congregation. It is again observed by kneeling. This is followed by a hymn and this by the benediction which the minister too reads. The service begins at 9:00 o'clock and is over about 10:30. There is no Sunday School or religious education program of any kind. In the service the ministers all wear black cotton shirts and long tailed black coats. None of the men wear ties. The older women wear large black scarves or shawls with beautiful colored needlework on the triangle showing in the back. This is the custom for the Old Colony women more generally than it is among the Sommerfelder.

To the person from the outside the service impresses one as being exceedingly formal and containing a minimun of communication between the minister and his congregation. It is estimated that attendance on Sunday morning is seldom better than 50 percent. Children and young people before they join the church are not expected to attend, presumably because they do not understand what is being said. Many of the older people do not understand the sermon either because in ordinary conversation they speak only the Low German. One can carry on conversation in High German only with great difficulty. The fact that twelve thousand Mennonites continue to live in Mexico should be of concern to those of us who live elsewhere and feel a sense of responsibility for the name and the character of the Mennonite Church of the future. When old and young alike for generation after generation do not learn about the history and heritage of the Bible, nor of their own people, it is easy to prophesy their destiny. Let prayers be offered without ceasing that God will break forth new light to His people and that a spiritual awakening may occur.

The Christian Ashram and the Kingdom of God

by Lester Hostetler

The Christian Ashram has been introduced into A-ıerican Church life from India by E. Stanley Jones, idely known missionary and author. The term Ashram" was applied originally to a forest school here a leader took his disciples aside for spiritual re-ewal. Its keynote was discipline and simplicity.

An Ashram, as conducted by E. Stanley Jones is ıuch like a retreat, but it is more than that. In a re-eat we try to find verbal answers for our problems. he Ashram tries not only to find answers, but to be ıe answer. It is a group of people trying to live to-ether as if the Kingdom of God were at hand. It is the ingdom in miniature, a demonstration on a small scale the kind of life people everywhere would live if sur-ndered to Christ. It is imperfect and inadequate, to be ıre, but one thrills to the idea of having made the at-mpt.

The New Testament has much to say about the ingdom of God. We are taught to pray "Thy King-om come." But what is the Kingdom and how shall e set about to bring it on earth? It is to be remem-ered that the Ashram is not made up of a select group. ll ages and all walks of life are represented as well as fferent races and cultural backgrounds. It is a cross ction of humanity such as we are likely to find in e community in which our common life is lived. Oth-wise the demonstration would have little practical val-. The two hundred people who were together for ten ıys at Green Lake, Wisconsin, (One of four Ashrams ld this year in America) were made up of high school ıd college students, farmers, ministers, dentists, house-ves, realtors, manufacturers, teachers, nurses, office orkers, and a dozen other occupations and professions.

Where is the starting point when such a group tries be a cameo of the Kingdom? The answer is Christ. e begin with the historical, unchanging Christ of the spels. That means that all barriers which separate an from God and his fellow man must come down. Our relations with man cannot be right unless we are right with God.

The barriers which separate man from his fellow man are many. First of all is the barrier of race. Our race prejudices are a hindrance to the progress of the Kingdom. A man must be valued for what he is in the eyes of God and not by the accident of the color of his skin or the shape of his eyes. In the Kingdom we are color blind to all races and see only the human race.

All barriers between classes must be removed. There can be no difference between those who work with their hands and the so-called brain or white collar workers. To accomplish this, some work is assigned to everybody. One hour of the day's program consists of manual labor in which every able bodied person does something necessary for the welfare of the group — cutting wood, mowing weeds, repairing buildings, digging ditches, building roads, and repairing cars.

All titles are put aside. There are no "Doctors," or "Reverends,"or "Professors" in an Ashram. E. Stanley Jones has numerous degrees, but he insists upon being called "Brother Stanley." We are all opposed to the caste system in India, but most of us cherish in our hearts a secret pleasure in anything that elevates us above our fellow men. Our academic and honorary titles foster this pride. We accept titles and act high and mighty. But none can easily act high and mighty when he is constantly called by his first name. "But be ye not called Rabbi" said Jesus, "for all ye are brethren." There are no classes in the Kingdom, only brethren.

Then again the barrier between those who lead and those being led is broken down. There are long periods of silence in which God speaks to both leaders and led. No leader takes the attitude that he has the truth and that it is his function to hand this down to the rest—his inferiors. It is the attitude rather of a cooperative search in which leader and led are in quest of God and His will.

The Ashram places much emphasis upon silence, prayer, and meditation upon the life and words of Jesus. It stresses the need for spiritual health—release from all fear and worries and resentments. In the Kingdom, we need have no fears and no worries for our whole trust is in God. We can have no resentments and no jealousies for we are the children of God. We are, to be sure, endowed with different talents. But our only concern is the doing of the will of God. We never need to be envious of other people's talents or jealous of their success. It is required of us only that we use what God has given us in the place where God has put us.

Lester Hostetler attended one of the E. Stanley Jones' hrams this summer. Since the method of the ashram not so well known, we invited Rev. Hostetler to tell about it.

There is nothing essentially new in an Ashram. Its main ideas have all been told us many times before. And yet such a meeting always is new, for the Holy Spirit makes all things new. The Ashram is an attempt to be a miniature Kingdom of God. But should not every Christian church, and Christian college campus and Christian community be the same? The Christian Ashram reminds us of this high calling. We are called from darkness into His marvelous Light. That Light is the hope of the world. What would the world be if in the name of Christ we would overcome all barriers of race and class, and by the renewing of our minds, dwell together as children of the Eternal without fear or worry or resentment! It would be a new world. It may be that more attempts should be made everywhere to create these cells of the Kingdom. To do that is the final meaning of the Christian Ashram.

By Cornelius Krahn

Not all Mennonites in Siberia Starve. In a recent letter from Siberia a Mennonite reports about the life and activities of the displaced Mennonites within the boundaries of the Soviet Union. He says, among other things, "L . . . . and T . . . are getting along fine. They claim that they have never weighed more than they do now. But have an unquenchable longing for fellowship which cannot, for the time being, be satisfied."

Representatives of Mennonite World Relief Writes: Dr. B. H. Unruh, a well-known figure who has been very active in Mennonite world wide relief activities and is one of its most outstanding representatives since World War I, has written that he has moved back to Karlsruhe, Germany, whence he had been evacuated during the final stages of the war. In spite of the fact that he has lost all his archives, he works feverishly in behalf of the displaced Mennonites in Europe. At the time of his writing Mrs. Unruh was confined to a hospital because of undernourishment.

Helping through CARE Packages. Several weeks ago we called attention to the way in which starving European families could be helped through CARE packages. We would like to thank the many who have responded and encourage these and others to continue to send these much appreciated gifts to friends and relatives in Europe. Blanks may be obtained from the MCC, the General Conference Headquarters in Newton, local banks, and writers of this column. If you have no addresses of needy persons in Europe simply send your fifteen dollars to the MCC. (Fifteen dollars buys thirty big meals.)

Need for Fellowship. The Mennonites of Curitiba, Brazil, are inquiring about the possibililty of sending some young people to the United States to attend Mennonite schools in order to better prepare for Christian service. The Brazilian Mennonite brethren are probably more in need of our concern than any other Mennonite settlement in the western hemisphere. They are a small group in an urban Latin-American environment that confronts them with the immediate danger of disintegration. Realizing this danger they are extending their hand to fellowship with us.

"It Is Easy To Die but Hard To Live," is a statement from a letter by Rev. A. Fast formerly from Emden, now Leer, British Zone, Germany, Emden, where Rev. Fast had been pastor of the Mennonite Church, is a heap of rubble. Rev. Fast states that some thousand displaced Mennonites from Russia live in the vicinity of Leer waiting for the moment when they will be able to come to America. They are in great need of food, clothing and shelter. At present the above mentioned CARE packages are probably the only effective means of helping them.

Conference on Mennonite Cultural Problems. The fifth consecutive meeting of this conference took place at Freeman, South Dakota, August 27-28, and was entirely devoted to the Hutterian Brethren in the past and present. A visit to the Bon Homme Bruderhof in that vicinity brought the conference in close contact with the subject. The Conference on Mennonite Cultural Problems is being attended by interested representatives of the various Mennonite groups.

The above mentioned conference was held in connection with a meeting of the Council of Mennonite and Affiliated Colleges at which Dr. Ed G. Kaufman and Dr. E. E. Miller reported about their recent trip to Europe. The annual meeting of the Mennonite Research Fellowship, which has inaugurated plans for a Mennonite encyclopedia, also met at Freeman at that time.

Plans for an American Mennonite Encyclopedia were discussed at a recent meeting held in Chicago. Committees composed of representatives of various conferences outlined and agreed on the procedure in starting an American edition of the Mennonitishches Lexikon which was published by Hege and Neff in Germany. Plans to secure the right for an American edition and to set the machinery to accomplish this huge task are underway.

Looking for Relatives. Jakob Fast, formerly from Russia, now a displaced Mennonite in Germany would like to contact his uncle Johann Reimer who went from Russia to Mexico in 1924 and from there to the United States. Address: Jakob Fast, (22a) Kettwig Ruhr. Hauptstrasse 21b, Nordrhein-Province, British Zone, Germany.

Who Is My Brother?

By Grace Acker Varney

When God creates a man he lodges a part of himself deep within him. When we allow prejudice to enter into our thinking or our dealings with another man we are not only hurting him but we are insulting our Creator.

In a small city a neighbor said to another after hearing this statement—"I see those Japanese coming out of your yard every day. I saw them all summer. Aren't you afraid of them?"

"No," she replied, "they are the tried and true Americans from one of the relocation camps in Arizona. They could not return to their homes in California because of the mass prejudice.

"Their record as citizens is good and there are no known cases or sabotage by any of them on the coast recorded by the FBI. Why did we take a small group of helpless people and corral them behind barbed wire? Why didn't our army protect them at home where thousands of acres were left untilled, I wonder?

"As far as falseness is concerned to government why not remember our own political bosses who are ruining our national life? Why not count the bars and the night clubs in nearly every block which are sabotaging the moral and spiritual life of our youth? Why pick on people because of their nationality?"

The neighbor looked puzzled. She knew little or nothing about the Nisei and was not prepared to argue the question. Suddenly she said, "You surely don't believe that God ever lodged a part of himself in those 'niggers' do you?"

"Yes, of course I do," was the answer. "I believe he lodged a part of himself in every member of the colored race—in fact I know it. Several whom I have known have taken the time to discover his 'Presence' within. Several of his saints have worked in our home."

"If you had kept them long enough you would have found that they all steal," she laughed.

"That is one of the myths about the negro race that has been investigated but little by the majority of our race. There may have been a time in slavery when 'toting' was carried on by many of them and by some of them now.

"If I had to work in a cotton field from sun-up until sundown with a breakfast consisting of little hoecakes (not having an oven or a stove) then come home at sundown to more hoecakes and my portion of fat pork which had been doled out to me—so much for the month and by the end of the month my family and I had to eat green mouldy side pork, I doubt if I would consider picking up some of the extra food in the master's house as theft. All those hours of hard work earning luxuries and wealth for some one who hated me! There are a few negroes living who still remember those days and along with present injustices we can hardly expect a high regard for our race. If we are really Christians we find dealing with all men takes on a new light. The 'Presence' of which we are now aware urges us to remember that God is no respector of persons, that he expects us to be lifters, not depressors of those with whom we are associated."

A southern colored woman worked in a northern home a few years ago. When she came north she was sixty years old. She remarked one day. "I never saw a Bible in use in a white man's house before. Never until now did I know there were any real white Christians."

One of the reasons for such a conclusion was because there were no servant and master problems."

"You don't expect me to believe this friend of yours had no trouble with her help! When those maids came north they soon forgot their place."

"They never took time out to discover that so-called place. Of course there were occasions when things had to be ironed out, so to speak. Better understanding of their relationship at times was necessary. My neighbor had a unique way of doing such things. She put her hands on the shoulders of this maid and said, 'Laura, we are Christians. We can't afford to spoil one precious hour of God's day through misunderstanding.' Then she went on explaining all that she had meant to say in a quiet, reasonable way. It worked. They let Christ be the master of the house. He took over and directed their emotional lives for the day."

"That sounds ideal all right. Perhaps if enough people were willing to try it,problems might more easily be solved."

"God surely can solve our problems if we reach deep enough into our inner selves and high enough to grasp his supreme power. God asks every Christian for all of him. 'All of me, all of me, of me' should be uppermost in the minds of God's children.

"If one practices this act of consecration over a period of years he comes without exception to the place where the reflection of fine living radiates back into his life the golden qualities he has been willing to put into life."

—The Watchword

Girls Serve in the South

by Rosella Reimer

Dorm three at Camp Bernard, C. P. S. Unit 141, Gulfport, Mississippi — a small rectangular barrack with eight army cots, eight army wardrobes painted a buff color by the girls, a few dressing tables improvised from orange crates, gay curtains made from feed sacks, several hand-constructed buff chairs — this has become the "Summer home" of eight girls from widely varying backgrounds who volunteered for Christian service in the "Deep South" during their summer vacations. Included in this group are three Old Mennonites and five General Confernce Mennonites Wilma Lehman, North Lima, Ohio; Irene Bishop, Perkasie, Pennsylvania; Ida Gingerich, Plain City, Ohio; Lois Musselman, Ortanna, Pa.; Ruth Burkhard, Ortanna, Pa.; Amanda Ediger, Buhler, Kansas; Jeanette Richert, Goessel, Kansas; and Rosella Reimer, Goessel, Kansas.

The Day's Work in Mississippi

The day begins early in C. P. S. At six o'clock in the morning the alarm peals forth its morning message. Amanda reaches for it, switches it off, and promptly falls back into a hurried ten-minute dream. Then slowly dorm three comes to life; the girls sit up, stretch, and make their way to the shower room, about twenty feet behind the dorm. Six-thirty o'clock finds most of them at the breakfast table, ready to eat a hearty meal before beginning the day's work.

Back from breakfast at seven o'clock with an egg sandwich for Irene, who couldn't quite make it to the dinning hall on time, the girls settle down to one-and-one-hours of strenuous preparation for the day ahead. Ida has remained in the kitchen to prepare lunch, bravely trying to keep the budget balanced. She regularly assists the cooks. Amanda, in charge of the play-grounds set up in North Gulfport for the colored children and at the Old Northward School for underprivileged white children, is threading needles in preparation for the morning's craftwork. Irene, helping "Andy" on recreation this week, is preparing the story she will read to the children. The girls alternate weekly assisting "Andy" and Richard Kling, one of the C. P. S. fellows in the recreational project. See-saws, swings, sandboxes, and climbing racks, built by the boys in Camp Bernard, are part of the equipment.

Teachers Leave for Bible School

At approximately eight-thirty, Wilma calls the teachers Ruth, Lois, Jeanette, and Rosella together with a short devotional period before leaving for school. Then off they go in the camp Cheverolet for Bible school; this week they are going to a colored school with an enrollment of forty-three children, ranging in ages from five to thirteen. On the way they pass the rows of red tumbledown shanties which house many of their pupils, and they feel just a little closer and a little more sympathetic toward the poverty-stricken families than they did several months ago because, through close contacts with them, they have learned to recognize them as individuals possessing sacred personalities. They have observed the eagerness of the children to learn, as well as their quick response to love shown them.

Work in the School

Boys and girls are waiting at the schoolhouse as the teachers arrive. At nine o'clock Wilma rings the bell, and Bible School is on. Ruth and Rosella lead the singing, the children heartily enjoying "Fishers of Men," "B-I-B-L-E" "Praise Him, praise Him," and many others; Wilma reads the Scripture passage and tells a story. Then classes begin. A Bible story, a character-building or missionary story, memory work, and expressional work are included in the daily schedule of each of the five classes. From 10:15 to 10:30 the children enjoy a recess period. A short singing period concludes the morning school, and the children leave to the strains of their song, "Good-bye, good-bye, we will be kind and good."

Free Time Activity

Gathering in the dining hall for lunch, the girls discuss the events of the day. Back in their dorm after lunch, they try to relax for a few minutes in the sweltering Mississippi heat; then they busy themselves planning the next day's activities. Their few spare moments from study find them scrambling for the washing machines and the irons, for they have to do their own laundry. One girl laboriously sweeps the large soft white pine floor.

Four-thirty in the afternoon finds most of the girls enjoying a swim (well, at least they pretend to be swimming), in the cool camp pool with the artesian well. The dinner bell calls them at five-thirty, and they are only too happy to appease their appetites. Today the menu includes an enormous dish of ice cream, with bananas and chocolate syrup—an indication that some of the fellows have received their releases.

A Mississippi Evening

Mississippi becomes a beautiful cool dream world in the evening. A radiant sunset changing from brilliant silver and gold colors to deep reds, purples, greens, yellows, and blues fades in the western sky, indelibly impressing its picture in the observer's

This group of volunteers is the first of what is hoped will be a continual flow of volunteers going to Gulfport to carry on a varied program of service and ministry to the needy people of the area. Efforts are at present being made to make the Gulfport program one largely carried on by volunteers.

nind and leaving a sense of the reality and nearness of God. Birds sing peaceful lullabys to a tired world. Deep voiced frogs supply the bass notes for the symphony. The moon glittering on the vast expanse of water in the Gulf of Mexico, only a few miles from camp, together with the diamond-like sparkles of the fish in the water and the soft evening breeze, leaves a feeling of peace and security—a feeling that all is not in vain and that even the people living in shambles only a few miles in the distance must come to the realization that there is a way for them to achieve higher goals.

Work With Migrants in Arkansas

by Melvin Boehr

The migrant people present a very real challenge to all mission-minded individuals and churches. Because many of these people are right at our very doorsteps, we are often inclined to look over and beyond them to foreign fields, neglecting these people as a consequence. Yes, we have hundreds of migrant people right here in our United States who do not know some of the fine aspects, much less the finer, of Christian living.

So the very need of these migrant people is a challenge in itself and should beckon many more people to come and serve them. "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel of Jesus."

Behavior of the Children

It takes a great deal of patience to work for any period of time with migrant people. You see they are often so unsettled, and not at all stable in their way of living. Naturally this reflects also in their religious walk. Just to cite an incident; in our Bible Hour Class here, where we have about twenty boys and girls in attendance on an average; these little ones will make comments on how everyone ought to be a Christian and love everybody. However, they may forget all about this a minute or so later when they do their art work. There will be struggles and quarrels about the best scissors, pencils, crayolas, etc. This is just an example of the way in which grown-ups (not only migrants) often behave.

But it is a joy to see these little folks come to Bible Hour in the morning and to Sunday School on Sundays. No, they are not always clean and well-dressed; more likely the opposite. But they love Jesus and mean to follow Him as best they can.

The Life of a Migrant Child

These youngsters soon learn to know who is interested in them, and, as we cross the camp grounds, we are usually hailed with greetings by them. The training of little migrant folks is so different than that of the ordinary child. In our particular area of work here in Springdale, where we have over six-hundred people in one government camp, the children band together. Not always the most desirable companionships are formed nor activities carried out. Migrant people are usually poor people; dad, mom and the older children may be out picking beans, cutting grapes or any other similar work. This leaves the little children here in camp all by themselves and they do need care and counselling.

Patience of the Worker

One must not only have patience, but also a deep consecration to Jesus Christ and what He represents in order to be a successful migrant worker. Disappointments are not a few in this type of work. Just the other day I noticed two girls, about seven years old, smoking cigarettes right in public and acting really quite grown-up about it (if that is possible). Or as Katherine mentioned to me today that her Junior Club President, who should be a leader was heard swearing almost beyond description. What else can one expect but that much good teaching and exhortation to the children is undone in the homes of ungodly or neglectful parents.

But one must not give up. The actual accomplishments of migrant work cannot be measured by a "yardstick", as it were. The teaching and helping does leave its impression upon the folks. Right now, we have a young girl helping Mrs. Boehr in her children's Sunday School and there is a man from the camp here who leads in the singing on Sunday nights or on prayer nights quite regularly. Then I also have several local men in camp who will assist me in preaching on Sunday nights.

Mission work among migrants is not easy when out of a group of over six-hundred people, only about twenty come out regularly for Sunday School and church services. Others simply are not interested. Mission work among migrants does not always bring desired results in specific ways. They often are very emotional and quick to accept Christ,but not at all clear on how to live for Him seven days a week.

Satisfactions of Migrant Work

But mission work among migrants is a joy, blessing, and a challenge when one sees the many children so receptive to Bible Stories, songs and games, when some adults do take active part in the program, and when greetings are shouted your way all across the camp grounds. One must take into serious consideration that their entire background and training has been so different than that of many of us whose parents, grand-parents, and great grand-parents were active church members and Christian people.

More young people in our conference ought to take this type of work as a real opportunity for them to witness for Christ and to serve Him in this capacity. They are needed very much.

RELIEF

Reconstruction Unit in France

The preliminary work of establishing a Reconstrucion and Transport Unit in France was begun by a urvey of the Alsatian area made by Henry Detwiler nd Orlo Goering. After considerable investigation and ounselling with local leaders and ministers it was decided that Geisberg represented the possible location or the French Unit. In this area were found several Mennonite families—buildings completely destroyed, with the people living in wooden barracks for several years. They had been hit twice by the war. The first time was in the early stages, with hostilities between the French and Germans. The French had evacuated them to Central France, as their buildings were badly damaged. Then the Germans moved in and occupied France, they were moved back to their land and are now living in barracks. Toward the end of the war, fighting in that area between the Allied Army and the Germans completely destroyed their dwellings.

"We found only a few bare walls left standing of what was once a proud, elaborate, grand country estate. The buildings in the farmyard are severely damaged; the building that housed the church on the second floor was now full of shell holes, and the interior a shambles. Indeed, this seemed a worthy place to place a RTU! In the Geisberg area there are several families which will cooperate with the unit and benefits thereby. All of these families will need their houses reconstructed from the ground up. We have indicated our interest primarily in repairing or constructing houses, but if possible help on farm buildings would also be highly desirable. Several houses in the vicinity need repairs such as closing in shell holes in the walls, and repairing interior walls and woodwork. From the way things look at this point, operations could be carried on very easily in this one location for a period of two or more years. It is our plan to first build the one necessary barrack, then do necessary repair work, after that to work on the building of complete new homes."

—Detwiler and Goering.

The French zone in the rest of Germany is expected to open shortly.

MENNONITE AID NOTES

Ed Kaufman and Ernest Miller, presidents of Bethel and Goshen Colleges respectively, have returned after a two-months tour of Europe under the auspices of the Mennonite and Affiliated Colleges for the solicitation of foreign students. The Mennonite colleges of America are offering a number of scholarships to foreign students, and the colleges have indicated a desire to have European students. The purpose of these scholarships is to extend the bonds of friendship between the Mennonites of other countries and between the students of Mennonite colleges in America in the hope that these arrangements may be mutually helpful. The Mennonite Aid Section of the M.C.C. is assisting European students to obtain passports, visas, and passage.

The two college presidents report that twenty-six European students have been selected and have the necessary credentials to come to America and study in Mennonite schools. These students are scheduled to arrive at New York in early September. The group includes: 17 Mennonite young people from Holland, 4 Waldensian students from Italy, 3 students from Belgium, and 2 from France. All of the Mennonite colleges will be recipients of European students.

In addition to personal interviews with the college presidents the students were selected by the aid of a local counselling committee. In order to qualify the students must have completed eight years of general education, must have the equivalent of a high school education, sufficient knowledge of the English language to carry study courses, and sufficient maturity. The student must also be a bona fide member of the Protestant church and manifest an interest to return to serve his or her community. Several of the students are interested in Bible courses. Most of them have had the equivalent of about 1 year of college work. There is also a great deal of interest in social science courses, since these are not offered in European schools.

Mennonite Colleges in America are granting free tuition to European students. Several of the students are paying their own travel and other expenses and in some instances the relief committees of the various church conferences have contributed toward this cause. Funds have also been raised by student bodies in our Mennonite schools to help meet the expenses of worthy foreign students. M.C.C. functions in this undertaking include the processing of passports and passage through the facilities of the Mennonite Aid Section and does not provide funds either for the maintenance, travel, or other expenses of this project.

The students come here with the desire to fellowship and get acquainted with Mennonite young people and with the American way of life. There is also a desire on the part of these young people to learn more about the historic Mennonite principles, especially the doctrines of nonresistance as practiced by American Mennonites. It is hoped that this undertaking will prove a blessing to Mennonite institutions and to the whole Mennonite church and will also be a worthwhile contribution to the students themselves.

PEACE NOTES

A meeting of the M.C.C. Peace Section was held on August 6 at Chicago, Illinois. Various concerns were presented and discussed—the writing of peace literature, International Mennonite contacts, nonresistance in the industrial conflict, the position toward draft extension and peacetime conscription, and the responsibility of Peace churches to C. O.'s of other groups. There seemed to be a common feeling that there must be a strengthening of effort in promoting the peace concern. Particular interest was expressed in our opportunity to give spiritual help to the Mennonites of Europe and South America. Another problem that was discussed at considerable length was the matter of possible peacetime conscription and the position to be taken in view of that eventuality.

OUR SEMINARY AND BIBLE SCHOOL

"Delight thyself in the Lord; He shall give thee the desires of thine heart." Psa. 37:4.

It is with a great deal of joy and with gratitude toward the Lord and His people that we now can inform our churches of the new home for the Seminary and Bible School which was turned over to the Seminary Board on Wednesday, August 14. Folders with pictures and information about the new Headquarters were sent out last week to all Conference Churches in the States. There should be at least one folder for each home.

Rev. Ed. J. Miller who has been serving the school as field secretary during the summer months, will continue to do so part-time as he carries on his studies.

The First Mennonite Church at Topeka, Indiana, has granted Rev. Wilmer S. Shelly a leave for part-time service to visit Central Conference Churches in the interest of the school.

And we are grateful that the Board of Education has made provisions for Rev. Ronald von Riesen to serve our institution in the same capacity in the Western District.

Our prayers are with these brethren. May the Lord make them a blessing to our congregations as they go about to tell what God has done in connection with our Seminary and Bible School.

All correspondence should be sent now to our new Headquarters at 4614 Woodlawn Avenue, Chicago 15, Illinois.—A. Warkentin

Only a few weeks ago we laid to rest our former pastor, Rev. David Schultz (see In Memoriam), and again the Lord has taken away a sister in the church, Mrs. Carl Dirks, nee Nellie Schmidt. She was the oldest member of the church and one of the few remaining pioneers of 1874 of this community. She was the last living child of Elder Benjamin Schmidt family.—Anna Unruh, Corr.

—Alexanderwohl Church, Goessel, Kansas: The Goessel, Tabor, and Alexanderwohl churches sponsored a dried-fruit buying project in California for the purpose of sending such fruit to the needy in Europe. The Alexanderwohl collection of this, held August 18, amounted to $1,135. The next Sunday Dr. and Mrs. Herbert Dester had charge of the morning and evening services. In the evening they showed slides and three colored film strips of their work in India. Because of a three to four inch rain few people could attend these meetings. That same Sunday Rev. P. A. Wedel went to Ransom, Kansas, to conduct a baptismal service in the little Mennonite church there. A male quartet went along. The Alexanderwohl, Tabor, and Goessel C. E.'s are planning a joint C. Arrangements were immediately made for them to speak and to show pictures of their work among the Indians, in our church that evening. There was a good and appreciative attendance from both of the local churches. The Habeggers left the next day to attend a daughter's wedding at Grabill, near Berne, Indiana.—W. C. Andreas, Corr.

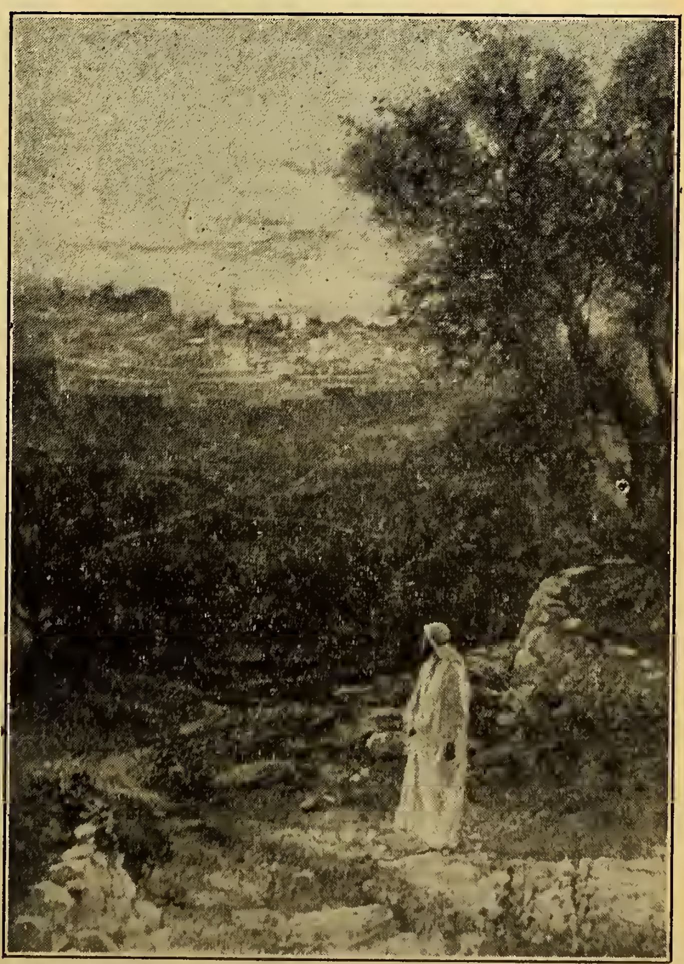
Upon What Does Peace Depend?



Cut Courtesy "Gospel Messenger"

"And when he saw the city, as he approached, he pt over it, saying, "Would that you too knew, even -day, on what your peace depends! But no, it is lden from you! A time is coming for you, when ur enemies will throw up ramparts round you and circle you and besiege you on every side and raze u and your children within you to the ground, leav- ; you not one stone upon another—and all because u would not understand when God was visiting you." offatt, Luke 19:41-44)

Jesus saw that Jerusalem was pursuing a policy at could only end in war. The century in which us lived saw many incidents of rioting and re- lion. One writer states, "Not less than 200,000 triots fell in battle or were executed during this adful century, an appalling number for such a tiny country." In the New Testament there are at least four references to insurrection. "Two thousand Jewish patriots were crucified at one time as a warning against further rebellion."

The Jews were saturated with hatred of the Romans. Their patriotic loyalty seemed to leave no other course open. So they seethed with rebellion and hatred. And by 70 A. D. their policy of provocative hatred resulted in the siege of Jerusalem by the Romans. For nearly five months Jerusalem held out, and then it was completely destroyed.

Jesus favored a different policy for the achievement of peace. The course of action to which he invited the Jewish people was: "Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate

From the editor's point - of - view:

THE COMMISSION OF THE CHURCHES ON INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS, which was recently created by world church leaders in session at Cambridge, England, August 4-7, may prove to be a great step forward in putting the Kingdom of God before the sovereignty of each individual nation. Thus far the Christians of the world have not spoken unitedly on the great issues over which their countries have gone to war. Generally the Christians of each nation have sided in with the "cause" of their own particular nation. Thus Christians have fought against Christians. Certainly this is not the way of the Holy Spirit. Now a commission has been created which is to enable the Christian bodies of each nation to confer with the Christian bodies of other nations to the end that the Christian Church of the world may make plain how the gospel message is related to the life and death issues with which the nations wrestle. Certainly there ought to be more hope of the Christians of the various nations uniting on certain issues than there is of the nations uniting. What a power for peace there would be if the Christian representatives of all nations would unite on a common policy to preserve the peace and then would help to make this policy clear and plain to all the Christians in their respective countries. In these days when there is talk of inevitable war in the near future, it is high time that the Christian Church of the world make clear the Way of Christ. If the Christian Church cannot make clear and plain the Way, who will? In this light the defined aims of the commission take on great significance. They are as follows:

One—To encourage the formation in each country and in each church represented in the parent bodies of commissions through which the consciences of Christians may be stirred and educated as to their responsibilities in the world of nations.

Two—To gather and appraise materials on the relations of the churches to public affairs, including the work of various Churches and Church Councils in these fields and to make the best of this material available to its constituent churches.

Three—To study selected problems of international justice and world order, including economic and social questions, and to make the results of such study widely known among all the churches.

Four—To assign specific responsibilities and studies to sub-committees or special groups, and to claim for them the assistance of persons especially expert in the problems under consideration.

Five—To organize study conferences of leaders of different churches and nations.

Six—To call the attention of the churches to problems especially clamant upon the Christian conscience at any particular time and to suggest ways in which Christians may act effectively upon these problems, in their respective countries and internationally.

Seven—To discover and declare Christian principles with direct relevance to the relations of nations, and to formulate the bearing of those principles upon immediate issues.

Eight—To represent the World Council of Churches and the International Missionary Council in relations with international bodies such as the United Nations and related agencies.

Nine—To concert from time to time with other organizations holding similar objectives in the advancement of particular ends.

If these aims be achieved, then the Commission ought to make its mark. The time is short. Let the Christian Church do enough and in time.

TOWARD MENTAL HEALTH is a thirty-two-page ten-cent booklet that ought to be widely read by Christians. It was prepared by The National Mental Health Foundation, Inc., in cooperation with Public Affairs Committee, Inc. This small, very readable booklet discusses nervous and anxious and moody people and what causes emotional and mental disorder, and then it goes on to point out the need for a national mental health program. Lastly it suggests "What You Can Do." The last page lists books "For Further Reading." This booklet which states that "The problem presented by nervous and mental diseases is an enormous one—

Handling Resentments

by Paul Albrecht

When we are blocked in attempting to reach our oals and gain our satisfactions, our natural reaction to feel resentful. We may direct this resentment gainst the world in general, or against someone who blocking us. When we ourselves are responsible for ur unhappy lot, some convenient substitute may re-ive our displeasure. We all reflect our common ay in this manner—the difference is one of degree.

Feelings of anger or rage seem to be a natural part our being. Strong and well-developed personalities ive a large share of this attribute. Without this tough-ss in our personality we would be very weak and ineless creatures indeed. It helps to prevent us from ving in when we meet obstacles. The same Paul ho wrote I. Cor. 13 said at the close of his life, have fought a good fight."

The tragic results of the misuse of anger are all around , however. Some people lose control of themselves d become "blind with rage." Some of us become itable and hard to get along with. We may even d a strong desire for revenge within us.

We see the results of anger and resentment not only our character but also in our physical bodies. When are angry our body prepares itself for strenuous ort. It is ready for either fight or flight. Adrenalin thrown into the blood stream, digestion stops, and e body is ready for action.

It is easy to see how unwise it would be to have our dies in this condition for very long. Yet, this is actly what happens when we carry a grudge, nurse resentment, or plan revenge. Our digestive system nnot function properly and even diseases such as ers or arthritis may result. Our bodies were made function in an atmosphere of good will not ill will.

The problem of resentment is with each of us in rying degrees. If we are angry at a good many things st of the time, it would probably be well for us to k competent guidance. For most of us the problem is y real but perhaps overwhelming. Let us look at a of the possible causes and expressions of resent-nt.

We may be troubled with a rather perpetual feel- of vague resentment. We may "let off this steam" an exaggerated fashion when confronted with irrita-ns and small annoyances. After a day's work, some ht misstep by one of the children will be sufficient call down the clouds of wrath. If the person for om the evening meal is prepared is late, the incident the moment assumes earth-shaking importance.

his rather continuous undertone of resentment often result of our total outlook on life. We have a ing that "the world owes us something." Our control over our childhood "world" may have been too great. At any rate, the real "world" has never quite lived up to our expectations. We express these feelings by a show of temper—or, we may have "outgrown" our temper until we are merely disagreeable. It may not be possible to change our feelings entirely, "In the world ye shall have tribulation . . . ," but we can express them in constructive efforts to better our lot of others around us.

Perhaps, our problem is that someone has wronged us and we cannot forget the injury. We should examine the situation to see if this mistreatment does not rest to a great extent in our imagination. However, in this life where many people live selfishly, we are bound to get hurt.

We are all aware of our duty to forgive "seventy times seven." Let us look at another aspect. If we carry ill will we are injured twice. Once by what has been done to us and a second time by the unforgiving way we react to the misdeed.

The apostle spoke words of profound wisdom when he said, "let not the sun go down on your wrath:"—or as Moffatt has it, "your exasperation." Mind-healers have re-affirmed this by showing us the tremendous importance of the thoughts we have just before we drift off to sleep. Further, by not carrying our "wrath" past the day of its origin we are saved from that vicious tendency to carry a grudge. We need the healthy-minded spirit of Edward Everett Hale. In his later years he once said, "I do not think anybody in the world ever had so many friends as I have had. However, I once had an enemy, a determined enemy, and I have been trying all day to remember his name."

Receiving criticism is another experience common to all of us—intensely so to people who are leading church and group activities. It is natural to want to avoid this—to pray "that we should be saved from our enemies and from the hands of all that hate us." We tend to take appreciation for granted and consider criticism as rudeness. What we probably dislike most about being crticized is what it does to our self-esteem. The more inferior we feel, the more we are bothered.

We might consider for a moment the one who is leveling the criticism at us. Many times he is most critical of the very thing he dislikes in himself. Or, he may be trying to make himself superior by lowering us. In such cases instead of reacting with resentment we could try to help this person, who obviously is in need. Perhaps he is actually trying to help us. We could be pleased that he cares so much—after all this is one of the few ways we have of finding out about ourselves. When we live serenely, we carefully examine criticism for what may be of value to us and ignore what is beyond that.

We have considered the naturalness of resentment, we have seen the tragedy resentment may cause in our character and physical health, and have examined a few problem areas. The problem is still with us, however. What shall we do?

In the first place, it is not wise to try to act as if we no longer are resentful. This is dishonest and may make the havoc deeper and more dangerous. When we try to drive resentment out as it were a devil, then as in Jesus' parable, seven devils take its place, and our last estate is worse than the first. Rather we turn the energy of combativeness and resentment to good uses and use even our "wrath" to praise Him. The early Christians were pacifists, refusing service in the Roman armies, but they desired to be a "good soldier of Christ Jesus" and "to put on the whole armour of God."

The basis for our failure to handle resentment constructively, moreover, lies in one central fact—that is, our love for ourselves. When we become too preoccupied with our little world, our fellow men begin to appear as strangers and enemies. From our little fortifications we make preparations to defend ourselves. —Really, there is so much in life to be done. There is hardly time to think of other people—let alone to think ill of them. A life filled with constructive good will has little room for resentment.

In shaping our life program we can well follow Christ's example. When He proclaimed His program on the Sabbath at Nazareth He read from Isaiah, "The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor; he hath sent me to heal the broken-hearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised, to preach the acceptable year of the Lord. And he closed the book." The next words were, "and the day of vengeance of our God." We also can afford to leave this to God.

Quarterly Report by F. J. and Anna Isaac

(The following quarterly report by Missionary Isaacs is for the period of April-June, 1946, and was sent from Mauhadih mission station.)

Dear Brethren of the Foreign Mission Board:

When India has gone through the dry hot season safely there goes up a wave of thanksgiving on the part of those who recognize the goodness of God. In the Mauhadih area among the Christians there were no deaths during this period, although smallpox was prevalent and one Christian man was very sick of it. He had not received vaccination last spring.

Just at the end of March a women's retreat began in Janjgir. Mrs. Isaac was one of the leaders, so I took her in the car. While she was busy at Janjgir I helped with auditing work at Champa and also make a trip to Raipur where a neighboring mission sought my advice. Our evangelistic workers had in the meantime penetrated farther into hill and jungle to villages we do not reach often. They reported a friendly reception and considerable sale of Gospels. At the mission station, we were also busy with repairs and renovations. Then Easter arrived, and we had great blessings in daily meetings during Holy Week.

By the end of April Mrs. Isaac and I got ready to go to the hills. However, a committee meeting at Jagdeeshpur needed my presence, so Mrs. Isaac waited at Champa a couple of days while I attended this duty; then we started south by railway. Ootacamund in South India was our destination. The missionaries of the Mennonite Brethren Mission in Hyderabad State come to this hill station. We had very fine fellowship with them, our boarding place being near their houses. Ootacamund has an altitude of over seven thousand feet, so it is quite cool even if nearer the equator. Our stay there was restful, and we came away refreshed in body and spirit. Heeding the cordial invitation of our Brethren missionaries we left Ootacamund a week earlier in order to visit some of their mission stations which could be reached on the way home without detour. We had a very pleasant and instructive visit. Their work is showing excellent growth. They have a Christian community of some fourteen thousand members.

As we reached home distressing new awaited us. A leading young Christian at the mission station had raped the ten-year-old daughter of another Christian family, and the police were just then taking him to jail. It was a great shock and shame to all. Thus satan gets in his work. Until then during the absence things had gone well. Some special meetings had been held, and some of the young people had gone to a youth rally at Champa.

The day we drove home from Champa to Mauhadih rain followed us, and there has been enough since to make the farmers happy. The beginning of the rainy season is normal.

We are especially thankful that the Indian leaders left in charge of church, dispensary, and station did their work faithfully and well. We are persuaded that the church within the area of our mission field is growing in stature and grace.—Yours in His service, F. J. and Anna Isaac.

What of the Church?

J. John Friesen

Men can resist-war on a number of grounds The opinion has been advanced that only those regenerated in the Christian sense have a right to resist, to be called conscientious objectors. That is a high reason, but would we confine the "right" to save a drowning man to the avowed Christian?

There are those who do not participate in war for political reasons— it is not expedient. Gandhi has for many years faced the problem of rescuing Indian nationalism from British rule. He could have incited his people to revolution, but instead preached non-cooperation. It was more expedient. Gandhi has other reasons against the war method, but political expedience is one, and it works on a national scale in India.

It is entirely conceivable that if the German people had seen clearly that Germany would be blasted into a land of ruin, ... they would have objected totally and on a national scale, as they should have, against the war. There is evidence that some did so object.

The political objector is on solid ground. If it is good to object to war on political grounds in one country, it is good in another, and so on. Expediency so tends to rise to the level of a fixed principle.

There are others who refuse to participate in war on humanitarian grounds. And this is a much broader ground; it embraces all humanity. It exercises the mind in fruitful processes . . . Civilization has become a name only. All conventions that man has set up for humanizing life and even warfare are meaningless. Successive wars have increased in extent and monstrosity till mankind is threatened with utter annihilation. The humanitarian too is on solid ground in his stand against war. He acts on high principle. It is not for man to kill man!

A third group of objectors, who have been much in the public eye, renounce war and murder for religious reasons—the conscientious objectors. Among these many shades of religious opinion are represented, but they agree in that they cannot support war.

The Christians of the early centuries held this attitude—they refused to participate in war. This attitude was not merely negative, it was positive. Its characteristic was not merely abstention from evil but the doing of good. The historic peace churches have adopted that attitude. The Mennonites have been on this way for more than four hundred years, the Quakers for three hundred years, and the Brethren some two hundred fifty.

These churches stood virtually alone during the war of 1914 and on. Today practically all large denominations of this country have officialy pledged themselves to defend the rights of those of their members who have conscientious scruples against participation in war. According to a congressional report of December, 1943, 115 denominations had taken such action at that time, and a number of these operate their own C. P. S. camps.

In that other world conflict prominent ministers of the gospel preached war. Today they stand uncompromisingly for the principle of peace that the Mennonite church has lived by for centuries. John Haynes Holmes, Harry Emerson Fosdick, George Butterick, all three of New York; Kirby Page, and E. Stanley Jones are among those who are steadfastly of the way of peace, and lead that way. The Rev. Buttrick, pastor of a Presbyterian church, has three sons, and all three chose civilian public service. Dr. Jones in a recent communication has made the statement: "I was opposed to the method and spirit of war before the war began while the war was on, and now at the close I am opposed to war more than ever. It is the great illusion. My moral universe, which has held steady during the war and does not have to be recast at the close of the war, has no place in it for approval of a method which bombs, burns and suffocates innocent and guilty alike, which leaves whole cities vast piles of rubble and which poisons the hearts of men with hate and lust. I cannot reconcile it with the spirit of Christ." (Christian Century, January 30)

John Haynes Holmes, who speaks with prophetic insight and candor in his book Out of Darkness, ... sees hope only in those "saving remnants" who put loyalty to God above loyalty to earthly powers and "ignore the issues of the sword."

The peace movement spreads in the United States, in England, and elsewhere. Rhys Davies of England told his Bethel College audience that British non-participants in war increased from 10,000 in 1914 to 65,000 in 1939, and that the number would grow to a half a million within ten years.

Our world is mortally ill—war has made it so. If it is to be saved, it will not be saved by military means but by moral means. The central problem of humanity is a moral problem, it revolves about the question of right against wrong. War is wrong. It has sickened the world to death. Health in a person is good; disease in a person is bad. A monstrosity such as war, that sickens the whole world, cannot be good, it is evil.

That war is evil nobody knows better than the mil-

J. John Friesen a member of the Bethel Church, Mountain Lake, Minnesota, has written on Mennonite history and is a former teacher of Freeman Junior College.

lions of soldiers sent to foreign lands. From an editorial in the Christian Century of January 30, it becomes explicit that they see the world of today as a "hopeless mess." They believe that America intervened in the war "to save the bacon of our allies," and "now serves to prop up a collapsing colonial imperialism."

The religious objector acknowledges responsibility to God to whom the Christian church owes its primary allegiance . . . . Does not loyalty to God and conscience constitute our highest loyalty to the State? The continued existence of the Church, its healing power, will depend upon its choice. The candle of the Church may flicker out unless it chooses, unreservedly, the Way!

Our civilian public service men have demonstrated the peace principle. . . . . When wide reaches of public opinion, Christian and secular, come to an acceptance of the peace principle of the historic peace churches; when the war monster stands naked before the world in all its hideous shapes—can the church fail them?

The church owes to these men . . . . it owes to itself, to its God, and to the world a solid re-commitement to the principle of peace—the traditional Christian way.

If such re-commitment is to become effective does it not mean a searching of soul among the laity of the church? Does it not mean that every Sunday School teacher in all our congregations must have accepted the way of peace as held by the church? Does it not certainly mean that every minister of the gospel and pasttor of a church must be wholly committed to this way of peace— of non-violent resistance to war? Does it not mean that the way will have to be taught in our Sunday Schools, in our Bible groups, in our catechetical classes; preached from the pulpit; and lived in our homes and outside of them?

In this most crucial hour in the history of the world, can the Church, can the Mennonite church, do less than make this re-commitment to the principle of peace, and walk that way with a high and holy will?

If the Christian church cannot lead the way to a total renunciation of war—who shall?

Eva Pauls Reports from Champa, India

"Be strong and of good courage; be not afraid, neither be thou dismayed; for the Lord thy God is with thee whithersoever thou goest." Josh. 1:9. With this assurance I left the homeland again the second time to go and serve in India. We were certainly grateful for all you did for us to get us on that ship. Humanly speaking it almost seemed impossible for us to make it. But we left in faith trusting that if the Lord wanted us to go on that ship He would undertake for us in a special way. And He did. The ocean voyage was not all comfort, but we always had this one great comfort that if all went well it would not be long. We reached the shores of India in twenty-two days. We praise the Lord for a safe journey.

Now five months have passed since we arrived. Many and varied have been the experiences. I am again busy in the Leper Home. Had a class with some new nurses in the month of February. Now after they had their vacations we are again ready to have a class. We are always in need of workers as some keep on dropping out constantly.

The Primary Sunday School at the Leper Home has grown considerable. At first the enrollment was twenty-eight and now it has increased to about forty. This is partly due to the attendance being better and also quite a few new children have been admitted into the home. This Sunday School gives me great joy. Most of them bring rice instead of money and they give freely. It also gives them joy when they measure the rice and they see that they have up to eight to ten pounds a Sunday.

We are nearing the end of the hot season and the rainy season is at the door; therefore, we are having warm, sultry weather at present.

In two more weeks the missionaries will begin to return from the hills, which will lessen my responsibilities considerable. At present I am the only one here in Champa. Yours in His Service, Eva A. Pauls, June 8, 1946.

Glimpses of Camp Nathanael, Kentucky

May 28th brought the opening of our camp season at Camp Nathanael. Campers arrived by truck, bus, and car, and soon everyone was getting acquainted with counsellors, teachers and fellow-campers. Campfire meetings, daily classes, evening gospel services and bedtime devotions brought the Word of God to these young lives. To many that Word became "the power of God unto salvation," for truly it was God Who "gave the increase."

One of the campers went home with this testimony, "I'm so glad I said my verses and got to come to camp. Always wanted to be saved and now I am. Everytime I think of it I want to get my Bible and read it. I'm so glad my heart is clean and all my sins are gone. Now when I sing, 'Thank you Lord, for saving my soul' I mean it. There's no way good enough to thank Him 'cept to believe and not sin and be kind to everyone."

While teaching the lesson on the doctrine of the Holy Spirit and "His power in witnessing," Niggie raised her hand saying, "Miss Slotter, I want to say something." Boldly walking to the front of the class she said, "Boys and girls, I believe the Holy Spirit wants me to tell you right now what Jesus did for me last night. Jesus died for me and last night He saved me, too, and I want you to let Him save you, too. Later in the week she testified, "that it used to be whenever she tried to testify that her knees would shake and she'd want to cry but that now she didn't care, not even if she had to cry a bucketful."

Drawn by the Holy Spirit and fed by the Holy Spirit, let us remember these in prayer, that daily they might be willing to be led by the Spirit.—Margaret Slotter, Cumberland, Kentucky.

By Cornelius Krahn

lour and Raisins. According to De Wachter, a monthy published by the Mennonites of the southern part f The Netherlands, every person on Walchern Island eceived ten pounds of flour and a half pound of raiins. A poster at the distribution center read, "These oods come to you as a love gift from the Mennonites f the United States and Canada."

Most of our readers know that Walchern Island vas flooded during the final stages of the war, making housands of people homeless. An island that had been von from the sea through a thousand-year-struggle beame part of the sea again. How greatly the above nentioned gifts were appreciated has been demonstratd by hundreds of letters written to the farmers of ansas, Manitoba, California, and many other states ho are contributing generously to relieve the sufferng of our brethren in foreign countries.

ebuilding Ancient Dikes. The salty water that has ooded Walchern Island and inundated the land is beng drained off again. The land that once was a ymbol of prosperity lost its cattle pastures, trees and omes through the salty floods. We can hardly imagine hat it will take to rehabilitate such an island. De Vachter reports that twelve young Mennonites from ates between California and Pennsylvania have come help in this tremendous reconstruction project. They re being welcomed "as men who have seen in the oss of Christ the love with which God loved this orld and are now going out into the world in His ame to extend a practical and active hand to others."

ennonite Youth Meet in Germany. Recently the oung people of south Germany had their first meeting after the war at the Weierhof, Palatinate. The presence of a number of American representatives made this meeting even more significant. The chairman of the Vereinigung der Mennoniten im Deutschen Reich, Rev E. Haendiges, gave the main address emphasizing that even though much of what had gone on in Germany was unknow to them they had to face the resulting responsibility for it and consider themselves guilty with the others.

Aspects and prospectives of our Brotherhood Today was the topic on which Rev. C. Nijdam spoke at the meeting of the Dutch Mennonite Ministerial Association at Amsterdam. He summarized: "The eschatological ascetic, and ethical elements were predominant among the early Ana-baptists. The eschatoligical element disappeared after it had come near causing the collapse of the brotherhood. The ascetic element stagnated and became a caricature during the eighteenth century. The ethical element also wore off . . . For two centuries the humanitarian element supported by the Remonstrant influence has been predominant. In this respect we as Dutch Mennonites find ourselves in contrast with the rest of the Mennonite world. We are undernourished in a spiritual sense, but the church feels a strong nostalgia for the past and under the ashes a fire still smolders. God provides opportunities and we grasp them." The lecture was followed by a lively discussion in which spiritual leadership was sought from the ADS. (de Noodbrug)

Mennonite Theological Seminary of Amsterdam. has been providing the Mennonite churches with ministers for more than two hundred years. Handicapped during the years of war and occupation, it now plans to operate on a larger scale than ever before. Included in its curriculum are the following subjects: philosophy, doctrines, practical theology, Mennonite history, psychology, sociology, and pedagogy to be taught by four faculty members. The other theological subjects are taken at the Theological Department of the University of Amsterdam. It is expected that to the twenty-eight present theological students, of which ten are girls, a great many will be added at the opening of the school year.

THE FOOT PRINTS OF CHRIST

"Go your way and tell John what things ye have seen," Luke 7:22. John wanted to know whether Jesus was really the expected Messiah or not and so sent his messenger to Him to ask the Lord "Are you the come one?" Jesus asked them to report to John about his work and service. In the same way we who are Christians should prove by our actions that we are Christ's and not by certificates of church membership or by Christian names. We should practice in our daily life unselfishness, sympathy, love, and kindness, etc. Are we in a postion to say, "Look at my life and works and judge for yourself whether I am a Christian." (The foregoing meditation was written by Dr. Mrs. Samuel of the General Conference mission station, Jagdeeshpur, C. P., India.)

The Mennonite Youth of Aalsmeer, Holland

by Adr. Zwartendijk

The Mennonite Youth Movement of Aalsmeer, about which I shall try to tell you something, has 250 members in the age of 16-27 years. In Holland this is a large number for a community of 11,000 inhabitants. Many of them have not yet been baptized, for we are mostly baptized in Holland when we are about 21 years old. The congregation has about 800 baptized members; so it is the greatest country-congregation.

The Mennonite Youth Movement of Aalsmeer is just a great family. They feel such friendship and they are so much acquainted with each other, that they know the difficulties and the joys of the other, like a member of a family knows these things of the other members of the family. And in the sphere of this friendship we try to come nearer to God and to follow Christ more than we do now.

The Mennonite Youth Movement of Aalsmeer has joined the Doopsgezinde Jongerenbond, D. J. B. (Mennonite Youth Movement). This is the organization, which all Mennonite Youth joined. This is our central committee. In Aalsmeer the Mennonite youth is divided in six groups, each of these groups is for our young people of a certain age, and each has its own board, which assists the leader in preparing the meetings. These six leaders always are people out of the youth itself.

What means do we use to reach the purposes above mentioned: to come nearer to God and to follow Christ more than we do now? At first we have our usual meetings. Here we discuss the topics interesting us; e.g. non-resistance, our attitude to the N.S.B., capital punishment (which is applied again in Holland after the war) etc. But besides these regular meetings we have many other meetings. When weather is good, we make sailing-trips at the lake, close to Aalsmeer. So those, who cannot buy a sailing-boat, are enabled to enjoy the nice sailing. These trips always end with a meditation, while God's wide nature is around us. Sunday morning we have our service for the youth in the age from 16-21 years. And in summer we have one of the big events of our Youth Movement, vid. our "camps". Then we hire one of the Mennonite camphouses or a part of a farm, and there we remain more than a week. Mostly older persons are the leaders. In the camps we listen to the Gospel, and discuss our problems, but we also have the gaity and the sports, and the ties of our friendship strengthened. Such weeks are weeks of great reflection and in this way the camps are of the greatest importance for our Youth Movement. In winter a great number of our members are active in the West-Hill services.

Some weeks ago a group of our young people have been to a hospital for t. b. patients with a bouquet of flowers and a piece of chocolate for each patient. They sang some of our songs, accompanied by a band of musicians, out of Aalsmeer, too. This was done in cooperation with the Dutch Reformed Church. During the war we cooperated with all the other Aalsmeer churches, even the Roman-Catholic. Then we had vid. our services, named: "calling the youth." Then we tried to give the Dutch youth, living in oppression and fear, in hunger and uncertainity and under the influence of the Nazi-propaganda, we tried to give them a a Word for their life, so that they had a base, on which they could stand, so that they had a counterpoise for all the things just mentioned.

We also publish our own monthly Youth paper: De Toorts (The Torch) in which is a Scriptural text for each day; The coming meetings are announced; a short report of the meetings is published; the first page is nearly always filled with a poem and a short meditation. I hope this will have given you an impression of the youth movement in Aalsmeer. May it work to the Glory of God, our Father.

Adr. Zwartendijk is a resident of Aalsmeer, Holland, and a member of the Mennonite youth group of which he writes. He says of himself: "I am twenty-one years old and study theology at the Amsterdam University, for I want to become a Mennonite minister." His article is one of the first to share with American Mennonites the life, thought, and experience of Mennonite youth in Holland. In the future further similar articles will be exchanged.

How Does God Call?

by Arnold Nickel

"The Lord called Samuel and he answered, Here am I."

Wither bound? Does God call Christian young people as He did in the generations of the Old Testament, New Testament, and throughout the history of the Early Church? As another school year is in the offing, many of our young people who have finished their academic training in public schools plus many others are trying to understand the purpose of the Almighty for the coming year. There is often a troubled mind and a quivering soul as thoughts run to and fro from one tentative decision to another. Unsurmountable questions rise to overshadow each new ray of hope that might encourage them to decide on a definite plan for the evermoving future. But the primary question that remains unanswered only too often is, "Where does God call you and me?" Does He call young people to attend certain schools, into certain vocations, or must Christian people blindly struggle throughout their lives without the guidance of their Lord into that work which best befits them?

How are You Called?

It is a Christian conviction that God has a universal purpose for His Church and a particular plan that each of His children is to fill in order that He might accomplish His plan for mankind. It is a Scriptural dogma and a historical fact that undergirds the age-old conviction that Jesus calls us into His field of service where the harvest is ever-ripe and the laborers are always too few to complete that harvest. We are informed how God called the Patriarchs, Kings and Queens, Prophets, Apostles, Early Church Fathers, and the great preachers and missionaries up to the present day. Certainly we can rest assured that God "calleth His own sheep by name and leadeth them out" into all the world. Of Esther we read, "Who knoweth whether thou art come into the Kingdom for such a time as this?" Esther 4:14. Paul charged Timothy, his faithful servant, to "preach the word." We could make a profile study of the pioneers of Christendom to learn how God led them by various callings, but our thesis is to give some principles that we can assimilate with our experiences which will be found useful to clarify the immediate problem: "Where does God call you?"

God calls you and not you yourself. He calls by His own good pleasure and in His appointed time. You have no basic right to expect God to call you simply because you have finished a certain educational requirement or belong to a certain age group. Qualifications that are most essential are not necessarily a guarantee that you are called of God into some special service. The great need that may present a challenge to you gives no surety that God is calling you. God may call through some above mentioned circumstances to clarify His purpose but the initial call of God is attested by His Spirit interceding with our spirit; thus He leads us and we follow Him.

What Should You Expect

When God calls you, you need not expect some theophany to manifest itself to you, or an audible voice to speak to you the words of direction. God speaks to the inner man, the self that is not known by outward senses, but the spirit that can contact the Eternal Manifestation of His Spirit. It is an indescribable interaction of the finite that remains for time and eternity. Hence when God calls you to work in His vineyard, you will recognize His call if your life is lost in God.

God calls you apart. Without exception God calls His children apart from the onslaughts of the world and apart from the things of the world, for a period of meditation, prayer, and study in order to reveal to them His wonderful thoughts and ways which bear a vital relationship to His call. We have a beautiful example of this at the very beginning of Jesus' teaching of the Sermon on the Mount: "And seeing the multitudes, he went up into a mountain, and when he was set, his disciples came unto him. And he opened his mouth and taught them saying." He taught his disciples strenuously for approximately three years; sent them out for practical work; taught them to pray; exhorted and at various times rebuked them for their spiritual immaturity; and above all He gave a vision of His expectations. Can He expect less of you today then the best possible training in the very best educational institutions? On such a foundation our Conference Schools have built their aims and objectives, and it is with this consideration that Mennonite young people should regard them. "Other foundation can no man lay than that which is laid, which is Jesus Christ." I Corinthians 3:11.

All Christians — Full time Workers

God calls youth to go into every job, occupation, and profession that is worthy of His name. The obsolete teaching that only those who enter full-time Christian service—ministers, missionaries, and other Christian workers—are called by God is a misconception and misinterpretation of Holy Writ. In a sense all Christians are full-time workers for Jesus Christ, and that is enough evident reason for every child of God to know that he or she is called to a particular task in life. Generally during the time that young people give themselves over to God and await His call through the previous listed suggestions, and many others, that they are consciously led by Him to the place where He calls them. The oft-repeated verse of Scripture that rings in the hearts of men is an everlasting challenge to Christian young people, "Whom shall I send, and who will go for me? Then said I, Here am I send me, and he said, Go and tell this people."

Where does God call you? He calls you apart to show you the way in which to go; He calls you to places where He has called others before you; He calls you in unexpected ways and to new places that need you; He calls you to menial tasks, and if found faithful, to more and greater responsibilities. Be faithful, in the work you know you ought to do, and be obedient to the call that is instilled within you.

Let's Get Together

Isn't it painful to see a couple of fine fellows working against each other, instead of together for the team?

And often neither one realizes that he is selfish.

Take basketball. When boys on a team become more interested in individual glory than in scoring points as a unit, when they suffer with "headlineitis," it is just too bad for everybody except the opposition.

When our school plays home basketball games, I have to get the score book immediately so I can telephone the story to distant newspaper sports editors. A few years ago we had a good team, but it could have been a great team. After each game there were several varsity stars who would make it a point to waylay me in the hall.

"How many points did I get tonight? How many points did Jim get?"

If Jim had scored 19 and the eager one had scored 17, there was a disappointed exclamation and, "He beat me by two!"

Last year we had a great team. I use the adjective advisedly. The team was undefeated. It continued a winning streak started the year before and added eighteen victories.

After the games, some of the players used to see me about the scoring. But can you guess what they asked?

"How many baskets did our team score? Boy! Jim was hot tonight, wasn't he? He's plenty good!"

And so it goes, Basketball, baseball—life.

Paul wrote his first letter to the Corinthians "unto the church of God which is at Corinth."

Paul besought these brethren that there be no divisions among them, but that they be perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment. "For," continued Paul, "it hath been signified unto me concerning you, my brethren, ... that there are contentions among you."

You and I, as you have been told perhaps too often, are living in momentous times. We realize the value of unity today. We remember the "E Pluribus Unum" on our coins, and to us it makes sense even if we aren't the best in Latin.

In another age of decision for our country, back in 1787, John Dickinson wrote "Liberty Song":

"Then join in hand, brave Americans all!
By uniting we stand, by dividing we fall."

Now how about your personal recognition of the Commander in Chief of your life? Do you really try to live so that you may carry out his orders?

Listen, Butch and Percy and Bill and Pete and Tom, you don't do a very good job of it if you gripe and fuss or take short cuts, or "get even" for every slight, real or fancied; you aren't much of a soldier if you think about yourself all the time; you aren't a team player if you concentrate or how you will impress the fans.

Said Henry Ward Beecher: "No man is more cheated than the selfish man."

And remember this: the unselfish man makes the cause succeed; when the cause succeeds, the man succeeds.

Good luck to your team!—Forward

Religious Education Week

Calling upon churches, Sunday schools and church councils to consecrate themselves to the task of presenting the interpreting "God's Word for Today," Protestant forces of the United States and Canada will unite in the sixteenth annual observance of Religious Education Week September 29 to October 6, it was announced by Dr. Roy G. Ross, general secretary, International Council of Religious Education, sponsor of the observance.

Local churches of 40 Protestant denominations and 173 interdenominational councils of churches and religious education are co-operating, both in denominationally-planned programs and in community-wide interchurch activities, using the theme, "God's Word for Today."

Pointing out that the overwhelming concern of the western world today is "how to make secure the peace we have won," Doctor Ross declared: "Our apprehension at the precariousness of our diplomatic relationships, our uneasiness over domestic economic conflicts, and our concern about racial tensions are all a part of this insistent problem.

"While the Christian faith does not pretend to have specific answers to involved social problems, it does declare that men must have respect for each other." "It insists that we approach these intricate problems as Christian brothers. Only so will the solutions to our problems of peace be found."

Religious Education Week will open with Rally or Promotion Day with emphasis on educational evangelism, stressing increased enrollment and attendance. Monday will feature the Christian leader,, while "family night" on Tuesday will bring out the place of religion in the family. Interchurch and community fellowship will mark Thursday's emphasis, and youth rallies are planned for Friday. The week's observance will climax on World Communion Sunday, October 6.

STUDENT CHRISTIAN MOVEMENT

The Japanese Student Christian Movement is being reorganized. Even during the war, some school authorities were sympathetic toward student Christian activities. At Tokyo Imperial University and Waseda University (Tokyo), student associations continued, with dormitories as the center of their activities. Thus the Christian students in these universities were ready to take the lead at the war's end. Since the summer of 1945, "Y's" in Rikkyo and Chuo universities and Meiji Galkuin have been revived. Representatives of these associations hold frequent meetings with representatives of Tokyo Women's Christian College, Tsuda College and the Imperial Women's Medical College. Activities likewise have been revived in Kyoto, Kobe, Wakayama and other student centers. Four hundred boys and girls from various middle schools in Tokyo held a joint Christmas worship service.

MCC Worker Interned and Released

Seven Americans and two Hungarians were interned by Yugoslav officers in Ljubljana Hotel after a forced landing of their transport plane on August 9. Richard Blackburn, an MCC-UNRRA worker in Italy who was returning from a refugee repatriation trip, was among the crew. The nine members were released by the Yugoslav authorities on August 22. American authorities said two Yugoslav planes flew around the American plane and forced it down with tracer bullets and continued to fire after the plane had made a crash landing. The American ambassador, Richard C. Patterson, said, " . . . only by the grace of God and the expertness of the pilot were they not all killed."

According to the American embassy the seven Americans were well treated during their period of intern and are in "fine condition." A cable from Boyd Nelson, Director of the MCC Unit in Italy, states that Richard is in good health and was safely returned.

Typhoons in the Philippines

Heavy rain storms and typhoons have been raging in the province of Ilocos Sur in which is located the town of Vigan where the M.C.C. relief unit is to begin operations. Seventy-seven persons have been reported as lost in one town alone according to a letter from Dale Nebel. "It is by far the worst typhoon that has hit that area in all their known history. If there ever was need in the Philippine Islands, especially in the area in which we plan to work, there is an even far greater need now. A person who lives here with the people is nearly consumed with a burning desire to help them. They need food; they need clothing; they need building material; but they need also a program of permanent rehabilitation."

New Food Center to Open in Newton, Kansas

September 10 has been announced as the opening date for the new food warehouse at Newton, Kansas. Groups in this area are urged to take their food contributions to the Newton warehouse, which is replacing the collection center at Lehigh. The address of the food center is 314 Main St., Newton, Kansas, and is located about one block from the M.C.C. clothing center at 220 Main Street.

This will be the fifth food packing center to be set in operation. Other centers are. Silver Springs, Pennsylvania Goshen, Indiana; Kalona, Iowa and Reedley, California.

PEACE NOTES

Inductions Resume in September

Selective Service will begin inducting men on September 1. It appears that deferments will be granted in a few more catagories than had been announced earlier, including not only agricultural workers and fathers, but also college and university teachers, home construction workers, transportation workers. Eighteen-year-olds must register but are not subject to induction until they reach nineteen. For the present, at least, the army says it wants no one over thirty years old.

Book on CPS

Activities of the Pacifist Conscript is the title of a 56-page booklet written by Stanley Taylor of the Mennonite Brethren in Christ Church and a former CPS man. After a sketchey review of the scriptural basis of nonresistance and the historical background of conscientious objection, the author outlines provisions made for C.O.'s in World War II, the organization and administration of C.P.S. camps, activities in the camps, the work of the special project units, and an evaluation of C.P.S. The final chapter gives a few general statistics that are quite useful in helping to complete his description of the CPS program. The booklet is brief and concise. It is published by the Brethren Publishing Company, 1819 South Main, Elkhart, Indiana, and sells for 50c per copy.

College and Seminary News

FREEMAN JUNIOR COLLEGE

The new school term will commence September 2. During the summer many improvements were made on the campus. To Mr. Rudolph Preheim, who has been the faithful custodian on the campus for some years, falls the greater share of the responsibility and work in connection with such projects. Professors Waltner, Graber, and Toews spent considerable time making alterations on the college farm. Professors Graber, Toews, Gross and Linscheid spent some time in student solicitation work in different Mennonite communities. Dr. J. D. Unruh visited Mennonite communities in Canada and Montana. He also served as instructor in several young people's retreats. Miss Kathryn Kaufman studied at Northwestern University while Miss Elva Ratzlaff attended the University of Nebraska. The past week the educational sessions of the Council of Mennonite and Affiliated Colleges and the annual sessions of the Conference on Mennonite Cultural Problems were held on the campus.

BLUFFTON COLLEGE

Freshman report for orientation work Friday, September 6. The first chapel will be held the evening of September 11 with classes beginning the next day. A faculty conference will be held on the afternoon and evening of the seventh and the afternoon of the enrollment of the eighth. The enrollment this fall will be more than 100 per cent larger than that of a year ago. It will be the largest entering class on record. New students will come from twelve states and six foreign countries. College housing is more than filled. Girls have been moved to Lincoln Hall in order to keep them together in one dormitory. Men students are housed in Ropp Hall, formerly the girls dormitory, in the newly acquired Berky residence, and in a number of private homes. The new year with its increased enrollment brings new problems but also a great challenge. We ask your prayers for the school in the year about to begin.

BETHEL COLLEGE

Recognizing that "our sufficiency is from God and from Him alone," members of the College Board, faculty, and administrative staff, and their wives, a group now numbering over 120, met August 31 at a camp in Wichita Heights for a day of prayer, thoughtful discussion, and consecration to the difficult tasks and problems of the unusual year ahead. New members include D. C. Wedel, Bible; Robert Tully, recreation; William Friesen, agriculture; N. Paul Stucky, physics; Wilma Toews, Home Economics; Paul Schmidt, accountant; and Helen Funk, head cook. Returning to the teaching staff after an absence of several years are R. C. Kauffman, professor of psychology, who served as a relief worker in India, and Mariam Penner Schmidt, who will again teach modern languages. UPON WHAT DOES PEACE DEPEND?

you, and pray for them which despitefully use you and persecute you; That ye may be the children of your Father which is in heaven; for he maketh his sun to rise on the evil and on the good, and sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust." Jesus taught the necessity of having a vital concern for the welfare of an enemy which was an oppressor and which denied the God of the Jews.

Did not Jesus suggest that the peace of any nation must depend upon winning the good will of the enemy and that goodwill can only be won by a vital concern for the welfare of the enemy?

the most serious medical problem facing our nation" may be had for ten cents a copy from The National Mental Health Foundation, Inc., Box 7574, Philadelphia 1, Pa., or at a lower price in larger quantities. The Foundation just mentioned has prepared other literature which it sends out upon request. One such item points out: "Altogether Americans contribute annually more than 48 million dollars to voluntary health agencies. Yet, only about one-half cent of every dollar contributed goes to help the 10 million Americans who are in need of care and treatment for nervous and mental disorders." The materials and suggestions obtainable from this Foundation might be used very effectively for Christian Endeavor programs in which our responsibility towards the mental health of people might be investigated. One or two or more programs on this theme might be followed by a visit to one of the state institutions. The programs could also utilize the young men and women in our churches who have served as attendants in mental hospitals. The National Mental Health Foundation invites people to become members. Dues are $1.00 a year. Eight million Americans are mentally or emotionally ill. One out of every twenty-two people will be struck by mental illness and will need to go to a hospital for treatment. The Christian Church has a serious responsibility towards those who are mentally ill, and it needs to do much more to prevent emotional and mental disorders.

A Senator Asks for Spiritual Reconversion

Senator Raymond E. Willis (R.-Ind.), in a speech summing up what he learned during six years in the Senate, put the greatest amount of emphasis on the necessity for a spiritual and moral "reconversion" in America, if this nation is to lead the way to a just and lasting peace.

"Why cannot we the people, not only in the United States, but in every nation, catch the living spirit of Christianity and co-operate to save the world instead of fighting always to destroy the world?" he asked.

"It is truer today than ever that they who take to he sword shall perish by the sword, , , , We proudy boast that America leads among the nations of the world. Yes, we have led in producing the most destructive, the most horrendous force the evil genius of man has yet been able to devise. If we are to continue our dependence on that force for the salvation of our nation, if we are to enter into a race with other nations to keep ahead of them in stupendous might, we must realistically face the fact that our civilization will have to accept the most terrifying and soul-destroying limitations that have ever encompassed man. We are facing the alternative of a conflict that may destroy half the people of the world, or the compulsion of living together in toleration, in goodwill, nd in soul-expanding qualities."

ditor, The Mennonite:

I guess my brain is plain dense, but I find it hard o understand why reactionary thinkers, who boldly ell us allegedly nonresistant Mennonites that we are ll wrong, should be in better standing in Mennonite ircles than more progressive thinkers who are preaching our nonresistant faith more effectively then we are oing it. It seems to be the fad among Mennonites to hrow mud at a number of leading Christian thinkers nd leaders who have for years been on the forefront f the peace cause. We refuse to cooperate with other peace organization because they think differently than e do! Thus we say, "We have been attending the meetings of this Consultative Peace Council in an observer capacity only (underscoring mine). It is helpful o keep informed on the activities of these groups who re working to promote peace, even though their approach is quite different from ours."

While we thus make fun of liberal peace workers, nd keep ourselves carefully aloof from them, institutions, groups, and leaders who deny the nonresistance e hold dear, enjoy great following among Mennonites. Take just one man, for example—and I select ne of the highest type—Reinhold Niebuhr. Says he, The nonresistant Christian is a parasite who lives on hose who do the dirty work required to bring a semblance of order out of our ever-present chaos." Yet he njoys no small following among Mennonite thinkers. ther peace organizations have an appraoch that is uite different from ours, forsooth! I presume Reinold is "right down our alley." Will some brilliant mind nlighten me?—G. S. Stoneback.

—Dr. E. G. Kaufman is to report on his summer's trip to Europe in the Student Union Room of Memorial Hall on September 15, 8 P. M.

Send Contributions to Conference Headquarters

Recently an appeal for funds for relief purposes appeared in our church papers. We have received a report covering the contributions from the various Mennonite bodies to the M.C.C. This indicates that individual contributors have been sending many gifts to the M. C. C. direct, rather than through the conference treasury. We are concerned that contributions are sent through the conference treasury, so that our conference reports may become more accurate. This procedure is also endorsed by the M. C. C., since this will lessen the work in the M. C. C. office. Individual contributors are therefore urged to send their gifts to the Conference Headquarters, 722 Main Street, Newton, Kansas.—The Emergency Relief Board, David C. Wedel, Financial Secretary.

His Radiance Transforms

John Knox in his latest book, "Christ the Lord," pays tribute to the early Church: "Among the most striking characteristics of the earliest Christian communities was their joy, their radiant sense of adequacy." But he also says regretfully: "Radiant is hardly the word (one) would think of to describe his own religious life or that of his contemporaries."

Why this lack of radiance?

Because we have not kept company with the radiant God! We have lived at a distance from the divine radiance. Inevitably there is no radiance in us. We are inert, unless his radio-activity makes us alive. We are dull, unless his brilliance has a chance at us. We are joyless apart from his joy.

Humanism and naturalism have devitalized the Church. In too many instances we have become ethical culture societies devoid of the dynamic which only God can impart. Or, we have been deists, for whom God was a distant object of worship rather than a present subject of intimate comradeship. Or we have been ritualists, whose pomp and precision have been a substitute for the Presence. Or we have been activists whose bustle has blinded us to the eternal beauty.

God is radiant. If we will take time to be with him, his radiance will touch and transform us. Once again the church will become a creative company of radiant souls.—Albert Edward Day in the "New Life" magazine.

"Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid which is Christ Jesus"

From the editor's point - of - view:

POWER TO LOVE is inseparably linked with humility. A woman, who was a sinner, came to Jesus, and "as her tears began to wet his feet, she wiped them with the hair of her head, pressed kisses on them, and anointed them with . . . perfume." However, the Pharisee, who was host to Jesus, had not offered him water for his feet, had not given Him a kiss, and had not anointed his head with oil. As a result Jesus pointed out this great truth, "to whom little is forgiven, the same loveth little." Thus according to Jesus the degree of penitence determines the degree to which one can love. Unless an individual confesses his sinfulnesses and is able to recognize distinct, specific expressions of it, he will not revere others very much. As he clearly senses his own unworthiness along with his worthiness, he learns to find his rightful place in human relationships. He finds others as important as himself. He comes to an appreciation of how much others forgive him and is moved thereby to forgive the shortcomings in others. Jesus suggests that insight into one's own sinfulness is a necessary first step towards love for God and man.

THE APPOINTMENT of a Presbyterian missionary for forty-one years' experience as ambassador to China is a very significant act. Rev. J. Leighton Stuart, new ambassador to China, has spent most of his life-time in China and for the greater part of that time was engaged in educational work. He became widely known as president of Yenching University. It is reported that "his personal acquaintanceship with China is best in that area now most disputed by the Nationalist and Communist forces." It is going to be very worthwhile to watch what this Christian government will have to suggest. Will his policies and acts be considerably different from those of other ambassadors who did not or do not have missionary backgrounds? Christians sometimes express themselves in such a way as to make one wonder what they would do if they came "into power." That makes one wonder just what kind of "power" is involved and how much power a former Christian missionary can exercise. Perhaps, the effectiveness of Mr. Stuart's Christianity will largely be determined by how much of an alternative to war he possesses.

RUSSIA'S conduct needs to be understood as well as known. To know what someone does is important. To know why he does it is still more important. A knowledge of the motives involved suggests a good deal about the necessary steps towards correction. Russia is hard to understand. It is a nation which has coerced and purged millions of its inhabitants. Consequently it seems significant when a close student of Russian history says: "Soviet leaders have waged the class war with weapons used by other peoples against national enemies in international war. To Communists war is war and enemies are enemies, whether the conflict is class war or international war and whether the foes are class enemies or national enemies. . . . Millions are killed in international war and millions have been killed or exiled to penal labor in Soviet Russia. The Bolshevik attitude toward these killings is substantially the same as national patriotism's attitude toward killing enemies in wartime, regrettable but necessary." This analysis suggests that Russia's government acts extreme self-defense because it feels itself severely jeopardized within and without. If this analysis is correct, then it would seem that such measures of goodwill as would help the Russian government to feel more secure, would also tend to make it less ruthless in its measures of self-defense.

CHRISTIAN RADIO may evert an increasing influence in the new India which is so rapidly developing. All-India Radio is reported to have an official plan for establishing "a community receiver set in each of the 700,000 villages of India, with about 130 new transmitting stations to send out programs." So far All-India Radio has not afforded the Christian Church more than "relatively little time on the air." India is in a time of change. The masses of people will undoubtedly be greatly affected by ideas in the coming years. If All-India Radio goes through with its plan of putting a community receiving set into every village, then millions of the people of India will be greatly influenced by what that radio brings. If the Christian message remains as meager as it has been, then that message will not stand a fair chance with all the rest that All-

The Ministry of the Communion Service

by Edmund J. Miller

Rev. Edmund J. Miller has served pastorates in the Alberta Community Church, Portland, Oregon, and he Menno Church, Lind, Washington. He is now Field Secretary of the Mennonite Biblical Seminary and Bi-le School, Chicago, Illinois.

The Lord's Supper is an ordinance instituted by Christ himself as the memorial of His death on the ross and, as such, should be observed with greatest everence. Its purpose is to present Christ the Saviour nd to make possible a quiet, sacred communion with Him. Observed rightly, this sacrament is a silent minister, proclaiming the facts of Christian faith and moving the worshipper to a deeper devotion and loyalty to is Lord.

Such a service needs prayerful preparation if it is to e effective and there are several things which must e considered in making it so.

THERE IS THE SETTING WITHIN THE HURCH. Here should be everything pertaining to hurch worship at its best. When Jesus sent forth vo of his disciples to make preparation for the Last upper He said, "a man bearing a pitcher of water . . . ill show you a large upper room furnished and pre-ared: there make ready for us." For a communion ervice to be effective and impressive it is necessary to ave a "room furnished and ready."

The communion table should be neatly covered and asy to uncover at the proper time. If there are to be owers they should be arranged before any of the worshippers arrive. Silence should prevail from the beginning to the very end of the service. Such a worshipful pirit can be created by having appropriate music ayed softly on the piano or organ while the people e arriving and finding their places. A service by candlelight on Thursday or Friday evening before Easter th attention drawn to a lighted cross or picture of hrist brings about a feeling of reverence and does way with the talking and whispering preceding the rvice. It would be well if a prayerful silence were served preceding every service in the House of God.

Expect much from this service, for when little is pected, little is achieved. When communicant members are allowed to treat this important service lightly, e result is disquieting and it has failed in its purpose.

THERE IS PREACHING. The sermon should be brief and to the point. It should have a direct bearing upon the sacrament itself. General themes, even though based on some scripture passage, are often out of place. The theme of the Cross is always fitting and is expected by devout Christians.

A distinguished judge said to his minister, "I come to the Communion service because I formed the habit as a young man, but I am greatly disappointed when I am not brought face to face with the fact of sin and the mercy of Christ on the cross." There is a wealth of material in the story of the passion of Jesus Christ, and sermons built around these crucial passages will add much to the meaning of the sacrament itself.

The minister cannot rightly prepare to lead his people in such acts of preparation and dedication without bringing his own life into complete harmony with Christ and his fellow men. He is about to stand in Christ's place. His hands are about to break the bread and raise the cup. He is about to speak Christ's words. How can he do this great service without purity of hand and heart? To impress the meaning of this serice on the hearts of his people, he himself must be deeply impressed by its meaning and worth.

THERE IS THE MUSIC. The hymns, special and instrumental selections should have the same care in their choice as the sermon topic. They should be familiar and a number of hymns may be repeated at each communion service so that a helpful association may be developed. The music should be so correlated with the rest of the service that it is an integral part of it, centering in the one great theme.

THERE ARE THE PRAYERS. The minister should prepare himself in his own way for this important part of the service. The prayers should not be too long but heartfelt and born out of deep conviction and close fellowship with his Lord. Great care should be exercised to make these prayers a part of the unified service, pointing the worshippers to the Christ who died on the cross to bring them salvation from sin and who wants contrite hearts and consecrated lives.

THERE IS THE DISTRIBUTION OF THE ELEMENTS. When the minister is assisted by the deacons, particular preparation is necessary that there be no confusion during this most important part of the service. They should study the order in use beforehand so that each may know his assigned place and duty. There should be a oneness in the coming forth of the deacons, in their return and in their sitting down. They must be sure of their business so that there will be no distractions.

In smaller churches where it is possible for the people to come forward care must be taken to avoid crowding and confusion. A deacon may stand at the end of a row to indicate those to participate at any given time, in this way governing the number. They should all go up to the front in one aisle and away in another so that the next participants may take their places without any congestion in the aisles. Another deacon may stand where he may receive the empty glasses as the people quietly return to their pews.

But whether the people come forward to the altar or remain in their pews, the manner of distribution should be so arranged that the Lord's Supper may be —a service of sacramental silence in which the still, small voice of God is heard, a time of self-examination, self-discipline, and personal committment.

By Cornelius Krahn

On the Second Coming of Christ. The original Mennonites shared beliefs on the second coming of Christ with other Protestant churches during the sixteenth century. An exception to this was a development that centered around Muenster where some radicals expected Christ on a certain date. Plain and simple are the statements on this issue in Mennonite catechisms and confessions of faith. During the last century some revisions and additions can be observed. This has resulted mainly from the influence of certain English and American Bible teachers. To make a dependable and objective study of this change would be a worthwhile undertaking.

In this connection, however, we would like to call attention to a book that has just come off the press. It is entitled Faith of our Fathers on Eschatology and is written and published by Ira D. Landis, Route 3, Lititz, Pa. (423 pages, $2.25). This book is the attempt of a Mennonite farmer and preacher to find for himself and others the answer to the questions when, why, and how the second coming of Christ is to be expected. People who want to acquaint themselves with the many views held in this matter, as well as to the conclusions drawn by the writer will find much information in this book. Such chapters as "The Scofield Reference Bible," Jesus is Coming" (by W. E. Blackstone) and others are quite illuminating. It should, however, be stated that the title is somewhat misleading. Only a fraction of the book deals with random quotations from the "faith of our fathers" on this subject. Perhaps the author used this phrase in the broadest sense of the word.

The Inception and Founding of the Mennonite Central Committee. In recent issues of Der Bote B. H. Unruh, the veteran European Mennonite representative of world-wide Mennonite relief, has been writing a series of articles concerning the trip of a Russian Mennonite "Studienkommission" that was delegated by Mennonites of Russia to the Mennonites of America to appeal for help for the suffering brethren. In these articles he relates the impressions which he gained during his trip to the Mennonite churches of America in 1920 and from the meetings and reports which led to the founding of the MCC. It took men with the vision and stature of Unruh to inspire an organization of such diverse Mennonite groups to the tremendous task of world-wide Christian service. Today we cannot imagine our Mennonite brotherhood at large without this significant organization.

Behind Barbed Wire. Even born optomists who shouted, "Peace, peace," after the last shot had been fired in Europe, realize more and more that the struggle is still going on even though the fronts and means of combat may have changed. Thousands of prisoners of war behind barbed wire in all European countries have as yet had no chance to experience the feeling that "peace" has come. Contrary to Geneva regulations, prisoners of war are being kept for slave labor purposes. That is true not only of Russia, France and England, but also of America even though we may have the feeling that we have sent them home.

In 1930 the writer of this column met, among the many visitors at the Mennonite World Conference, a young man named Hans Schnebele from South Germany. In 1943 the MCC requested Rev. J. M. Regier to visit a Mennonite prisoner of war at Camp Philips near Salina. Accompanying him, I was greatly surprised to meet in the guard house a man who greeted me with the words, "I met you in Danzig." Later Hans Schnebele located some relatives in this country with whom he was permitted to have little contact. Last Easter he was sent to Europe with the promise of being repatriated. He and many others were, however, sent from Belgium to England whence he is sending greetings to his relatives and friends in America. Another prisoner of war states, "Years behind barbed wire are not always easy." When will these barbed wire enclosures, a product of our illuminated age, be lifted? How can these people gain respect for democracy when they were promised a trip home and given new imprisonment in another country?

India Radio will bring. Therefore, the National Christian Council of India is planning to expand the Christian message over the air. It wants to make the fullest possible use of present opportunities and also increase them. If the Christian Church of India is to make its mark in the field of radio, then it will have to act unitedly and do so with enthusiasm. Christian radio in India may still be a vital influence if the Christians can work together as do the organs of a human body.

Introducing the Coming Junior Quarterly

Beginning with the winter quarter, the Junior Quarerly will be edited by Mrs. E. J. Miller, formerly of ,ind, Washington, and at present at home at 4614 Voodlawn Ave., Chicago, Illinois. Mrs. Miller has atended the New York Biblical Seminary and is at presnt continuing her studies at the Mennonite Biblical eminary in Chicago. She has been active in religious ducational work for the past ten years. The Board f Education feels quite fortunate in having secured Irs. Miller for this task. We wish to take this opportunity of presenting the coming quarterly to all teachers and pupils who will be using it in their Sunday Schools. An attractive Pupil's Workbook has been prepared which will vary a little from the one in use, in that the printed Bible portions will be divided into daily Bible readings with daily expressional work. We are presenting her own explanation as it appears in her Teacher's Handbook along with a portion of the first lesson in the Pupil's Workbook. It is our prayer that her efforts may prove helpful in winning the Junior for Christ.—Ronald von Riesen, Executive Secretary of the Board of Education.

Editor's Explanation from the Teacher's Handbook

WINNING THE JUNIOR FOR CHRIST

Someone has said that the Junior age is the great vangelistic opportunity of the church. Surely the aim f all our work with Juniors should be to win them to hrist.

You will find that this quarter's unit on Paul lends self naturally to an evangelistic emphasis. May God less you as you teach His Word and endeavor to lead our pupil's into a right relationship with Him through is Son, our Saviour, Jesus Christ.

AN EXPLANATION

As these lessons differ in procedure from the forer Junior quarterlies, we will give a brief explanation each point in the lesson plan.

The Aims: One of the aims is to gain factual nowledge of the life and writings of Paul. Other ms should tie up to the ultimate goal of transforming d guiding the lives of the children through contact ith Jesus Christ.

The Review: No lesson should stand alone. It should connected in the pupil's mind with what went bere and what follows after. Opportunity ought alays to be given for the asking of questions so that y misconceptions may be cleared up.

The Lesson Approach: The Bible stories should ben with an approach with which the children are miliar or which challenges their interest and atten on at the very start.

The Lesson Story: "Of all things a teacher should ow how to do, the most important is to be able to ll a story."—Hall. To tell a story well you must actice it and sometimes prepare it, for the one in e Teacher's Book may need adapting to your parcular situation and group. Know the story so thorghly that it becomes a real part of you. THE SERET OF SUCCESSFUL TEACHING IS WORK. A od teacher never relies on her general knowledge r takes a chance on knowing it well enough from ving taught something similar before.

The stories in your book are not in the pupil's book so they are usually new and interesting material to them. Always refer to the pupil's work book when you are preparing your lesson to learn what points have been emphasized in their study.

The Discussion: Sometimes the discussion is carried on during the presentation of the story. At other times it may follow. Be elastic in our procedure. Meet the needs of your own group. Encourage an exchange of thought and try to use the children's own ideas. Get them to think for themselves and express what they think. Their work books are designed to do this very thing.

The Prayer Period: The prayers of the children should be the natural outcome of the story. Through these prayers the teacher may discover how well individuals have grasped the lesson truths as applied to their own lives. In her brief closing prayer the teacher may sum up the important truths or mention those that have not been grasped clearly by the group.

The Verse to Remember: Suggestions for making this meaningful are given in each lesson of the Teacher's Book.

The Activity: Juniors are very active. They like to DO things. Suggestions for class activities and handwork are given with the lessons. Activity should always be PURPOSEFUL. By that we mean that it should tie up with the lesson and serve to impress the lesson truths or the memory work on the minds of the children. I would suggest as a class project for the quarter the making of a large picture map showing the most important events in Paul's life. See the back of this book for picture ideas.

Visual Aids: Do not hesitate to use visual aids. Pictures, objects, blackboard illustrations, flannelgraph and picture boards are powerful teaching forces.

THE PUPIL'S BOOK (MY BOOK ABOUT PAUL AND HIS WRITINGS

Instead of the Bible portion being printed in full at the beginning of each lesson it is divided into daily Bible readings. The purpose of this is four-fold:

A Boy of Tarsus

LESSON 1

A VERSE TO REMEMBER: Hear, O Israel, the Lord our God is one Lord: and thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, with all thy soul, and with all thy might. Deuteronomy 6:4-5.

MY DAILY BIBLE READING

Monday — Acts 21:29.
Paul tells us he is a ——— born in the city of ————— in the province of ————————. This was the principal city of the province. It was rich, idolatrous and the seat of a renowned university. Locate it on the map in the back of this book.

Tuesday — Acts 22:3.
Though Paul was born in Tarsus he was educated in ————————— at the feet of the great teacher ————————. You will have to go back to the twenty-first chapter to find the name of the city in which Paul received his higher education. Locate it on the map.

Wednesday — Acts 22:27.
Paul was a Jew, brought up and educated in the Jewish way, but he was also a ————— citizen. When he learned this the chief captain was afraid because he knew it was against the law to bind such a citizen without trial and that scourging one was absolutely forbidden. As you study Paul's life observe how often his Roman citizenship helped him.

Thursday — Acts 22:28.
Paul was born a free Roman citizen. Not so the chief captain. He had to ——— his citizenship for a large sum of money. If a person

1. That the child may get the lesson material direct from its source, the Bible.
2. To give the child practice in the use of the Bible.
3. To encourage daily Bible reading. (It is extremely important to establish right habits while childre are young.)
4. To give an opportunity for short explanations ar applications to make the Scripture passages mo meaningful.

The pupil's quarterly becomes a work-book which enables him to LEARN BY DOING, one of the primary principles of pedagogy. It also encourages him to think for himself.

The Bible readings are to be done in preparation for the class period, the remainder to be completed usually as an outcome of the class discussion. The pupil should keep up his work-book even though absent from Sunday School. A star is given for the completion of each portion. The pupil should be shown the importance of DAILY Bible reading and discouraged from trying to complete his week's work at one sitting.

In the front of the pupil's book is a shield with thirteen stars. This is for his attendance record, a star for each Sunday he is present.

A Glance at City Missions

by Willard W. Wiebe

For some years I had noticed items in The Mennonite telling of our Mennonite Bible Mission in Chicago. Such bits of news, and once in awhile a picture, barely attracted my attention. Having had no contact with its workers, and little appreciation of its work, the city mission work of our conference remained far on the periphery of my interests. Then I attended our seminary in Chicago, and an opportunity to become acquainted with this work presented itself. Hence, as one who has been freshly initiated into this work, I offer my impressions for what they are worth.

As I see it there are three different types of city missions. These three types vary in their emphasis of work due to their dissimilar environments. The mission located in the downtown slum area caters to a transcient populace and aims primarily at evangelism. The mission which is found in a residential slum area seeks to fulfill a dual program of both evangelism and relief. The third type of city mission is found in an area of better residences, more of the middle class type. This area may be either unchurched or else is lacking in a Protestant testimony. Such a mission comes nearer to being a "church," appealing to regular church goers, and is often organized as such.

Most of our people conceive our city missions to be exclusively of the first type, i.e., pure evangelism in a downtown slum area and ministering to the "down and out" drunkard. However, I believe that our Chicago mission began as the second and slowly shifted to the third type as its surrounding community changed. At any rate it is now an organized church appealing to a regularly attending public but with its unique emphasis still being evangelistic.

Come with me to the mission. We are in an apartment house area, which is so familiar in Chicago, and are nearly six miles south and west of the downtown "Loop" district. We notice a large high school near the mission and a large grade school just across the street. Next to the parsonage, where Rev. Neufeld and his family live, is the mission building itself. It is a two-story, white, frame structure with a bit of a colonial front. Its well kept condition invites us, and once inside, the neat little chapel makes us feel at home. There is no basement. The lower floor has a few Sunday School rooms while the second floor is occupied by Mrs. Wiens and a daughter. (Mrs. Wiens passed away in June.) Rev. Wiens was the first laborer at the mission and has since gone to his reward. We are surprised to see so many children. (The Sunday School attendance might be around sixty-five or seventy this morning.) The few adults are very friendly, and we immediately feel that we could have met them in almost any of our churches. Yet, I say, there is a difference in city mission and rural church work.

We find the services of such a mission to be not unlike those in our home churches. They have the regular Sunday morning worship, Sunday School, young people's program, evening service and Wednesday night prayer service. There is also the ladies mission organization, the week-day church school for the children, and a fine girl's choir.

However, I repeat that there is a difference between city mission and rural church work. To those who have had no first-hand contact with life as it is in our larger cities it is difficult to convey an appreciation for and an understanding of city mission work. Since we are, as a whole, a rural people, we are also, as a whole, far removed from our conference sponsored city missions. The distance is not only in miles but also in a lack of understanding. But what makes such a program different from a rural set-up? Let us enumerate a few of the problems that confront the city mission worker.

First, there is what we would perhaps call the environmental limitations of urban life. Let us look at a class of Junior age boys. They are good, healthly, live-wire boys. Yet, as we work with them we find that we have to revamp our whole concept of how boys think and act and how they should be taught. There is Steve (a fictitious name) for example. Steve is ten years old and has a little brother who comes to church with his hands and face as dirty as Steve's. They tell me that Steve has been expelled from the public schools, although now is reinstated, and is a "problem child" there. His father's character is questionable. His mother is not living. An aunt, who is partially paralyzed, keeps house for the family. We further find that Steve gets what most country boys would consider to be a sizable allowance. What he doesn't spend for shows, and he seems to be saturated with them, he wastes on an unquenchable appetite for candy. There is little, if any, restriction placed on him. In spite of such a background Steve attends church and Sunday School regularly. We find that his Sunday School attendance record is perfect. His conduct in church is negative and very disturbing to say the least. He rebels at sitting still, at listening to the sermon, at participating in the Sunday School class, etc. Yet his attendance surprises us. He seems to come to church in spite of himself. It is not my purpose here to analyze Steve's personality problems and to suggest a solution to his basic needs, I merely place him before you as a concrete problem of the environmental limitations under which the city mission works.

Willard W. Wiebe graduated from Bethel College in 1945. The next year he attended Mennonite Biblical Seminary in Chicago. While attending seminary, he served in the mission which he here describes. During the past summer he served as pastor of the First Church, Beatrice Nebraska. Now he is again attending the Mennonite Bibilical Seminary.

Second, there is the problem of family disunity. This is really also a part of the environmental limitations, but I place it before you separately. You will find that on Sunday morning the little chapel is crowded with children. A few adults are always there but surely all of these children don't belong to the handful of parents present. Where are the other parents? Oh, they wanted a nice quiet morning at home, so they sent their children to Sunday School while they "slept in." This is just one phase of the problem of family disunity by our city missions. Experience has proved that the motto "Win the children and thereby win the parents" does not always hold true. The parents will often gladly let (not "bring" or even "send") the children come to Sunday School. The indifference of the parent is one of the greatest obstacles in eventually winning the child.

A third problem to be mentioned is that of the shifting city populace. It is possible for a city mission to begin a residential area of "whites" and later find itself in the center of a "black belt". No, the mission didn't move, but the populace did. Or even if it should remain in a fairly stable white zone a flux of populace is still likely. It is not impossible for the mission to build up a strong fellowship of true Christians and a successful church program around this fellowship, and then after a few years the families will move to a different section of the city and the mission begins all over again. I dare say that if all those who have been won to Christ and who have shown an active interest in church work at our Chicago mission during the last twenty years, I say, if all such could be gathered into one congregation, such a church would be of no mean size and would supply our conference with a considerable amount of leadership.

The enigma of a shifting populace to a fourth problem faced by our city missions and this is the problem of discouraging results. This is a real problem and must be overcome before the mission worker has labored for very long or else he will be overcome by it. Seeing one's work melt and disappear right out from under him is a test that not all people can endure. It is a bit like the experience of the little girl who tried to scoop all the water out of a hole she had made in the beach. The limitless ocean kept seeping back into the hole.

These are a few of the frustrations faced by city mission workers. I would like to say here that Rev. John T. Neufeld and family, who have for some years labored in our Chicago mission, have accepted every one of these problems as a challenge and by the grace of God have through the years been able to see some of the fruit of their labors. Although, as expressed before, the work in urban areas differs from rural work; yet a rural visitor to our Mennonite Bible Mission in Chicago will feel a kindred spirit. He will not feel that he is amongst strangers. He will sense that these people who have come to attend regularly our mission there, even though they differ, are fundamentally good Christian people, in full sympathy with our

No Room For Hate

Eileen B. Beath, in the "Presbyterian Survey" shared this episode with her readers: "During the first year of the Chinese-Japanese war, a boy of nine years, Chin Chen, was starting for bed when he said to his mother, "Shall I pray for the Chinese soldiers tonight?" His mother thought for a moment and then replied, "No Chi, pray for the little Japanese children whose fathers are fighting and dying in China tonight."

"Many, many times I have heard Chinese Christians praying for the Japanese. Hate has never had a place in their hearts. If Christianity can do this for individuals, can it not do it for nations?"—Dr. Maenna Cheserton-Mangle

THE HUNGRY ARE FILLED

"He hath filled the hungry with good things; and the rich he hath sent empty away." Luke 1:53. Great many people attend church, Sunday school, and prayer meetings, etc. There blessings abound and yet they go away empty. Is it the fault of the preachers or teachers? No. It is their own fault. They are not hungry for the Word of God. In certain diseases people have no appetite even though they have an abundance to eat, and so they get weaker and weaker and finally die. So is it with many of us. God spreads full tables in front of us, but we go away empty because there is no appetite. So let us pray constantly that God will make us hungry for Himself. "Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness for they shall be filled."—(The foregoing meditation is by Dr. Mrs. Samuel of Jagdeeshpur mission station in India. Mrs. Samuel is a great help in the work for she does surgery.)

Internment in Weihsien

By Marie J. Regier

(In "Internment at Weihsien" Miss Marie J. Regier gives a vivid account of life in an internment camp. Not only does Miss Regier paint pictures to look upon, but she also paints word pictures which help one to visualize the various aspects of life in a crowded internment camp. Her account, written while interned, has the sharpness of experience just realized. It reveals an observer very much alive. Miss Regier was serving as missionary in China when war broke out between the United States and Japan. She was interned at Weihsien. Since her release she has remained in China. The Foreign Mission Board has asked her and Miss Elizabeth Goertz to come home for a rest before continuing with the work.—Editor)

FIRST IMPRESSIONS

The last few months at the station were rather hard. Not only was our food inadequate, but we hardly dared eat what we did have when we saw all the people around us who were so much worse off than we. So coming to Weihsien was really a relief. And Weihsien camp was really quite beautiful. There were many trees there, and the internees had been busy cleaning up swamps and making flower gardens out of them. We arrived in camp early one beautiful June morning. I was impressed with mornings at Weihsien, and I expressed my feelings at that time in the following paragraphs:

God is walking in the cool of the morning. The air is trembling with a sharp ecstasy. Sisters are chanting His praise in two-point melody. The Fathers, slowly walking down the path, are listening for His voice in silent meditation.

Figures draped in dressing gowns, hair sleepily tumbling over their foreheads, are crossing the courts. They are drowsily aware of His presence.

From the bakery come warm fumes of newly baked bread. The bakers have started early to feed His children. Even the cows, big patches of black and white, meandering down the center path, are bringing udders full of milk to quench the thirst of His babies.

A year later I described again a morning scene at Weihsien, and this is what I wrote:

It is still quite early, the air prickly with invigoration, the sun just taking off over the horizon as we hurry across the stage at Weihsien to form links in the water queue. In one corner of the camp we pass the playground of the Kindergarten, and a girls' team is playing baseball with the aid of two young men. Diagonally across the alley a larger group of girls is becoming acquainted with the intricacies of shorthand. In yet another part of the compound a men's class is doing calisthenics under the direction of a sixty-year-old youth. As we pass some trees we notice an older man explaining the call of birds to an eager group of young people.

But above all, our eyes wander over innumerable small stoves of diverse shapes and sizes. In front of each stove squats a man, woman, or child, armed with a canteen—bought palm leaf fan, frantically fanning coal bricks into a flame. On one to the right, more solid because it is built of brick, a Catholic Father in shorts is frying bacon and eggs, (bacon from the few intact parcels which arrived in a lot of two hundred last Saturday afternoon). To the left a C. I. M. lady is cooking coffee in a pot created out of a powdered milk tin and some soddering "scrounged" from the tin shop. A mother is stirring millet for her youngster in a green pan on red, biscuit-tin stove. The manager of the Kailan Ming Administration is filling up his milk-tin stove with chips of coal salvaged from the ash pile. On the hospital balcony an energetic Dutch lady is frisking about her "Kachelche," the smoke pouring forth from its thermos bottle stove pipe.

Just then the roll call bell rings. The water queue disperses in a moment and everyone rushes to his lodging place where conscientious wardens are dragging for their inmates by means of a whistle or an "all out" call.

Weihsien Camp was one of the best camps, probably the best camp in China. We were fortunate in the place which the Japanese had chosen for us, in the group that was in charge of us, namely the Consular Police instead of the Military group, and finally because the internees on the whole were a very cooperative group.

Weihsien Folk:

Men: Millionaires, beggars, doctors, bishops, lawyers, merchants, bronzed muscular Weihsien men. Torsos exposed to wind and sun burden bearers—not afraid of grime or sweat.

Women: young women, old women, ugly women, beautiful women, fat women, skinny women, clumsy women, graceful women. Spinsters with long skirts and cotton stockings, dashing coquettes with scarlet lips and super abbreviated shorts, sedate missionaries and gracious society hostesses, women with coarse red hands and women with long pointed finger nails. The camp levels them all. In cotton frocks, trousers and shorts they peal vegetables and scrub lavatory floors. All unite in labor for the common good.

Young people: Irresponsible young folk aimlessly dashing hither and yon, lanky adolescent lovers chatting volubly and convulsing with laughter about nothing at all. Serious young folk accepting responsibility, valiantly living up to boy and girl scout codes. Adventurous young folk joyfully stretching out their arms to the tantalizing call of an unknown future.

Children: Healthy, husky hilarious children, romping, rowdy, rosy children. Their playgrounds are everywhere, but primarily they seem to be where they annoy adults most. The supreme adventure of the day is to leap and shout in circles about the homecoming cows, with an additional pound of enthusiasm for the bull when he comes. Teasing to be carried in food crates, chasing after mule carts and stealing rides, falling into cesspools, writing naughty rhymes on brick walls, shouting Sunday School songs on Sunday morning, listening in enraptured silence to enchanting fairy tales, they remain the unsolved problem of their elders.

Tiny little tots: Angelic little tots trying mother's patience to the breaking point; individualistic, orthodox little tots, pouting to be petted, toddling along the road with their teacher, all holding on to a rope and saying "choo choo train." Drowsy little tots, limply tumbling into bed at night. Lively little tots gayly popping out at early morn.

Old people: Weary old people tottering towards the grave. Life's spark has grown dim. There's nothing left to live for. Pitiful old people—feverishly trying to gild age with youth's glamour. Beautiful old people undisturbed by thinning gray hair and frailty of body. Their eyes glow with the fire of eternal youth which burns within.

WEIHSIEN KITCHENS

At first there were eighteen hundred internees. These were fed in three different kitchens. Meals became quite monotonous at times, but there were a few outstanding meals. At the first Christmas dinner we had roast pork, mashed potatoes, apple sauce, and Christmas pudding, and more fruit cake and apples and oranges for supper. In contrast I also remember Easter breakfast of the next year, which consisted of a thickish soup of little green peas. The different kitchens had their difficulties at times. There was for instance one COLD morning in kitchen III.

The housekeeper, standing in the pantry door, surveyed her premises with a sigh. That the meal captain and her squad were brisky trotting back and forth as they cleared away the remains of breakfast —tin salt cans, paper pepper shakers, and wooden bread trays—was inevitable. But that the laundresses should also have chosen the pantry as their stamping ground left a rather large question mark in her mind. Still that was only the beginning of troubles.

In the adjoining boiler room (Weihsien fashion) four men were constructing a new kettle, while an accompanying cloud of brick dust, released plaster and dirt, on general principles, floated blithely into the pantry.

From the pantry door the Yencing professor of philosophy was hanging up a rope (it being too cold to hang the laundry outside), stretching it crosswise from pillar to post in the dining room. The Yencing history professor proceded to rinse and hang up the laundered clothes.

Two men were sweeping the floor. At the table to the right, the Anglican Bishop was mending a toaster. The vegetable squad was piling vegetables to be cleaned and prepared onto tables at the end of the room. Just then the noodle makers came in and spread out the noodles to dry on two more tables.

At this junction the breakfast squad, having completed its duties, was replaced by the cleaning squad, which valiantly attempted scrubbing the few remaining tables. No sooner had they finished the first one when the Bread cutters arrived in search of a clean table on which to slice the bread for the noon meal.

Meanwhile the time had arrived for the 10:30 water issue and people were crowding in through the outer door to have their thermos flasks filled.

The house-keeper mopped her brow. It wasn't Alice in Wonderland that she was reading, nor was she having a nightmare, it was merely a cold wet day in Weihsien with a few extra inconveniences.

The most exciting time was undoubtedly when the B-29's dropped food parcels right into the kitchen yards, one even striking the roof and knocking a big hole into it.

THE CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIP

The Christian Community in Weihsien was unusually large. Especially was this true at the beginning when there was a large group of Catholic Fathers and Sisters. After a few months they were moved to Peking upon a request by the Pope to the Japanese government. But there still remained a large Protestant Community, mostly professional Christians, that is ministers and missionaries.

There was a large variety of denominations represented. There were large groups of Anglicans, China Inland Mission, London Mission Society, Salvation Army, and smaller groups of Congregationalists, Methodists, Presbyterians, both English and American. Then there was a sprinkling of Quakers, Brethren, Mennonites and there were some Assembly of God people. There was also a great variety of thought represented. There were those who were strongly fundamentalistic and there were those who were very liberal minded. There were very strict Anglican churchmen and very informal Congregationalists and Quakers. But still we all called ourselves Christian. Here we were all thrown together into a place so small you could walk around its walls within an hour. It was a challenge. Could we demonstrate to the rest of the camp that everyone should know we were children of God because we loved one another? It took courage and it took time. It took patience and a will to understand and to bear with each other. But after about three or four months there emerged the Christian Fellowship, a group that could unite in worshipping the one Lord and Master Jesus Christ.

The way for the leaders was not easy. The Anglicans still had their own services. The Oriental Mission Society had a special service, the Salvation Army had its regular meeting on Thursday. There was a Fellowship Prayer meeting on Tuesday, but an Evangelistic Band was formed which had a meeting on Saturday. There was another prayer meeting on Friday. There were Bible classes led by men who differ very widely in their interpretation of the scriptures. There were little private prayer meetings. There was one, a group of Pacifists, better say Christians who were praying especially for peace in the world. The chairman of the Fellowship was always beset with various groups clamoring for time and place where to hold their special meetings. At the same time he was trying to work for the larger unity. Did he succeed? Did the group succeed? To a certain extent, certainly. While there were these different group meetings, still the majority worked with the group as a whole and attended the fellowship services. And the group as a whole tried to yield to the smaller groups in as far as it could. The Evening Song service was turned over to the Evangelistic Band to supply the evangelistic note which they felt was lacking. There were many, surely, who realized that even though the methods of the next person were different from his own, that parts of his creed were different, that he expressed himself differently, that nevertheless he shared with him the same experience of the God as He has revealed Himself through Jesus Christ.

THE WOMEN'S AUXILIARY

The Women's Auxiliary consisted of the women members of the Christian Fellowship. It was quite active and really fulfilled a mission in the camp. t tried to find definite needs and then tried to supply hese. The Sewing Bee met every other Monday where busy mothers had a chance to get some help on the week's mending. The other Mondays there was a program in the evening. There were a few devotional programs, a few musical programs, and once in a while there was a social evening or a secular program. Then there was the service committee. It saw to it that food was carried to sick people and their washing done. Some of the people also had their large pieces washed by members of the Women's Auxiliary. Sometimes there was a room to "debug." In this latter job, an unofficial men's auxilary all of a sudden sprung into being, was very helpful.

THE ESCAPE

"What do they think of the escape down your way?" Miss W. of the C.I.M. asked me at lunch.

"What escape?" I asked puzzled.

Why, Tipton and Hummel have escaped."

"They have? And I living in the same building with Hummel know nothing about it."

On the way home I met Bobby G. "Isn't it exciting? he asked, "I certainly admire the courage of those men. It is too bad they did not do it sooner. Now we'll all be out soon."

"They tried it two months ago." Someone in the queue informed us, "but it didn't pan out."

"I think it's awful," my roomate said, "just think of what suffering it may bring upon the rest of us, it may even cost the chief of police his head."

"I am thrilled," says Miss H. of the Salvation Army at supper time. "It is the most bracing thing that has happened to us. Every time I look out of my window to-day, I see those men crossing the fields."

"You are corroborating just what I said," I laughed; "I think the thrill of it makes people oblivious to the danger it involves for us."

"We don't care about that," says Miss C. another Salvationist, "but I am glad that neither of them are missionaries, so the Christian Chinese won't have to suffer because of their escape."

"Don't you think it thrilling?" Miss H. of the salvation Army says to Miss H. of the Y.W.C.A.

"I only wish I were with them." Is the retort of the latter.

"You know it had all been arranged. A Chunking man was to meet them and travel with them," Miss W. of the London Mission explains, "Chunking wants to know about the conditions of this camp."

"Oh yes," says Miss H., "And they had men on guard at two different hours of the night, so that if connections did not work out they could help them come back."

"It's a good thing they were one a British and one American," says Miss C. "No one nationality can blame the other."

"Now I can look each guard straight in the face with no feeling of inferiority," Miss H. chimes in again.

"Even if you have to give him right of way," I add. "According to the last regulations we were supposed to do that."

"Yes," Miss W. says, "And have you read the papers, the news of the invasions are so good too."

She leaves to have her dishes washed, but soon comes back with more news, "Have you heard that the roommates of the two men are all locked up in the church for three days?"

That meant no entertainment this weekend and no church services on Sunday.

Reverberations, more or less emphatically continued for a while. Roll call was to be very strict and any one out after ten o'clock was subject to arrest.

The next morning for breakfast we had unsweetened porridge. One man said it was because Mr. Tipton, the cook had run off with the sugar. The men had taken some private sugar along. During roll call the poor warden of one of the dormitories had to report daily. "One man over the wall, and two in prison." He would have to repeat that until the list had been reorganized, and it might take the Japanese a long time before they would get around to doing that.

The children too were deeply interested. Three little girls with arms around each other's neck were talking earnestly, "I am sorry about Mr. Hummel," said one, "Yes, and Mr. Tipton was such a good cook."

At first the Japanese were so nonplussed that they hardly knew what to do; the Chief of Police was quite unable to ask any questions, but eventually they expressed themselves. About two days after the escape, all the roomers on the second story of the hospital where one of the men had lived were ordered to move to a building farther away from the wall. That building was now occupied by the China Inland Mission school children. No reasoning on the part of the medical staff and the educational staff had any effect. We were so near to the wall, and we were giving signals was the answer. So we moved, but we usually managed to get a little bit ahead of our captors. They told us sternly that by four o'clock of a certain day the whole move was supposed to have been completed. We completed it by eleven o'clock. But the organization which made that move possible was marvelous. The whole camp was organized into labor force. Up on one side, down on the other of the long stairs up to the hospital the men climbed; like ants they looked. At the bottom of the stairs the lines parted into one-way traffic, one going, the other coming. Old men whose strength was insufficient to carry things acted as policemen. As soon as a room was vacated a woman's squad came in and swept the rooms before the next roomer moved in.

Nine days after the escape a second roll call was organized. Before, we had only one in the morning lasting from ten to fifteen minutes. Now we had to arrange ourselves in large groups in about three or four different places. Everyone had to come out, no cooks were excused, and only one doctor and one nurse permitted to remain on duty. The first day the roll call took an hour and a half. The next day all were prepared with stools, benches, rugs, books, and knitting. We were a very docile group. The librarian said that as the result of the long roll call four hundred books had been checked out in one day, more than ever before.

At the same time the men in prison were released. The first days they said were torture. They were not supposed to talk to each other, they dared not lie down during the day, nor eat between meals. It depended upon the guards, however as to how strictly these rules were observed. One of the men were questioned repeatedly by a Japanese armed with a Japanese-English dictionary.

"Why did you not notify us as soon as Mr. Hummel was gone?"

"But I didn't know he was gone. He told me he was on duty in the kitchen."

"Your conduct—(the guard searched his dictionary frantically) your conduct is atrocious."

The version of the Japanese newspaper of this occurrence we heard as follows: 'Nine men escaped, the police succeeded in capturing all but two."

We heard no more about the two men, though there were rumors that they had reached Chungking. After the war was over and the American service men came in, two weary travelers, dressed in Chinese clothes arrived one noon. We hardly recognized them. We learned then that they had never been farther than fifty miles away and it was now more than a year later when they returned. They had been instrumental in getting medical supplies to the camp as well as other things. The risks which people outside of the camp, not only these two, but others had taken to get us needed supplies was really touching. The Swiss representative practically took his life in his hands several times in order to get things through. At Christmas one year two young men, former Peking residents, tried to get Christmas parcels to us. They flew in a plane and got within twenty miles of the camp when their plane was shot down. They dropped the parcels on to some Chinese villages, hoping that from there they might reach us, though in vain. They saved their lives but it took them two months to cover the distance by foot, which it had taken them a couple of hours by plane.

The escape of Tipton and Hummel and all its consequences was one of the outstanding experiences of the camp. There was probably nothing as exciting until the coming of good-will-mission-parachutists.

LIFE AND DEATH

Internment in camp did not hinder life from going on its usual way; there was courtship and marriage, birth and death. The number of births just about equalled the number of deaths. The aged died as we would expect them to, but also the middleaged and even some of the young—also as it happens outside of camp.

Let me mention some of the outstanding ones There was old Captain Parker. I always supposed him to be an old sea captain. He was in the hospital a long time. I saw him each morning when I went to work there. He seemed rather lovable with a sense of humor but also very independent and almost pugnacious. One time I heard a doctor say to him, "You can't put tha over on me. I saw you do it." Another time he had been refusing to take some medicine, but when h eventually did give in he evidently discovered the good effects, and all to himself he said, without any nurs or doctor around, "Thank you—thank you Dr. Grice." when I went to wish him a happy Easter, bein dressed up more than usual, he remarked how nice looked, though his was nearing ninety. One morning he was having difficulty lacing his shoes. A young woman was doing some cleaning near by. "Well, now," he drawled, "if I were a young lady and a perfectly nice old gentleman—" "Oh," she turned quickly, "can I help you?" One day he was walking on the arm of the orderly to get his daily sunning. "Here comes the bride," he sang as they were going down the hall. And then one day he slipped away. What was my surprise when I heard at the funeral that he was one of the pioneer missionaries of the London Mission, but had been retired for the last twenty years. He was the oldest of three, all brothers, all of whom had been missionaries. His title of captain he had received here in China during the last war when he had been put in charge of a division in this country. When he came to camp he had said that he did not expect to leave it anymore. He was going to see Jesus and his wife and little son who had died many years ago.

Captain Parker died in June. A few months later, in August, 1944, another senior missionary passed away, Dr. Hayes. He was president of the Tenghsien Seminary for many years. Some of our young people attended there. They used to come back with stories of his insistance on hard work. I became acquainted with him first when he was a patient in the hospital. He was having trouble with boils, but he had a very active mind although he was nearing ninety. He wanted to study something, and so he continued his German studies, with which I helped him once or twice a week. He was always anxious to know whether people would understand what he was saying even though his sentence structure might be incorrect. After he left the hospital he continued doing odd jobs around the house. One time I found him grinding peanut butter. "Isn't that rather hard," I asked? "No," he said, "my left arm is weak and my right leg, but my right arm is still strong." The next day he led a prayer meeting in the hospital and afterwards came to our room just to tell me that if you put the peanuts into the grinder one by one, it wasn't difficult. Having delivered his message he got up and left quite oblivious to the fact that his son was engaged in a conversation with my roommate.

Another time he was just mopping the floor when I came. He had tied a big handkerchief to his cane, then he sat down on the bed and washed the floor opposite, then got up and sat down on the trunk along the opposite wall and washed the floor under the bed. Later I noticed the food container on the floor near the door. "Is that your dinner," I asked? "No," he said, "I just put it on the floor so that John can reach it without stepping on my clean floor." "I am just a boy of eight to him," John said, though he is a man past fifty. Old Dr. Hayes, too, was buried at Weihsien.

It was in March of the last year that we were in camp that Eric Liddel died, one of the finest missionar-es and one of the most beloved people in camp. The young people all called him "Uncle Eric." He was just n the prime of life. Back in Canada he had a young wife and three children, the youngest of whom he had never seen. And yet he had to go, an inoperable tumor of the brain caused his death. The camp had often sorrowed with the bereaved when someone died, but this time it seemed as though the camp had become bereft. The camp itself was grief stricken. "He was an athlete of world fame," the preacher said at the funeral, "but these honors rested lightly on his sohulders." "He was a man of iron convictions, but of a most winning personality." His fellow athlete spoke of his athletic career He said, I have never seen him lose his temper or do anything unsportmanlike." He never stooped to the level of those who would do him ill, but he raised them to his own level." At the time when he received the Olympic championship the games were postponed from Sunday until Monday because it was against Eric Liddel's conviction to take part in the races on Sunday. At the grave we repeated together the beatitudes, his favorite passage. There is something victorious about a death like that.

Almost at the very end of camp another young people's leader died, Mrs. Lawless, the favorite of the girl guides. She had barely passed middle age and had always seemed so strong and vigorous. She was the first one to be buried outside the camp because the little cemetery inside could hold no more. She was buried among trees against the sunset sky in a quiet little spot. "She would have loved this," her husband said sadly.

In all there were some twenty people who died in camp. Only two of these were young people, two young men, the one not more than a child only sixteen. His mother, brothers and sisters were in camp with him; his father was in western China. His mother was looking forward to the time when her husband would see his son again, who had become as tall as his father, but one day at roll call, in play he grabbed loose electric wire and was instantly killed. The other young man fell from a tree, just about a year later, when he tried to get some firewood. He died within a few hours. This was on Tuesday; on Sunday he had made a new decision to follow Christ. He had made a start the year before but had slid back. A woman, who did not seem exceptionally religious her self, remarked, Now he will never slide back again."

RED CROSS PARCELS

Sorrow changes off with joy and vice versa so often. The week after the young boy had been electrocuted the first lot of American Red Cross parcels arrived in camp.

They had been on the way a long time. As soon as they were released the news spread like wild fire, and in a moment a long queue had formed. I never like queues, but this one was different. People who brought along their books were unable to read; people with knitting made no progress. British people stood in line for Amercans; English men helped Americans carry their parcels. Everyone was happy—well no, there always are some grumblers. But on the whole there was a good spirit. The next day picnics started; those who had received sharing with those who had not.

This was in August. In January another lot came, much larger than the first; so we were sure that this time the parcels were meant not only for us, but for the whole camp. That is most of us felt that way, but there were a few of whom we were ashamed. They were afraid that we Americans would not get our share. So there was a period of wild rumors as to how the parcels were supposed to be divided; there were appeals to the Japanese to give us definite instructions; there was even some callng of bad names, unfortunately. Someone sad, "If a few parcels cause us so much trouble, what can we exepct from a United Nations conference? Finally, however everyone received a parcel, every man, woman, and child. (A few babies were born too late!) and there really was much rejoicing. One man came home with his parcel singing, "God bless America." It was most delightful to think that everyone else had received exactly the same and could enjoy the same things which we could. I suppose that has hardly ever happened in one community. It was also very interesting to be on the receiving end of the Red Cross. Until now we had always been on the giving side. Red Cross is going to have a different connotation for us after this. We appreciated everything of course, but especially the milk, the butter, the cheese, and the coffee, and the smoker the cigarettes.

But not only the food—the clothes and shoes which the Red Cross sent and the medical supplies were highly appreciated.

CHRISTMAS IN CAMP

Twice we spent Christmas in camp. The first Christmas was a jolly one. The bizarre situation somehow spurred people on to do their best, to work up a real Christmas spirit. The Salvation Army band, a group of singers, went out caroling. The whole youth of Weihsien, from little tots to adolescents, took part in a nativity play directed by a Catholic Sister. The Women's Auxiliary presented a program of "Christ in Many Lands." There were many private Christmas parties, but the hosts did not have to add much to what the kitchens were providing; roast pork, mashed potatoes, apple sauce, plum pudding, and apples, oranges, and fruitcake for supper. On Christmas Eve we attended the Catholic Midnight Mass. There is something about the beauty and dignity of this service which no Protestant service seems to offer. Then there were children's parties.

The second year it was much more difficult to arouse people's enthusiasm, although much the same program was followed as the year before. Only parents could not give in to a feeling of depression; they still had to make Christmas a happy one for their children. The ingenuity of some of the parents in creating Christmas presents was really remarkable. Children came out on new stilts, with dolls made out of bits of rag, toy dishes, and stoves made out of Red Cross tins, and trains out of left over wood.

The children were happy. As a matter of fact, the Weihsien camp was a very enjoyable place for children. They could romp around with very few restrictions. They had many playmates. Many of them were too small to remember anything else.

DAIRY OF THE LAST MONTHS

July 3: People complain that it's a complete waste of time to be in an internment camp, that we are harassed-looking because of the strain of the camp, that our tempers are stretched to the breaking point because of our relations in camp. Outside, people have to seek for various causes to explain their complaints. Here it's much more simple. All are agreed that the sole, all-embracing cause of all ills of all internees is "The Camp." How we shall miss this integrating cause when camp life is over!

July 4: All nationalities in camp unite in the celebration of the American fourth. Special permission is obtained to have the lights on later than usual. So, of course, it rains and spoils the outdoor program.

July 5: The newly elected Executive Committee of the Women's Auxiliary puts on its first program, a lecture on Chinese street calls supplemented by Chinese music.

July 7: The camp has manifested a sudden interest in religion and science. The subject has been handled by Catholics, Fundamentalists, Modernists, and Freethinkers. Large crowds have turned out to hear the discussions and reverberations are continued in private conversations. We are thrown so close together that we have to face things and cannot just evade them. People want faith but not mere credulity. Some realize that they have thrown overboard without substituting something better.

July 10: I have been discusing Cronin's "Three Loves" with a roommate. I criticize the book because it makes all life seem futile. My roommate says, "I sometimes wonder whether life isn't all futile." She believes that she is always unlucky. She never dares to be happy because she knows ill luck is just around the corner. When one is young, one has ideals, but they all get smashed by life's hard knocks. We all feel that way at times, but isn't it because our ideals have been built on wishful thinking rather than reality? And isn't it because we are afraid, unwilling, to lose our life that we fail to find it?

Just a word on prices: I exchanged $1.50 in American silver for $560.00 F. R. B. An egg costs $16.00.

The last newspapers have an article on the new organization "The United Nations." God's spirit is working in spite of all that man may do. Some day there will be no more war. "He shall not fail nor be discouraged till he have set judgment in the earth and the isles shall wait for his law." Isaiah 42:4.

The Religious Drama Group, which was organized last January, put on Tolstoi's "What Men Live By." Reactions were varied, but it aroused enough interest that a third performance was called for.

July 14: We seem to take things so easily in camp. Some time ago we were talking about several attempts at suicide. That seems to be forgotten now, and we are talking about the fight. One man knocked down another so hard that he broke his nose and cheek bone, but in doing so he broke his own knuckles and has been in greater pain than his enemy. The cause of the fight was a question arising out of the black market.

I exchanged a ten-peso note which I picked up, I don't know where, for $2,000.00. That's a bit of luck. We are trying to lay in a few supplies for the time when the turnover of the camp comes. We expect to be without food for a period of ten days or so at that time.

Usually, in life we don't know what's ahead, but now we know that a time will come when we get out of here. What will it be like?

July 20: The other day one of the ladies was sitting with a friend on a rug listening to Hawaiian music. Now one of the staple foods in Weihsien is dried dates. We cook them, we bake them, we stew them and use them as sugar substitute. Well, the two friends were enraptured by their music. "Let's just close our eyes and imagine we are on a boat," they said, "just sailing into Hawaii." Just then a woman shouted, "My dates are cooked. You may have the stove." Needless to say, the illusion was crushed.

August 5: Yesterday we put on a garden party. There was a terrific crowd. The quadrangle in front of twenty-three and twenty-four was simply filled with people. Most of them seemed to enjoy themselves. It was only a light program, jolly and full of fun adapted to the hot summer months. Someone criticized it as being too blatantly American in a community that is predominantly British. I don't think that was true. At the same time while I am very much an internationalist I don't believe in leaning over backwards. Certainly I am not ashamed of being an American.

There is a large percentage of missionaries here. I think that the smooth, cooperative running of the camp owes quite a lot to them. On the other hand there are times when missionaries, at least some of them, are quite severely criticized. They are said to be smug, hypocritical, and grasping. One specific complaint that was made about some of them was that as long as they could not use their rations of cigarettes they refused to give the cards to anyone else, but as soon as they were able to drive bargains with their cigarettes, they immediately forgot about their principles. It is true that the laity was very strict with missionaries, but we do need to be on our guard.

August 12: War rumors are almost getting exciting now. It seems the end is really in sight. Russia, too, seems to have joined the war. Will Japan give in now?

August 16: We think that the war is really over, but news comes so gradually and long drawn out, our emotions are frittered away before coming to a real climax. Last night the camp committee of nine met with the Japanese who could neither affirm nor deny the rumor that the war was over. So the committee feels justified in believing that the war is over, but it asks all internees to remain calm. We are yet under Japanese control. However, all mail will be passed out, and we are to receive our passports back, and the American Marines are supposed to march in here from Tsintao.

August 17: Did I say we had no emotion left? Forget it! We heard a plane going over this morning. Those who knew claimed it did not sound like a Japanese plane. It sounded definitely like an American plane. After a bit it came back, much lower this time, and then it came over a third time. This time it was so low that judging by my emotions it must have swept right through me. Certainly the tops of the trees swayed, and the people who had climbed to the top of the tower bent low. A flock of birds rushed by in fright. And then it came yet again, and this time we saw objects dropping out of the planes; it wasn't smoke, we could see that. Then suddenly the balls opened and we saw little legs dangling from opened parachutes and then we knew they were men. Thrills of ecstasy go scampering down my spine just to think of it. We yelled, and wept, and rushed out to the gates, women and children taking the lead. The Japanese guards were powerless. No one listened to their "It is forbidden." The Salvation Army band, which had been practicing for just this occasion, rushed out blowing its horns and trombones. Some airplanes dropped supplies, and one struck a Chinese boy who was immediately carried away to the hospital.

After waiting a while we saw the men coming cautiously out of the cane fields where they had dropped, armed with revolvers, one in each hand. They didn't know how they would be met. Would the Chinese in this region be friendly? Would the Japanese let them enter the camp? After all they were only six, and they did not know how large a force of the enemy was inside. But instead of meeting an unfriendly foe, they fell into the arms of hysterical women. They were cheered, hugged, and slapped on the back as they came in. They must have been sore with pain. Some of the men in the camp took pity on the major and the last of the men and carried them in on their shoulders. One woman who had just washed her hair ran out with it streaming, brandishing a large American flag, the only one like it in camp. In a moment a division of Chinese troops was also at the gate and the Chinese officer was cheered as much as the American ones.

We are weak with emotion. The end has really come. Rumors are buzzing wildly again. We'll all leave in a few days. We'll be taken out by plane. We'll all fly to West China. Anyway, a radio was brought in and we will get the news.

The world is opening up again. It is moving in upon us. We hear of atomic bombs, of peace treaties, of Japan begging to be permitted to keep its emperor. We discover that a garbage coolie, one of the few Chinese who were permitted in the camp, is a Chungking agent.

August 18: There was more excitement today because a number of sick people received permission to fly by plane. They were rushed out to the aerodrome, but no plane arrived. So they all came back again. Later a plane came but couldn't land because a Japanese plane was in the runway.

The two fugitives from camp returned today. It seems that they have never been more than fifty miles away. Today the afternoon roll call was discontinued. "That's because the two men are back," someone said. "The second roll call started as a punishment for their flight, so it ends upon their return."

August 19: The underlying note at the Thanksgiving service in church today was that the real victory, the making of peace still lies ahead, though actual hostilities have ceased.

August 20: A victory pary in the ball field tonight. A moonlit sky and a balmy breeze made the evening exquisite.

August 22: It seems marvelous to be getting radio news twice daily. Apples, tomatoes, and eggs are coming in quantities. It seems unbelievable to have porridge, two eggs, and an apple for breakfast, when the menu for months has been bread and water. The black market has moved on top of the walls, and people are exchanging a pair of shoes for a bit of sugar, and old garments for some tomatoes.

August 23: We hear Japan has protested against the coming of good-will missions, like our parachutists are called, and upsetting the military status quo.

August 26: Yesterday another plane flew over and dropped food supplies. Some camp wit said it was eggplant and marrow. (The sum and substances of our vegetables for the past month or two.) In reality it seems to be chocolate and cigarettes.

August 27. The time has been set back an hour, mainly for sentimental purposes. We want to be like China rather than Tokyo. Otherwise it would really be more convenient to go by Tokyo.

There seem to be two thoughts running through my mind. One is that of God's working through great political movements as well as through small remnants and the other is the importance of forgiving. We must forgive and be forgiven because we all fail so frequently.

August 28: Today we were notified officially by leaflets dropped from planes that the Japanese had surrendered and that in an hour or two supplies would come. This happened. It wasn't two hours before six planes came, circling over and over, and the whole countryside was trembling with supplies. Lots of them were literally bombed down—the planes were B-29s from the Okinawas. Much food crashed and we spent the greater part of the day opening damaged tins, and supper consisted of American soup, stew, and fruit salad.

In the evening the American community served apple pie and coffee from a table decorated with a floral flag to our beloved parachutists. They wanted it very informal and so it was. We started in house number 135 because of threatening rain, then moved back to the moongate garden when the rain failed to come down. Most of the men made a few remarks, though those made by one young third generation Japanese were very short, and the little Chinese Eddie Wang, who had jumped from a plane for the first time in his life, made his bow from the top of the veranda where he was attending to the radio wire.

The first twelve sick people left by plane this morning. They hadn't been told last night, so that they might have a good night's rest.

August 30: Distribution of the supplies which "dropped from heaven" took place to-day. We also have "Yank" magazine distributed over the whole camp.

August 31: Excitement still continues. More Americans have come—a colonel too. One lady ran out in the process of curling her hair. A man ran out still polishing his shoes. "The day's work has to go on," he said. This group, it seems, is here to educate us, reorientate they say and to entertain us. But the reaction of the camp is not so good. If there is time for lectures, games, storytelling and movies does that mean we are going to be here for some time? But just let us see the grumblers stay away from the movies!

September 2: Due to lack of space on account of the servicemen and the supplies which have come in there has been no Sunday School the last few Sundays. I thought I might have my own particular class out in the open, but just as it was nearly time planes came flying again with the resultant parachuting; naturally everything was disorganized again. One parcel fell into the hospital grounds with such force that a tin of fruit bounced out of the parcel through the hospital window into the women's ward. Before the planes stopped flying over, all patients had been served with American fruit salad.

Vast supplies came in this time. It is very interesting to compare the actuality of turning over with our pre-conceived notions of it. Instead of there being a lack of supplies, there is a surplus. Even the Japanese are being forced to give us more. We had forgotten our government's concern for us.

September 4: The world is certainly coming to us with a bang. We are being orientated with a crash. This morning at six o'clock the loud speaker blared forth "What a beautiful morning, what a beautiful day." Most of the folks took it as a joke, but a few were rather upset by this invasion of our Weihsien silence. Someone was sure it would be followed up with setting up exercises. When we received our food and medical supplies by plane, there were instructions not to overeat nor to overmedicate. They evidently didn't think that we might be over-orientated. However, everything is being adjusted.

September 7: We are getting gifts daily. If it isn't a bar of soap, it is a tube of toothpaste; if it isn't that it's three tins of fruit juice, chicken soup, or pork and beans. We hear that next time there will be cheese and more coffee.

There is an open market now outside of the gate where we can go and bargain to our heart's delight. It is remarkable what things we can get, soap and sugar, for instance, which the Japanese before claimed it was impossible to get.

September 8: The Mariana boys were here again to-day. They are getting a bit rash. Parachutes crashed right into the alleys. One little boy was enveloped in one, fortunately the parcel did not strike him, otherwise it would have meant his death. We are very happy that the Chinese boy in the hospital is getting better.

September 14: To-day one of the ladies and I went into the city to visit some friends of hers. It was marvelous to be out on the road again, seeing Chinese peasants with their carts and their donkeys trudging along as they always have for thousands of years. The city seems unusually neat and orderly. Everywhere we see Chinese flags waving. We hear Weihsien is one of the richest cities in Shantung. Still there were very many empty shops, but we saw very few beggars. At the street crossing there was the usual congestion of Chinese carts, bicycles, rickshaws, and pedestrians The rickshaws and the bicycles with their variously pitched horns made a delightfully confused symphony It was thrilling. We were really back in China again

Before we left home we quickly ate lunch in order to avoid any trouble to our hosts. We might have spared ourselves that trouble. No sooner had we gotten there, then the servant was set to work to make mea dumplings for us. There was no question but that we must eat, even at the risk of getting back late to the camp. The gentleman of the house had a queer way of reasoning. Under ordinary circumstances he said of course, we wanted to abide by the rules, but in the eyes of God things looked differently. Surely He wanted His children to have communion and eat a meal together.

Sept. 15: Two cases of scarlet fever in the camp! Army men! Will this delay our evacuation from the camp.

Sept. 21: The Service men had heard that we had had an exhibit staged by the Women's auxiliary of all the gadgets and pictures which had been made in camp. They asked whether we wouldn't repeat it for them. Some of the people were not very enthusiastic. However, it wasn't such a big job. We merely asked that the folks who still had the things which they had brought to the exhibit before, to bring them again. Thus we had rather a nice little exhibit, quite representative of what we had had before.

September 24: All of a sudden things are beginning to move, orders came for the first group—those going overseas and those intending to go to Shanghai, Hongkong, or Tsingtao to get ready. Such a commotion as there was in camp upon that announcement. The place swarmed with Chinese workmen shouting and hammering. That together with all the American noise of loud speakers and what have you certainly produced a queer harmony. First the overseas baggage had to get ready and immediately after that the Peking and Tientsin. Sunday hardly seemed like Sunday because the packing and roping of trucks continued.

On Sunday afternoon at what we expect to be the last formal meeting of the Christian Fellowship, Harold Cook, the chairman made a few closing remarks for which I was glad. He emphasized the fact that we had made an experiment at Weihsien. Whether that experiment was successful or not, only our future attitude towards those of a different mode of thought than our own would tell.

Last night the first group was given detailed instruction, rather military style naturally as to how they were to behave and how to go. Everybody was in high spirits. Of course the lights were off; they would be so that they might get the right Weihsien send-off, but after all that didn't matter too much. But during the night it rained and still rained in the morning. I got up early to fry bacon and eggs for the three out of our room who left. When everyone was nearly ready the notice came to postpone the trip at least twenty-four hours.

April 25: The first break-up of the camp has come. About five hundred left to-day. After we came back, the doctor discovered that one of the remaining four in our room has scarlet fever, so she was bundled up and sent to the hospital into a private room.

When one comes to the end of a certain phase of life, there is always a feeling of sadness, but there is also one of expectation and exhileration, a sense of adventure as we embark upon the next experience.

I have never been in such close contact with the army and army tactics. We are constantly being told what to do. The loud speaker blares forth: "Attention please! Get your luggage out—never mind that nap, get that luggage ready and take it to the loading stations. There is a rumor folks, a rumor in camp, that all baggage is being taken out to the Railroad station, so get that luggage ready." There was another announcement. A child had been almost run over by a truck during the loading. All parents were commanded to keep their children from the loading areas, and all adults were supposed to use physical force if necessary to keep children from jumping onto trucks and carts. "It seems the children don't understand that we mean it, and we do mean it." the announcement said.

There is a certain restfulness in doing as you are being told, in letting others do your thinking for you. I can understand that to certain types of mind the regimented way of life would be quite satisfactory. I heard people in camp say about the nuns, that theirs was a very peaceful way of life.

September 28: Glowing reports are reaching us from Tsingtao. There were great ovations at the station. The Chinese cheered, British sailors carried the baggage, at the hotels there were hot baths, table cloths, silent waiters, dances on board ship etc. etc.

October 2: Last Sunday there was an exhibit of pictures by Sargent Smith, the army artist in the group. Outstanding among his pictures was one of the water queue. There is both strength and vitality as well as detail in his work. There is a certain rotundity about his figures, just as there is about his own figure. I asked him for his criticisms of my pictures, and he was very encouraging and gave me some very helpful suggestions.

It is getting rather anti-climatic. We are still here, three of us in our large room, now very much denuded. This last week it has been raining almost all the time it is quite cold.

All of a sudden the movie projector has come. All this time since the arrival of the second group of Americans, people have been waiting for it to come, but for some unknown reason it was delayed until people thought that it never would come. But now it has come and movies are promised for every night. After the first show had been going for a while, one of the officers stopped the performance. Ladies and gentleman," he said, "the show has started in the middle. With you permission we will now start the beginning so that it makes sense." There was a roar of laughter. It was so fitting to happen at Weihsien.

October 8: After two weeks of waiting, the colonel finally announced that a transport had arrived in Tsinftao to take away the first group, so that there would be room for the second group to come. Then there was some more hustling. Everybody of the second group got ready. The luggage had been taken to the gate. Some people had already arrived at the railway station, others were being loaded into the trucks when the order came "unload." We couldn't believe our ears. But at the time when the first group left there seemed to be an understanding with the Communists that they would blow up no railroads for ten days. But it had taken two weeks before the second group could leave and so the rails were again blown to bits and the bridges destroyed. No one could go. Some of the folks hurried back to their homes in order to get to the garbage boxes before the coolies got there in order to salvage what they had thrown out.

October 11: All sorts of people are coming and going out, but we stay on. There are no news as yet as to what is going to happen to us. We seem to have the distinction of being the last ones to leave the camp.

October 12: Things are moving again! We are going by plane, all of us. Now that these arrangements have been made the Chinese general in the city announces that the railroad has been repaired again, but the army is not trusting the rails any longer.

October 15: Going by plane isn't without its delays by any means either. No group seems to leave without going in vain at least once. Some wit has written on the walls of a house: "Make up your own travel parties for trips outside of the gates. Weihsien Express service guarantees safe return. Tickets sold by us." However, the first two planes left to-day. They are going direct to Peking. We watched them as they left. First came a frisky little scouter plane scampering about, poking its nose into all kinds of air pockets for any possible danger. A few minutes later it was followed by the larger transport planes shrouded in silver dignity, majestically soaring at a dizzy height through the clear, blue atmosphere.

October 17: The group in which I went also went to the airfield in vain the first day after we had rushed off to the field in a great hurry. The plane which was supposed to return had found it impossible to land in Peiping due to the heavy fog and had to return to Tientsin. The next morning, however, the plane landed even before our truck arrived there. We stepped right out of the truck into the plane and up we went. Within the next day or two everyone had left Weihsien.

Special Meeting of Mission Board in Chicago

A special meeting of the Board of Foreign Missions was held in one of the apartments belonging to Bethany Biblical Seminary, Chicago, Illinois, June 26 - 28.

The following members were present: Dr. A. E. Kreider, Goshen, Indiana, Rev. A. P. Waltner, Marion, South Dakota; Rev. Phillip A. Wedel, Goessel, Kansas; Rev. D. J. Unruh, Newton, Kansas; and Rev. Howard G. Nyce, Allentown, Pennsylvania.

The secretary gave a brief report of the workers institute held on the Bluffton College campus, the last week in June.

At the annual meeting held in Newton, last February, Rev. Nyce had been elected Executive Secretary. At first he was expected to have his office at the Conference headquarters, but at this meeting the Board decided that it would be of advantage to have the Secretary live in the east on account of attending more promptly and readily to passports, visas, and to be close to New York. The Board also decided that he should include the work formerly taken care of by a Candidate Secretary and that he should make a trip to Newton in the near future so that he and the Treasurer could work out the duties of the respective offices.

Rev. D. J. Unurh, formerly the candidate Secretary, was elected Vice President of the Board. Rev. Nyce had been the Vice President, but since was elected Executive Secretary, the Board had no Vice President until the June meeting. The Board appointed Rev. Walter H. Dyck as Board Treasurer.

Arizona

The Secretary read a letter from Brother J. P. Suderman, Superindentent of the Field, informing the Board that Miss Marguerite Sprunger and Mr. Leonard Wiebe plan to be married in the early fall and that they expressed a willingness to be stationed at the Moen Copi station. Rev. Fred Johnson had recently resigned as missionary at this station. The Board passed the following resolution: "Resolved that we accept Brother Wiebe and Miss Sprunger, his fiancee as prospective workers for Moen Copi."

Since the Moen Copi station was vacated the Board asked Miss Sprunger and Miss Anna Baerg to go there for the summer.

At the suggestion of Brother Suderman, the Board granted an additional three hundred dollars allowance for improving the Moen Copi mission home.

Montana

The Secretary reported that the Eden Church, Schwenksville, Pa., the Rev. Freeman H. Swartz, pastor, made arrangements whereby they sent Mrs. Mary Kerr Price to the Montana mission field for the purpose of helping in the daily vacation Bible school work. The secretary was instructed to write a letter of thanks to the Schwenksville congregation.

On the second day of the meeting, Miss Alice Bachert, a member of the Kitchener, Ontario, Mennonite Church, the Rev. Andrew R. Shelly, pastor, called at the invitation of the Board. She has been a missionary to Colombia for a number of years. The Board asked her to meet with our workers in Colombia when she returns to her field, during the time when a Board representative is present to help locate our field for service. This she kindly consented to do. Her home church recently joined the Eastern District Conference and plans to join the General Conference in the future. Miss Bachert is at present a missionary under the Latin American Mission Board.

Rev. Walter H. Dyck then presented the request of D. W. Friesen of Altona, Manitoba, Canada, concerning his appointment as Canadian Treasurer for the Board. After some discusssion the Board passed the following resolution: "Resolved that the Board of Foreign Missions of the General Conference of the Mennonite Church of North America, in session June 26 to 28 in Chicago, Illinois, hereby authorize and instructs D. W. Friesen, Altona, Manitoba. Canada, to transfer the mission funds and securities now being held in a personal account in the Canadian Bank of Commerce to the account of the Board of Foreign Missions of the General Conference of the Mennonite Church of North America and that the afore said Mr. D. W. Friesen be the Assistant Treasurer in charge of Canadian Funds."

Rev. Waldo Harder was a welcome visitor during the Board session on the afternoon of the second day. From his report it appears that Mrs. Harder may not be able to go to Africa on account of her physical condition, but the Board hopes to use them elsewhere as soon as she is able to get the OK of the doctor.

South America

In discussing the possibility of opening a field this fall, since our missionaries will soon be ready to start the work, the Board passed the following resolution: "Resolved that Brother A. E. Kreider arrange his itinerary with the MCC to enable him to visit the Colombia Mission Field before leaving for Europe and Asia and that the Board provide the necessary funds to make the trip."

In considering Colombia, the Board also passed the following resolution: "Resolved to express our appreciation to the Sterling Avenue Mennonite Church, Kitchener, Ontario, for their contact with us and introducing their member, Miss Alice Bachert, a missionary to Colombia, to our Board. The Foreign Board welcomes this gesture of good will from the church and appreciates the counsel of Miss Bachert."

India

The Board received a request from the Eastern District Conference Brotherhood to send a missionary to the Bible Conference to be held over the Labor Day week end at the Men-O-Lan Retreat grounds. The following motion was passed: "Moved that Rev. and Mrs. J. R. Duerksen be asked to visit the Bible Conference at Men-O-Lan and also visit the Eastern District Conference churches."

The Board then discovered that through some error, our missionaries on furlough were not paid the dearness money, (15 per cent extra allowance), resulting in the following motion: "Moved that since the dearness money is a part of the regular salaries of missionaries, we instruct our treasurer to pay this allowance to all furloughed missionaries or missionaries who have been on furlough since the allowance was in operation."

Brother Aron Jantzen's request to continue his studies was next considered, resulting in the following motion: "Resolved that we grant Aron Jantzen the permission to study next year and plan to return to India late summer or early fall 1947."

The Secretary was authorized to send the following motion to Brother Menno Rosenberger, Milford Square, Pennsylvania, for his generous gift of five thousand dollars for an X-ray machine for the Champa Hospital: "Moved to express our appreciation and instruct our Executive Secretary to convey to Menno Rosenberger our heartiest thanks for the special gift received for missions."

The Secretary was also instructed to express our thanks to Dr. Ralph Kauffman of Bethel College for his aid in purchasing supplies for our mission from the Surplus War Material.

The Board is anxious that missionaries returning home on furlough have a physical examination as soon as possible after arriving in the U.S.A. This is reminding our missionaries of a rule found in the Manual for Missionaries, page 14, near the end of the first paragraph.

The Board passed a motion instructing the Secretary to make preparation to send the Rev. and Mrs. Lubin W. Jantzen to India this coming fall if feasible.

Another motion concerning out-going India missionaries "That if possible we send Miss Gladys Klassen to India this fall with Misses Martha Burkhalter and Anne Penner."

The Secretary then brought up the matter of a cable address and suggested that we adopt the name sent to us by Brother Walter H. Dyck. The following motion was adopted "Resolved that we adopt GECOMENA as our cable address." GE for General; CO for Conference; ME for Mennonite and NA for North America.

China

The Secretary then read several letters received from Brother S. F. Pannabecker, and the following action was taken concerning his soon return from China: "Resolved that we have a meeting with the China missionaries in Newton, to meet with and hear the report of Rev. S. F. Pannabecker as soon as feasible after his return."

The Board granted the request of Brother Lester Wuthrich to continue his studies for another year.

Next we considered Miss Fast's letter referring to the possibility of having a missionary home. Two motions followed, 1. "Moved that we appoint a committee of six persons who shall study the matter of a missionary home and present their findings to our Board". 2. "Resolved that the following—D. J. Unruh, C. H. Goering, W. F. Unruh, W. C. Voth, Miss Fast and Mrs. Lohrentz, comprise the Committee to study the Missionary Home." The President of the Board then asked Brother Unruh to serve as Chairman of the committee.

Puerto Rico

As a result of several letters received from men who had been in a CPS unit in Puerto Rico, the Board discussed the possibility of opening a field on the Island. The following motion was adopted: "Moved to instruct our Secretary to study the possibility of a Puerto Rico Mission field and to present a report to the Annual Board meeting of 1947."

General

Since the $15,000 has been collected for the Janjgir School through Miss Martha Burkhalter, the Board passed the following resolution: "Resolved that the money oversubscribed for the Janjgir school be designated toward the building of a bungalow to house teachers for the school."

Because of the high cost of living the Board took the following action: "Resolved that we increase our extra allowance for missionaries from 15 to 20 per cent, effective July 1, 1946.

The Secretary then read the letter from Brother Winfield Fretz referring to a loan to the Mutual Aid Committee, resulting in the following motion: "Moved that we grant the Board of Mutual Aid the loan of $5,000.00 for a period of five years without interest."

Dr. Dester presented some needs for India and the Board passed the following resolution: "Moved that we grant Dr. H. Dester the privilege to soliciting funds through the mail for equipment at the Jagdeeshpur Hospital and that we wish him success in this effort."

Oklahoma

The Secretary was asked to go to Oklahoma prior to the meeting with the China Missionaries in Newton, the beginning of August and contact Brother Gerhard Neufeld in Enid, Oklahoma, regarding the Oklahoma field.

The Board made the following motion regarding Brother Kreider's visit in Europe and Asia: "Resolved that we ask our Mission Board Chairman, Brother A. E. Kreider, that in connection with his service under the MCC, he plan to visit the India mission field at the time of the Annual India Conference in 1946 and that he plan his itinerary accordingly." The Board has also asked Brother Kreider to take pictures of the mission work in India and submit the expense account thereof to our Board.

The Board asked the Secretary to write a letter of thanks to Bethany Biblical Seminary for the use of a building for our meetings and lodging.

Upon motion, the meeting adjourned with closing prayer.

Board Meeting in Newton, Kansas

The Board met with N. Paul Stucky and Carl Lehman in the basement of the First Church, Newton, Kansas, Friday afternoon, August 2. All the Board members were present except Brother A. P. Waltner and Brother P. H. Richert. The Women's Association was represented by Mrs. Andres, Mrs. Entz and Mrs. Goerz. After having heard the report by the brethren, the Board asked the Secretary to continue his study of the field, and report back to the Board.

The China Meeting

All the Board members were present except Brother Richert, who is still in the hospital at Goessel. Rev. Waltner arrived the evening before. The same women of the Women's Association that were present on Friday afternoon, were also present Saturday morning for this meeting. The following missionaries were present: Rev. and Mrs. Marvin Dirks, Rev. and Mrs. P. J. Boehr, Rev. and Mrs. Lester Wuthrich, Rev. and Mrs. H. J. Brown, Rev. and Mrs. W. C. Voth, Mrs. A. M. Lohrentz, (Dr. Lohrentz also attended in the afternoon), Mrs. Albert Jantzen, Mrs. C. L. Pannabecker, Miss Fast, Rev. and Mrs. S. F. Pannabecker and Rev. and Mrs. August Ewert.

The Chairman of the Board, Brother Kreider opened the meeting by reading Matt. 28:18-20; Mark 16:15, 16 and Acts 1:8. After a few remarks the following offered prayer, Rev. A. P. Waltner, Mrs. H. J. Brown, and Rev. W. C. Voth.

Rev. Pannabecker then gave a verbal report of conditions as he received reports from those whom he had contacted. He spoke of five characteristics of China at present; 1. Inflation. 2. Communication. 3. The Communist Situation. 4. The Occupation of Mission Property and 5. Missionaries. He said, "The younger missionaries had all gone. The majority left are older people. Now older missionaries are returning. It will be at least four years before new workers will be ready to start work."

Brother Kreider offered a prayer before Brother Pannabecker's report and Brother Ewert offered a prayer after his report was given. The noon meal was enjoyed in the basement of the church and the entire group were the guests of Mrs. Frieda Regier Entz.

After dinner the Findings Committee, appointed before the report the Brother Pannabecker was given, presented their report as follows: The Committee accepts the recommendation of Brother Pannabecker, that we plan to begin work in China as soon as possible, making Kaifung, in Honan Province the temporary center; that we consider the work of the Hospital probably in cooperation with the MCC or the CIM; that we aim to establish a base at Kaifung, with agencies working out in Medical or Bible School work; that we abide by our Annual Board resolution and try to send three missionaries to China as soon as possible.

The Chairman then suggested that first we discuss sending back of missionaries, which resulted in the following resolution: "Moved that we favor the recommendation that a group of missionaries be sent out as soon as possible to negotiate for the resuming work in the old field and inaugurating work in a new field."

A number of missionaries and Board members offered prayer before the meeting adjourned.

Board Meeting Saturday

7:00 P.M.

The Secretary gave a brief report of his visit to the Oklahoma field and suggested that the Board consider sending a third couple back to Oklahoma. This resulted in the following motion: "Resolved that we place three couples in the Oklahoma field as soon as feasible."

Concerning China: It was moved that we ask

Brother and Sister Brown and Brother and Sister Jantzen to go first; that we send Brother and Sister Voth as early in 1947 as possible; that we send additional China workers as soon as those on the field request it.

The Board has also decided that Misses Marie Regier and Elizabeth Goertz should come home as soon as possible and rest up before the work in China would again be started.

The meeting adjourned with prayer by the Secretary. We are grateful to the First Church of Newton for the use of their basement for our meetings Friday afternoon and all day Saturday.—Howard G. Nyce, Secretary.

Miss Martha Burkhalter's Farewell Letter

Berne, Indiana
August 19, 1946

My dear Friends in the Lord Jesus Christ;

Some time ago, a Sunday School teacher asked the children what they would like to be when they grew up. A little girl said, "I want to be a missionary on furlough."

I hope a great many girls and boys whom I have met in my travels in Indiana, Ohio, Pennsylvania, New York, Florida, Iowa, Kansas, Oklahoma, Nebraska, California, Oregon, Washington, Idaho, and in Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Ontario, Canada, will some day be able to be missionaries on furlough.

I want to thank my Heavenly Father and all who read this for all the spiritual and temporal blessings I have received everywhere. At retreats, at conferences, at Bible academies and Bible schools and in colleges, where I spoke to groups of eager attentive young people ple. I never knew that there were so many Bible schools in Canada.

I shall never forget the happy days spent at the summer camps at Men-O-Lan, Pa. and at Paris, Ontario. There I saw young people finding and accepting Christ as their Saviour, and then I heard them give their testimonies around camp fires. They were in real earnest, and I was thrilled to see the joy in their eyes. I attended Youth for Christ rallies in New York, Philadelphia, and Chicago, and in many other places where thousands and thousands of young people were not ashamed to claim Christ as their Saviour and their God. Then there were the spiritual feasts received at summer conferences at various places. Especially did I enjoy the Canadian Keswick Conference at Muskoka Lakes, Ferndale, Ontario, and the Bible Conference at Winona Lake, Indiana. There I met many old friends, and made new ones. Together with these we shared life's problems and found solutions for them in Christ, and His Word.

The year spent at the Biblical Seminary in New York, was a very valuable part of this missionary's time spent on furlough. There my mind and soul were refreshed as I pursued my studies in the Bible and in other subjects related to the Word of God. Here I met many of the finest and most highly qualified postgraduate students from many states; also many missionaries home on furlough, like myself.

We shared our past experiences in the field and discussed the future outlook of missionaries in a time when greater opportunities are presented and needier fields are opened than ever before.

Wherever I presented the need in churches or other places for more missionary workers, always there were some eager, hopeful, enthusiastic young men and women who came to tell me that they felt the call to go into the Lord's vineyard somewhere, and wondered whether the Lord could use them. In all my twenty-eight years of missionary work, I have never seen such an awakened interest in missions, as I have seen in the last two years. It is a matter of praise and thanksgiving to the Lord, that with the harvest as great as it is, the laborers will be many. Pray and continue to give liberally, that the way may open for hundreds more to go out as workers in the Lord's vineyard all over the world.

America is a beautiful country. It is the most beautiful country in the world. Missionaries realize that more than ever when they have been living in heathen villages where children find no beautiful flowers in their gardens, because there are no gardens; where the natives sleep in mud huts without any windows, with the cattle and the chickens in the same room; with filth and dirt running down the main street during the monsoons; and with gnats and flies sitting on babies' eyes and sore mouths, and no one to shoo the insects away; when men and women believe in spooks and ghosts and evil spirits, and are afraid of the dark shadows everywhere. America is clean and beautiful, and children are happy here.

It is nice to come home on furlough and go on picnics in Lehman Park in Berne, Indiana, or into the beautiful evergreen and fir forests of Washington State, as I did at Newport, Washington, where Rev. Unruh's children took me into the deep green forest and where we walked along the road past other thick forests to go and visit the Dalkes. Wherever I visited in America, I found the children happy, and they sing and sing. Little Janet Danner and Donna Lou Merillat, and many others, made me so very, very happy with their singing of the gospel choruses which children sing everywhere.

It would take pages for me to thank all my friends and cousins, for their kind hospitality, for their interest in my work, for their gifts for the mission cause, and for their best wishes and prayers. I spoke two hundred times, and showed the moving pictures of our evangelistic and Bible school work at Janjgir. I had many more calls which I could not accept. I enjoyed speaking everywhere, because I had a message to give from the Lord, concerning the manifestation of His grace in India, how hundreds and thousands have accepted the crucified and risen Christ; how the Christian church has taken root in India and how workers are being trained to take charge of village churches far, far away from the main stations. Oh the joy of telling how people are saved and separated for Christ in far heathen lands. There is no greater joy than to be a missionary on furlough telling about it.

Yes, there is even greater joy, and that is to prepare to go back to your adopted country and to your brothers and sisters in Christ. India has become my home. I am only on furlough at present. I want to go back. I want to see my little brown-eyed, black-haired, sweet, little Dilasie again. She is waiting for me to come back, as are many others. Do you remember the picture I showed of Dilasie, how poor and thin she was, and she became plump and pretty by taking cod liver oil and fruit juices, and drank milk from the little scrub cow that gave only three cups of milk in the morning and three in the evening. It's tiny little scrub calf drank the rest. Delasie did not die as we feared she would. She grew and grew and now at five and one-half years, she is growing up just like all other fortunate children do.

Yes, I am taking some toys and things along for her. A swing from Mrs. Yager, a brown-eyed dolly called "Ruthie" which little Harriet Lawlor of Berne sacrificed for a little, brown-eyed girl in India. A little doll, very much loved not only by Harriet but also by her brother. But both wanted to dedicate the little doll for India. Thank you Harriet, and thank you, everyone else for all the things you gave me to take along. Thank you Jack, and all the rest, for the vests which the preachers and teachers and students will enjoy wearing; and thank you everybody else who gave little children's clothes for the many children whose parents attend Bible School and who do not have time to sew while they are in school. Thank you also for the glasses which you gave me to take along for the older people who can't afford to buy glasses and therefore cannot read the Bible anymore. Most of your glasses will fit somebody.

Thank you too, for all the feed sacks you gave me, especially the women of Kansas and Oklahoma, and for the baby quilts and other things you made from the feed sacks. They're on their way to India. And there are a number of you who made dresses and things for me. Thank you. I surely appreciate it.

Thank you; all, for everything else you gave me or sent to me to take along for somebody in India. Those who saw my boxes and trunks and barrels, when they were sent to the station at Berne wondered what was in all of them. Many of these contained things for relief for the poor, or are gifts for other missionaries and Christian friends. Wouldn't you like to be there when the boxes are being opened, and when the gifts are handed out? That will be a joy you must try to imagine. May God reward you all for your gifts and contributions. Most of all, I wish to thank my church, the Berne church, for its deep interest in the missionary work.

I am leaving Berne Indiana, for the west coast, on August 20. Miss Anne Penner a trained nurse from Rosenfeld, Manitoba, Canada, will meet me in Newton, Kansas, where we expect to visit for a couple of days, and to say goodbye to kind friends and relatives. On August 25, there will be a missionary rally and a farewell for us, in the Immanuel Mennonite Church at Los Angeles. On August 27 we expect to sail on the Dutch steamer, Tawali, and hope to get to Bombay in about six weeks. It is not certain at all, just how many weeks we will be on the way, but we are glad the steamer will take us all the way to India. (Miss Burkhalter and Miss Penner did not get to leave on this boat.—editor). Pray for us as we go. We know you will, especially the group of forty women at Berne, Indiana, who meet every Wednesday for prayer. "The effectual, fervent prayer of a righteous man, availeth much." So continue to pray, and in His time God will answer every prayer. Sweet hours of prayer they were indeed, which I spent with you on Wednesday evenings at Berne.

A special answer to my prayers was the $15,000 which friends and churches sent in to the Mission Board for our new Bible School buildings at Janjgir. I want to thank every one who contributed toward this project.

And now I wish to thank my brother Menno, my sister Mary, my Friend Amanda, my niece Viola and their families in a very special way for their hospitality and their help during the last weeks at Berne, and especially when I packed my boxes for India. There are many other friends and relatives who deserve special mention, such as Julia, Ida and Zilla and Dr. Soldner, and Rachel, my dear sister. I cannot thank you enough. May all who recieve this, take this "Thank you" as a mark of appreciation for what you have done or said to make my furlough in America a happy, never-to-be-forgotten one. I wish to close with Gal. 2:20; II Thess. 3:1; and Hebrews 13:20, 21. May God be with you till we meet again. I hope to meet my nephew Edward and his wife Ramoth in India next year.

Your Friend and Sister in Christ,
Martha Burkhalter

Prayer and the Will of God

"If you abide in me and . . . . done unto you," John 15:7. If the Christian is walking with the Lord, then he prays according to the will of God, and his prayers are naturally effective. He is not trying to force his desires out of an unwilling God. He has learned to detect God's will, and his requests are under the control of that will. He at all times desires what the father is longing to give. Should he ask for such a thing for which the answer can be "no"? How many times do we ask such things? Do we ask without knowing the will of God? (The foregoing meditation is by Samuel Stephan, one of the teachers at the boys' school at Basna mission station in India. Both he and his wife teach. His parents are evangelists.)

The Pastor As a Conference Worker

by C. E. Krehbiel

(The following article is a condensation of a paper written by Dr. C. E. Krehbiel for the General Conference Retreat for ministers and their wives, recently held in Iowa.)

Under a congregational form of church government, such as is that of Mennonites, the pastor is called by the local church—not appointed by a superior or a conference over the head of the local church. Therefore it probably is agreed that with us a pastor's—a shepherd's—immediate and first duty and responsibility is to the congregation—the flock—that has called him and supports him more or less.

The local church is the pastor's specific spiritual family. And as Paul writes to Timothy (I Tim. 5,8): "If any one does not provide for his relatives and especially for his family, he has disowned the faith and is worse than an unbeliever." (RSV). As a father's first duty is to his own immediate family, so the pastor's is to his spiritual family . . . But a minister who cannot see beyond his own parish never will be an efficient conference worker.

Assuming then that a pastor is properly feeding his flock, what, if any, opportunities or obligations are his as a conference worker? Surely it is not expected of him that he liquidate the conference!

Why Join a Conference

This topic and this question are based upon an assumption, namely, that the pastor's church is a member of a conference. Now that has not always been true, much less self-evident. And even now the wisdom of such connection is doubted by some.

Not so long ago I was asked to state what advantages and duties an unattached church would have in joining our Conference. You notice the question was not—what opportunities, but what advantages and duties would the church have in joining.

In answering the inquiry, attention was called to the fact that the inquiring church was once composed of two small groups that lived some distance from other churches, and had asked for conference nurture, and that for over twenty-five years they had been served by our Home Mission Committee by sending a minister there at the approximate expense of twenty-five dollars per trip. It was pointed out to them that this would not have been possible, had not a number of churches joined hands as a conference to do this extension mission work. And that the purpose of a conference was the rendering of a larger and more effective spiritual service, rather than offering a pecuniary advantage to the local church. It was stressed that a conference can do things more effectively and on a much larger scale than can one congregation alone, not only in missions but also in education, publication, relief, etc., and that thus the church is carrying out Christ's "Great commission" "Go . . . !" A church should therefore rather stress the wider opportunities or privileges than the advantages to itself locally when contemplating joining a conference.

As for the duties or obligations, it was stated that it was expected of a church that joins Conference, that it could and would accept and adhere to the doctrinal statement of the Conference; and that there were no fixed financial obligations, but that naturally it was hoped and expected that churches would voluntarily and cheerfully share in the larger work in such a measure as the Lord had blessed and prospered them materially. It was mentioned that the General Conference did not consider itself a legislative but an advisory body, and so left internal matters more the local church.

With Or Without Office

A pastor of a conference church may be with or without a General Conference office. Why? Simply because there are not enough offices to go around. And possibly it will not be harmful to us ministers if in passing we note that the sound and logical process is this: Make good in the local church; then make good in your district conference in a minor, then in a more responsible office; and then do the same thing in the General Conference. In other words, do not expect to climb the ladder from the top rung.

In this connection it probably is true, if a minister of a conference church does not show interest in the Conference and its work—or is even antagonistic to it—that his attitude will in time be reflected by his church; and the reverse tends to be true also. So one of the first things required is to work toward the end that Conference realize its divinely appointed aim and work toward the end that ministers who serve its churches shall also be conference-minded, love the Conference and be zealous for its good name. Where this love is lacking, conference work of necessity will suffer.

Again, a minister's loyalty which is dependent on his holding a conference office can hardly be said to be very deeply rooted, nor a good foundation on which to build. There does, however, seem to be at least a slight inclination to take the attitude: If I have no office, I have no interest except possibly to find fault.

Fortunately that is not the rule, as witness these noble testimonies:

An elderly brother—since passed—who had held and been very active in various offices told me, when asked whether he planned to attend a session: "I am getting old and think I'll not go, I have no office now anyway." There was a tinge, not of fault finding, but more of regret—shall one say of satisfied sadness or of sad satisfaction—as he said it, for he realized that the Lord had seen fit to use him and his gifts, and that it would not be long before he too would be translated from believing to seeing what he had been privileged to teach and do.

Another good retired pastor who had held various offices, but held none now, was so happy when the church which his son was serving made it possible for the son to attend the session, and that the father could thus ride along and also attend. And he told me repeatedly: "I pray daily for the conference officers and its work."

Thank God for these spiritual patriarches, who—whether ministers or lay men or women—are praying at their earthly eventide for their children and successors in church work as did the first Apostles!

With respect to conference attendance, may I interject,that some churches pay part or all of the expenses their minister incurs in attending conference sessions. That is a fine gesture and incentive, and shows how such a church appreciates conference. Our General Conference does not even pay the travelling expenses of its officers to attend the triennial sessions.

Our interest will have to go deeper than office-holding. But it can hardly be expected that a minister who has no Mennonite background or who comes from another branch of our denomination will, without first making himself familiar with the conference and its work, be intelligently interested in it and be in a position not only to hold but also creditably to fill an exacting office. And there are such offices.

With the transition from the former Mennonite way of electing ministers out of their own membership to the expanding present practice of calling ministers from without who often have other customs and training and are therefore not fully conversant with local conditions or practices (and may not be in full sympathy with them) this really becomes a problem which may easily be divisive.

It would doubltess be helpful in overcoming this difficulty or danger, if every church that calls a minister would make it a point to urge—if not demand—that such ministers secure a "Minister's Certificate," as over three hundred have done; from the proper authorities of the General Conference. These certificate state that the minister has indicated by signing the "Information Blank" that he can and will conscientiously support the Conference and its work. . . .

Another thing that should be mutually helpful if all churches and boards and committees would strictly abide by the resolution entitled "Ministerial Ordination" as adopted at the last session of Conference and recorded in the Minutes of 1945 on page 49.

Attendance, at least for some time, at a school that requires or at least stresses Mennonite doctrines and practices should also be helpful in forming friendships and uniting us in the work of advancing the cause of Christ as entrusted to our Conference.

Information Required

No minister—and for that matter no layman—can do really efficient and constructive work unless he is moderately well informed both as to the scope and the method of conference work. So, one of the first things that a new conference worker should do is to inform himself as to his official duties. If he fails to do that, one of several things likely will follow: He will find fault with the organization, or, if he works at all, it will be on the basis of trial and error, or he will ignorantly cover ground that others before have explored.

The two things on which he should by all means inform himself are: a) He should know that the Conference stands for as stated in its Charter, and its Constitution and as developed in its work and aims. b) He should also inform himself as to its practices, policies, its organization and pertinent resolutions.

This is not as easy as one may think. While working on this paper, I was asked: What is the procedure in making use of the income from a certain conference fund that is designated to aid members afflicted with a certain lingering illness? (I should be interested to know whether there is any one at this retreat who could off-hand give the requested information.)

Here is another instance: A "Bible and Testament" fund of $3,500.00 was created by bequest in 1919, and, while the fund is invested as directed, it has disappeared as such from recent printed reports, and so the income for some time has not been used as stipulated but lay dormant till the matter was recently traced.

Conference is not perfect, and it is not out of place to strive to improve and make it more efficient. And we should not forget that Christ, not the organization, should be the center and soul of it. The cause looms larger than any individual or his pet views.

What Makes an Ideal Conference Worker?

Permit me to enumerate some of the gifts that should characterize an ideal conference worker. He should be

1. One who knows and loves the Lord and His church and has a hunger for souls. He may not be an ordained minister.

2. One who loves and believes in the conference and is willing to sacrifice for the cause entrusted to it by Christ.

3. One who to a certain extent has control of his own time.

4. One who by inclination or training is especially fitted for the office given him, but still can cooperate.

5. One who is a better brick layer than brick thrower, and always finds a constructive rather than a destructive approach and insight in the solution of problems.

6. One to whom the opportunity rather than the office is challenging, i.e. one who is not merely an office seeker.

7. One who will cooperate rather than dominate or even dictate—who can take a subordinate place and give God's cause first place.

8. One who loves and repects the Conference and will give it prayerful thought, and who is more alert to accentuate points of agreement than of difference among us.

9. One who is given the grace to know when to retire and does it gracefully for the good of the cause.

10. One who, like John the Baptist, can joyfully say: "He must increase, but I must decrease."

Should Our Church Activities Be Widened?

by E. W. Friesen

The Mennonite Church has become concerned about the widening of its church activities in the latter years. This has possibly been due to Civilian Public Service Camp activities during the war time. This branch has been responsible for men under her care during seven days a week and twenty-four hours a day. She was under obligation to provide for an ample program of activities for her men while in camp. The writer occasionaly visited one of the units in one of the university towns and feels that the athletic, recreational, and social activities met the individual needs of the men. The same could be said about the colleges that are responsible for providing a full activity program for her students.

There are many factors to consider when new activities are undertaken. There are, no doubt, many viewpoints on the worth of such activities on the part of the church in the field of the social and recreational life of the church member. E. W. Friesen of Henderson, Nebraska, here expresses his views on the question of expanding the scope of church activity.

What Some Other Churches Do

Some other denominations are providing an ample athletic, recreational, and social program for her youth. Their church plant provides space for such a program to be carried out under their supervision. One of the aims is to keep youth wholesomely occupied. This is important as the writer has experienced in his high school teaching career, for such high school activities have done much toward keeping youth out of mischief. But on the other hand the church is rightfully criticised for this undertaking. The church has provided athletics, dances, and parties to compete with the world, and these activities serve the purpose of occupying the youth's time and no further. The church has become so much involved in this program that it fails to serve that purpose which she is supposed to serve.

The Retreat

The retreat is one of the added activities of the Mennonite Church. It serves youth in a very definite way. Some of them are at camps, but some are held at the locality of the larger Mennonite churches. It is possible to reach more individuals under the latter plan. It is only the local retreats that the writer has been able to attend, and he feels grateful that his local church has made this attendance possible for him.

Activities Undertaken by the Church

The Mennonite Church is a dynamic church and some activities have been added to her church program throughout its history. The singing school was criticised because it gave youth more freedom, but it has become a very definite part of our church program. The Sunday School was criticised because it gave more liberty to youth of school age; it serves for religious instruction for young and old at the present time. The missionary society was criticised because of its gossip, but has been one of the means to create greater interest in mission work.

Should Our Churches Widen Their Program?

Should our church activities be widened is one of the present problems of the Mennonite Church? If we widen, what activities should be added is another question, for we know that other activities beside music, Sunday School, and misson societies have been tried but were possibly not found to be what we want them to be. Thus care should be taken before undertaking an added activity. The adding of social activities seemingly is under discussion among the Mennonite churches at present. The writer has been somewhat reluctant toward church social activities. He was invited to attend one of another denomination in a city. There is nothing to criticise it as an activity, but when closing time came the leader in closing mentioned attending church the following Sunday. This was not very well taken by some of the guests. He was again invited to attend one at one of the Mennonite churches. The first part was what he expected—games and lunch, but he was amazed at how the youth took charge of the worship service during the second half of the alloted time. Thus there is the possibility that the Mennonite Church may launch out and add-activities which are dedicated to the Lord, and they will serve the purpose of greater and more intensive worship which may be thought of as bringing greater fruits for eternity.

Suggestions for Panel Discussions

What Is a Panel Discussion?

1. Its Meaning: A panel discussion is a discusssion among a selected group of persons under a leader and in front of an audience which joins in later. The form is conversational—no speeches by members or by leader.

2. Its Place: Panel discussion is a good plan when the crowd is too big for all to take part. For smaller groups, there is no substitute for round-table discussion; but with groups larger than forty or fifty, panels have definite advantages.

3. Its Composition: Good pannels may number from four to ten persons; six or eight, in addition to the leader, is ideal—large enough for variety, small enough for genuine conversation.

Its Purpose: To get important facts and different viewpoints out into the open, stimulate audience thinking, and lay a basis for wide particpation later.

Preparing for the Panel

The Program Committee's Preparatory Job

1. Select a timely and significant topic. State it clearly, and generally in question form.

2. Select members with care— people with different backgrounds willing to re-examine their convictions, ready to give and take. A good voice and a clear and concise manner of speaking help.

3. Select leader and members early. Give them a chance for study and thought beforehand.

4. Allow enough time. Panels should never be rushed. Those shorter than an hour seldom succeed. But conclude while audience interest is still high.

The Panel Leader's Preparatory Job

1. Meet in advance with panel members—to get acquainted and to reach a common understanding on topic and method.

2. Discover major points to be discussed. In preliminary conference, frame an over-all pattern, a few principal questions to be raised. But discourage lengthy advance discussion. Agree about the beginning—one member to open the discussion and perhaps a second to carry on. From then on let it be free, spontaneous, unrehearsed.

3. Look to the seating plan. "Set the stage" with an arc of chairs and tables on a slightly raised platform close to the audience. Do not seat members with similar viewpoints together; mix them up. Seat lively talkers on the ends, quieter ones near the center so you can encourage them.

Conducting the Panel

As Leader of the Panel

1. Make your introduction short. Brevity is golden. Introduce panel members in a few words. Speak of general plan for panel and audience participation. Then say just enough to spotlight the problem, and throw out your first question; five or ten minutes is enough for this. After introduction, remain seated throughout.

2. Keep your own view out of it. Enter the discussion only to (1) ask clarifying questions, (2) interpret uncertain meanings, (3) bring discussion back to the track, (4) summarize, (5) ask "next step" questions, (6) interrupt speech makers. Be the impartial "moderator."

3. Address questions to the panel as a whole or to a part of it. Do not question individual members, as a rule. Let participation be as free and spontaneous as possible.

4. Ask challenging questions—not the "Yes" and "No" kind, but "Why?" and "How?"

5. Dig out points of difference—not as in debate, but in friendly united pursuit of the truth. Work toward understandng, reconcilation. Strive to find the "common meeting ground."

6. Take time for occasional summaries, especially at the end. People like to know that progress has been made. Point out "loose-end" questions.

7. Invite audience participation somewhere around the half-way mark—statements of experience and opinion as well as questions. As the leader do not answer questions; refer them to panel or others in audience.

As Member of the Panel

1. Be alive to your opportunities. A discussion is a co-operative venture. Always watch for the right moment to speak your own view point—vigorously, clearly concisely. Help the leader keep discussion balanced, lively, forward moving.—Gospel Messenger.

Potatoes Going Into Liquor

Distillers are circumventing food conservation by using potatoes in large quantities for making beverag alcohol, Mrs. D. Leigh Colvin, president of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, has charged.

Mrs. Colvin said that "thousands of tons of potatoe have been destroyed in making alcohol since distillers were forbidden by government regulations to use wheat and restricted in the quantities of some other grains.

"In one instance distillers bought more than one thousand carloads of potatoes in California and, after drying them, shipped east for distilling.

"It is almost as feasible to ship dried (dehydrated potatoes to the starving in foreign lands as to ship grain, and that is where the potatoes should have gone

"Along with this circumvention of food conservation, the liquor traffic continues to foster the myth o a shortage in distilled spirits which provides retailer with the excuse for 'tie-in' sales whereby the purchaser of whisky must buy an equal or greater amount of rum or wine. The 'myth' also encourage Black Market activities.

Cries over an alleged shortage have been hear for several years. Yet Department of Commerce figure show that 190,000,000 (M) gallons of distilled spirit were released for consumption in 1945, an increase of 25,000,000 (M) gallons over 1944.

"The fact that distillers are no longer producing alcohol for war purposes, plus the release of some 'war' alcohol to them by the government and the amount being made from such substitutes as potatoes, make it obvious that the volume of booze to be sold this year will exceed the 1945 total which was an all-time high since repeal."—National Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

Aberdeen Young People Have Three-Day Retreat

The Young People of the Mennonite Church, Aberdeen, Idaho, held their annual retreat on July 26, 27, and 28. The place was the Presbyterian-Methodist Conference Grounds near Ketchum, Idaho. Here, in the heart of the majestic Sawtooth Mountains, we were constantly reminded of the theme which we had chosen: "I will lift up mine eyes." Ps. 121:1.

Speakers at Retreat

Our speakers were Rev. Paul Roth, pastor of the Calvary Mennonite Church, Barlow, Oregon, and Rev. Verney Unruh, vice-president of the Y.P.U., from Bloomfield, Montana. Orlando Schmidt from Buhler, Kansas, was our music director. Rev. H. N. Harder, our pastor, was the camp director. Fern Baer was camp nurse.

We left Aberdeen in a bus on Friday morning and reached our destination in time for supper. After eating and doing the clean-up, Rev. Roth brought the first message, "Looking Heavenward for a Divine Saviour." During the course of the retreat, he brought three other messages, "Looking Heavenward for Steadfastneess," "Looking Heavenward for Security," and "Looking Heavenward for our Blessed Hope."

Rev. Roth also had charge of the Bible study class. The subject he chose was "Santification and Service." We enjoyed the spirit-filled messages he brought us.

Rev. Unruh had the class on Missions. Saturday he gave us an "airplane" view of missions, touching the high spots from the very beginning of missions to the present day. On Sunday he gave us "The Challenge of Missions." He brought out the point that missionaries do more than bring the gospel to non-Christians; they help the new Christians to raise their standards of living, which is also important.

Food — Well Prepared

Along with spiritual food to satisfy our spiritual hunger, we needed food to satisfy our physical hunger, and the Eats Committee surely knew what to do for our hearty mountain appetites. Especially the pancakes and bacon we had for breakfast Saturday morning was good. The Committee is happy to report that Rev. Harder is an efficient pancake turner!

Recreation and Retreat

Table tennis, badminton, and horse-shoe were among the games the Recreation Committee provided for entertainment. Saturday afternoon most of the group went hiking, returning to the camp hot, tired, and dirty. The camp nurse had a lot of fun examining bruises, treating blisters and making herself generally useful.

Every morning you could see retreaters, with Bible in hand, going up to the mountain, down to the stream, or to some other quiet place. Many blessings were received by those who kept the morning watch.

Closing Meetings

On Sunday afternoon, Rev. Unruh told us about the Y.P.U. Many questions were asked and a lively interest was shown in the work of the Union.

Every evening, the last meeting of the day was held around a camp fire. On Friday night Alice Lehman was in charge of this meeting. Each one had an opportunity to give his testimony, and to tell just what it was that led him to accept Christ as his personal Saviour.

Orlando Schmidt led the meeting Saturday night, the topic for discussion being the life work that each had chosen, and why he chose that particular work.

The blessings of the Retreat came to a climax at the close of the Sunday service, when the hearts of all were drawn nearer to Christ Himself as decisions were made for Him.

We thank God for giving us this retreat, and we pray that, as we go down into the Valley of Service, we may ever lift our eyes "unto the hills," from whence cometh our help.

Items of Interest

A total of 2,467 heifers were sent for relief according to the August 16, Brethren C. P. S. Bulletin. Many denominations are reported to be participating in this program which, the Brethren say, "is helping to restore the basic economy and livelihood of farmers, and more important, through this it is restoring their self-respect and confidence in the future . . . . cows were only one of the casualties of the war. Men's loss of hope and love have been even more tragic results of the folly of war."

A special relief cereal being manufactured by the Ralston Purina Company can feed a child for a day for a little over six cents. This cereal was originally conceived by Mrs. Arthur Morgan who believed a cereal could be prepared from whole grains that would contain all the nutritional elements necessary for growing children and the undernourished. The product consists of 20 percent hard winter wheat, 10 percent soybeans and 70 percent rolled oats. It contains more than double the protein of the average breakfast cereal.

Advocating an organization of world government, the Standard Oil Company of Ohio recently spent twenty-five thousand dollars carrying an advertisemen in seventy-five Ohio newspapers printing the complete text of a Rollins Conference Resolution which advocated measures which would establish a world government organization.

An effort toward granting amnesty toward war prisoners has been under way. It has in particular emphasized the need for granting amnesty and release of conscientious objectors now in prison for violating the draft law. In Britain all but twenty-six C. O. 's have been released from prison while in the U.S.A. 2,100 remain behind the bars. Recently twenty British writers, artists, and musicians wrote President Truman a letter urging the release of American conscientious objectors. Included in the signatures were those of George Bernard Shaw, Arthur Koestler, T. E. Eliot, and Lawrence Housman.

Sport Two Thousand Years Ago

Nearly all of us have at some time read of the exploits of the gladiators—those men who engaged in combat to entertain the pleasure-seeking crowds. The Romans were prehaps the greatest followers of this type of sport—if such it can be called.

However, the contestants at these ancient games were not always Romans. The gladiators were commonly drawn from prisoners taken by the Romans in their wars, from slaves and from criminals sentenced to death. The lives of many of the latter were spared if their efforts in the arena were considered worthy.

The amphitheatre at Pompeii, thought to have been built in 80 B. C., was able to seat twenty thousand persons. So frequent and popular were these contests that the word amphitheatre came to be synonymous with the scene of a contest.

The earliest of these structures were built of wood. Not until the last century of the Roman republic was stone used and the Colosseum in Rome is perhaps the best known example of the old amphitheatre. Its seating capacity is estimated to have been around fifty thousand.

In July, 1944, shortly after the Allied troops entered the Eternal City, American officials arranged for daily talks to be given at the Colosseum on its history and particular place in the entertainment of Rome's citizens.

The first gladiatorial fights are said to have been staged in the third century before Christ. As the years passed the demand for more contests grew. Originally only men convicted of serious crimes were condemned to the pits, but in later years even minor offenders were similarly punished. Nero is thought to have sent men guilty of fraud to the arena. Even well-born women participated in these exhibitions until a law preventing their taking part was made n A.D. 200.

Apparently reserved seats were known in these days as tickets made of clay and bearing numerals thought to be seat numbers, have been found. And at Pompeii remains of armour and weapons have been unearthed. These were found in a building used as a gladiators barracks.

The expression "thumbs up," meaning good luck is believed to have orginated in the gladiatorial combats. Before the victor slew his fallen foe the crowd would sometimes, by holding aloft their hands with thumbs upraised, signify their desire that the beaten man be spared. In later years of the contests the winner always looked to the spectators for their decision.

RELIEF

Ethiopia

G. Irvin Lehman, who is working with the M. R. C. relief unit at Nazareth, Ethiopia, writes that the past month has been a busy time in the making of the "old cotton ginning mill" into a hospital. The new medical clinic will soon be completed and will be ready for use in the near future. Meanwhile, medical work has been carried on by Dr. and Mrs. Paul Conrad. The clinic report for July indicates that a total of 1,785 people called for medical attention and an average of 8 persons were treated per day. The unit personnel consists of 5 members and 2 are now en route.

Airplane Relief

The China Relief Director of the Lutheran World Convention recently purchased a C-47 transport plane which seats twenty-seven passengers and which operates to transport missionary personnel, medicines, and relief supplies. J. Lawrence Burkholder, M. C. C. worker stationed in Shanghai, has been doing some co-piloting of the plane owned by the Lutherans. Early in July he accompanied a flight north to Haichow, along the coast to deliver relief supplies. On July 5, and 26, he made a trip to Peking carrying missionaries, relief workers, as well as relief supplies.

Holland

Relief efforts continue to be largely a food distribution program. For the past two months we have concentrated heavily on flour distribution so that we are now past the 1,000 ton mark. We can see the end of our flour program in about four weeks. This has been our major activity here in Holland and many people were made happy because of it. The flour is meeting a real need, but it would have been so much better to have distributed it six months before this time. After the flour distribution our food program in Holland will decrease somewhat, since we are reserving stocks for Berlin, the Reconstruction Unit, and the displaced Mennonites in Holland. We feel that it was an excellent opportunity for us to give a relief witness.—Irvin B. Horst.

Bibles for Displaced Persons

Recent shipments of new and used German Bibles include the following: 126 Bibles and 159 Testaments to Holland, 51 Bibles to Berlin, Germany. These will be distributed among displaced Mennonites now residing in those countries.

MATERIAL AID NOTES

Canning Sugar

Efforts to obtain an allotment of sugar for relief canning have not been successful. However, recently a limited number of sugar ration points have become available because some people used their own sugar for CPS canning or contributed canned goods from their shelves without asking for sugar points.

This sugar cannot be issued to individuals for home canning. However, it may be issued when a group canning project is being carried on. The quantity available is limited, therefore it will be necessary to allocate this amount proportionately to the groups requesting it. If you are carrying on a group relief canning project and are in need of sugar, kindly write the M. C. C. immediately. We cannot guarantee that your total needs will be filled but we shall attempt to make as fair a division as possible.

Some communities have asked for voluntary contributions of sugar towards a common pool in order to carry out a community canning project. This means real sacrifice but has proven quite successful in certain areas. In some sections a limited amount of syrup is available. A few groups have reported good results in canning without sugar. We encourage our people to explore every possible means of working out their problem in this connection and regret that we cannot be of greater help in this matter.

Shipments

Official word has been received that a shipment of clothing, tools, and seeds weighing 52,632 pounds cleared New York harbor on or about August 28, 1946, aboard the S. S. Princeton Victory en route to China. The value of the clothing in this shipment totalled $58,886.14 while that of the small amount of tools and seeds included in the shipment totalled $74.51.

The need for clothing in relief areas continues to be great, especially in certain areas such as Germany and Austria. In order that clothing being accumulated for relief purposes may be of maximum benefit during this coming winter, it is suggested that groups and individuals send in their contributions within the near future. Reports from our clothing centers indicate they have processed nearly all clothing which is on hand and are ready to pack contributions as they come in.

Goodwill Christmas Bundles

are now being received at the M. C. C. headquarters, Akron, Pa. These will be packed for overseas shipping so that they will reach their destination in due time. Any bundles which have not yet been sent in should be sent immediately so that the Goodwill Christmas Bundles will reach their destination by Christmas.

Relief Briefs

Farewell services were held for Katherine Duerksen R. N., Mountain Lake, Minnesota, on September 4. She sailed from New York on September 5 for Southampton, England, and will serve in the relief program of Northwestern Europe.

C. P. S.

Present Selective Service deferment policies provide that no one in the age group being drafted can be considered for occupational deferment except on special certification by specific agencies. Farmers and farm workers can still be deferred if the local board is satisfied that they are actually engaged in farming and are essential to agricultural production.

Here are those who may be granted deferment because of the work they are engaged in:

* Highly trained technicians for the OSRD (Office of Scientific Research and Development).

* Students in medicine, dentistry, veterinary medicine and osteopathy.

* Advanced students in the physical sciences and engineering.

* Members of college and university staffs who are teaching physical sciences and engineering.

* Industrial and foundational research experts in the physical sciences and engineering.

* Certain college instructors who are certified by the U. S. Office of Education.

* Supervisory, technical and scientific personnel of the CPA.

* Key construction workers, such as carpenters, plasterers, bricklayers and plumbers who are working on the veterans' housing program.

* Managerial or supervisory personnel, with a mimimum of three years' experience in construction.

* Members of the merchant marine with at least two years' service.

* Employees of the War Shipping Administration.

* Specialized federal employees.

MENNONITE AID

Four Waldensian students, who come from the valleys of northern Italy, arrived in New York on September 3. They spent two days visiting with the M.C.C. headquarters and spoke briefly to the group on Thursday, September 5, at the devotional hour. They brought greetings from the Waldensian churches and spoke of their interest in coming to this country for the puropse of studying in Mennonite colleges. C. N. Hostetler, President of Messiah Bible College, extended greetings and an official word of welcome in speaking for the Mennonite and Affiliated Colleges. Their names and the college which they will attend are as follows: Alessandro Sarti, Bethel College; Aldo Vigliano, Tabor College; Paola Comba, Bluffton College; Adolfo Comba, Goshen College.

Mennonite faith, and are happy to be called by that name. I attribute this resulting atmosphere to those who are laboring there now, and have for so many years labored, in almost painful obscurity. They are not asking for publicity. They are ready to labor on in that same quiet and unpretentious manner in which they have for so many years witnessed for their Lord and Master. Nor am I suggesting that they be publicized, although a healthy recognition is due them. But I predict that the location of our seminary in Chicago, and such a Volunteer Service Unit as was there this summer, will begin to give our people a better appreciation for this work (including all of our city missions), and will thereby indirectly strengthen our city mission work and bring encouragement to our city mission workers.

I said: "Let me walk in the fields."
He said: "No, walk in the town."
I said: "There are no flowers there."
He said: "No flowers, but a crown."

I said: "But the skies are black;
There is nothing but noise and din."
And He wept as He sent me back—
"There is more," He said, "There is sin."

I said: "But the air is thick,
And fogs are veiling the sun."
He answered: "Yet souls are sick,
And souls in the dark undone!"

I said: "I shall miss the light,
And friends will miss me, they say."
He answered: "Choose tonight
If I am to miss you or they."

I pleaded for time to be given.
He said: "Is it hard to decide?
It will not seem so hard in heaven
To have followed the steps of your Guide."

I cast one look at the fields,
Then set my face to the town;
He said, "My child, do you yield?
Will you leave the flowers for the crown?"

Then into His hand went mine;
And into my heart came He;
And I walk in a light divine,
The path I had feared to see.

PAUL AND PASTORS' SALARIES

Looks to me like there's nothing new under the sun. The matter of pastor's salaries is not new. A urch in transition to a paid ministry is not new—ul was caught in it, and he had some very definite ews about the matter. Listen:

"Have we not a right to food and drink? . . . Is it ly Barnabas and myself who have no right to give up orking for our living? What soldier ever serves at s own cost? Who plants a vineyard and yet does t eat the grapes? Or who tends a flock and yet does t taste their milk? . . . The ploughman is meant to ough, and the thresher to thresh, in the hope of aring in the produce. If we sowed the spiritual ain in you, is it a great thing that we should reap temporal harvest from you? If other teachers share at right over you, do not we possess it much more? t we have not availed ourselves of the right, but we dure everything patiently rather than cause the least pediment to the gospel of Christ. Do you not know at those who perform the rites have their food from e sacred place, and those who serve at the altar ve their share of the altar-gifts? In the same way e Lord also directed those who proclaim the gospel get their living by the Gospel."—I Corinthians 9:4- (Weymouth)—George Stoneback, Fairfield, Pa.

BETHEL COLLEGE

The Freshmen orientation program began with a apel service in charge of President Kaufman and ean Goertz on September 3 and will continue through e quarter under the direction of D. C. Wedel. The ening week was spent in placement tests, counselng, physical examinations, fellowship periods, campus urs, and enrollment of Freshmen, with the registraon of upperclassmen on Wednesday and Sophomores Friday. Traditional social activities attending the ening week of school were the tea for the student dy sponsored by the Women's Association, the recepon by the SCA, and the annual Fall Mixer planned the Student Council. The formal opening service s held on Sunday evening, when R. C. Kauffman adessed a large audience in Memorial Hall on "A Porait of the Scholar." Following the program was a reption arranged by the Deans of the College. Regular sswork began Monday morning, September 9.

FREEMAN JUNIOR COLLEGE

Initial figures on enrollment indicate a high rate of crease over last year. Several new faculty members have been added. New head of the Music Department is Ernest Lichti of Reedley, California. He is a graduate of Fresno State Teachers' College and last year attended Westminster Choir College. Recently released from CPS, where he served as Educational director in various camps, is Daniel Neufeld of Dinuba, California. He is a graduate of Whittier College and will head the Physical Education Department. He will also serve as director of Extension Service. Benno Toews of Saskatoon, Saskatchewan, is a graduate of the University of Saskatchewan and has studied at the Evangelical Theological College of Dallas, Texas, for two years. He has a wide experience in the teaching field. He will head the Education Department and will teach some classes in Bible. Miss Viola Franz from Lind, Washington, who graduated from Bethel College, has joined the faculty as instructor in the English Department. The engagement of two of our instructors was announced this summer: Dean Harold Gross to Miss Monica Dirks of North Newton, Kansas, and Miss Bertha Ewert to Mr. Arnold Nickel of Chicago.

OUR BIBLICAL SEMINARY AND BIBLE SCHOOL

September 5, 1946

On August 14 the title and the keys to the Joyce estate on 4614 Woodlawn Avenue were handed over to the institution. That same day the first student family, Rev. and Mrs. Arnold J. Regier, moved into the premises.

On a well landscaped area of 31,412 square feet three brick buildings will give our students nice and well furnished living quarters. Some remodeling and cleaning of the houses is well underway and all rooms are expected to be ready when school begins, September 10.

The institution is most grateful to the Lord and His children for making it possible to provide for those who have dedicated themselves to full time service for Christ, church, and the world.

Repeatedly friends have asked us what the school needs most urgently. Since we definitely believe that the Lord has led to the establishment of the institution, we are confident that He also will provide for all its necessities. He does that through His stewards, His children.

Our most urgent need, we feel, is the return of a loan of $10,000 without interest which should be paid early in October. We pray that the Lord may place this on the hearts of His people, and we are confident that they will respond.

Second. In order to meet the daily expenses, the school must look for a current fund of $2,000 a month. This figure might seem large to some people, but it means only two cents a day for every member of the Conference.

Then we need practically everything in the home: kitchen utensils, dishes and silverware for forty-eight people, linen, pillows, pillowcases, bedspreads, canned and frozen food, potatoes, fresh and dried fruit, etc.

The school mentions these things not because she begs for gifts, but because churches and individuals would like to know in what way they could share in this Conference enterprise.—A. Warkentin.

The Mennonite Mission in the Chaco

by Dr. John R. Schmidt

In Paraguay, South America, in the isolated and emote Chaco is an active Mennonite Mission, small ut complying with the word of the Lord, "Ye shall e witnesses unto me." You have perhaps heard very ttle of this mission, so in this article I would like to cquaint you somewhat with its work and its problems.

Back in 1930 the group of poor Russian Mennonite efugees, who are now the inhabitants of a very small ortion of the vast Chaco, came to make their home ere, where no one else, aside from a small group of eople of like faith from Canada, had dared to go. he Chaco is an area of unpenetrable bush, interspersed ith small plots of grassland called camps. It was always said that in the Chaco no one could possibly live except the Indians, who roam through the whole of this vast area. There are many tribes of Indians in the Chaco, but I will limit myself to the tribe with whom the Mennonite Mission is working, known as the Lengua. Besides Lenguas, we see Chalupe and Toba Indians here.

A sewing class of Indian women taught by Katherine Siemens. They are mostly wives of baptized men. All sewed the dresses which they are wearing. The little girl is Ruthie, saved by Mennonites from infanticide.

The Lengua Indians

First I want to acquaint you a bit with the Lengua Indians. They are a brown-skinned people living very primitively and wandering from place to place. Their homes are huts, dome-shaped and about five feet high

"Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid which is Christ Jesus"

From the editor's point - of - view:

THE GRACE OF GOD must be witnessed to in a clear, strong, warm way if individuals are to be led into a vital experience of it. In order to give such a witness, the life of a Christian must be something like a spiritual dictionary. A dictionary gives the meaning of words. It generally does so by using simpler or more familiar words than the one under consideration. If a dictionary could give the consultant an actual life experience of the word being looked up, it would be even more helpful. Since Christian witnesses are living human beings, they have the power to be such a dictionary. They can furnish life-experience definitions to those who do not know the Good News of Jesus Christ. They can illustrate through their life. A heathen in Africa cannot believe in Jesus Christ unless he hears of Him. Should he hear of Him in the English language and not understand a word of English, he still would be handicapped. Should he understand English, then the more he has experienced the meanings of the words, the better he will understand. The attitude with which someone preaches the Good News may or may not be a witness of Jesus Christ. When grace does abound in the witness then his message about the grace of God takes on added meaning. A person witnesses with more than words. He witnesses with what he is. Through his life he is always tending to give meaning to or take meaning from something or another. If the message of God's grace is to be made pure and plain, then it must be made pure and plain in and through someone's life. Even then it can be said, "The half has never yet been told." But this approach is the simplest and most helpful for those who do not know the riches of Jesus Christ.

THE HARVEST FESTIVAL, rather generally held in September or October, by many churches, offers a special opportunity for rich spiritual experience in thanksgiving and dedication to those rural church people to whom a harvest means so much. A harvest festival suggests special opportunity for the giving of produce and money for the relief of the needy, as well as for other benevolent purposes.

C.O.'s, who participated in "guinea pig" experiments, served in mental hospitals, jumped by parachute on forest fires, etc., have made a rather deep impression in the nation's news. An article on C.O.'s in the September 2 issue of News Week has the following to say about "Two-Legged Guinea Pigs": 'Several hundred volunteered as human guinea pigs. They drank infected water, nose and throat washings, and material from body wastes of jaundice victims. Others itched through weeks of carrying body lice, forbidden to scartch or wash, in tests for DDT. Some were bitten by malaria-carrying mosquitoes to aid in the development of SN-7618. Four CO's lay rigid for two months in plaster casts while their limbs wasted and muscles became flabby to prove that such immobilization was not beneficial in treating fractures Six conchies sweated out a seven-day ordeal on a life raft in Boston Harbor to test emergency food rations.

"The most sensational test was the twelve months of semistarvation which a large group endured at the University of Minnesota. On 1,700 calaries a day, they were obliged to walk 26 miles a week and perform normal duties in addition. They grew listless, irritable, and psychoneurotic. Their legs and joints swelled. They lost 40 per cent in weight. It took them one year to recover fully.

"Although all these tests were voluntary, no CO ever withdrew from any experiment."

From Puerto Rico comes the news that the Legislature of Puerto Rico has "passed a bill to amend th law requiring government employees to take an oath of allegiance to the U.S. It says that this shall not b interpreted as requiring the bearing of arms or as barring from public service or employment persons wh are conscientiously opposed to participation in war.' Some have interpreted this as an indirect vote o thanks to the C.P.S. units which have served in Puert Rico.

All of this seems important in the light of the fac that many of the attitudes now held by the majority were once the views of a minority.

d ten feet in diameter. The framework is made with nt branches which are covered over with straw, aving the sides open and giving no protection from the ld south winds in winter. They cook their meals outle the hut over an open fire. Usually the pot con-ins a mixture of everything, from beans to the guts of imals. They live largely on herbs and game found in e bush, though they love Mennonite home-baked ead and other things they can get as pay for work ich they do.

Their Religion A Spirit Worship

The religion that they have is a spirit worship concted with many fears. They are not seen outside of eir small village after sundown because of roam-g evil spirits. Their medicine men's chief treatment the one of sucking the evil spirit out of the sick body, companied by loud singing and noise. Many of their nces, with the singing which we hear almost nightly, e for the spirit's benefit. When one of their number es, they break up camp, burn all their huts and move ewhere to evade the spirit of the deceased. And so we ve them moving from place to place. If a severely k person gives the appearance that he will die during e night, they leave him with a jug of water and move
. All these beliefs keep them constantly in fear. It a deep darkness in which they wander and still rist died for them also, that they might have peace.

Their Language A Picture Language

Their language is very interesting—a picture lan-age. For instance, rice is "mo-kolyoy-aphatkuk-apuk" ich means "like the egg of the big black-headed ant."
hen they first saw rice it reminded them of the big ck-headed ant's egg and so the substance got its ne accordingly. Milk is "wayki-menak-apying-menik" he juice from the cow's udder. Clock is "lan-oknim" o look on the sun. And so most of their words, especiy new words, are set together. The names of people likewise descriptive and it is often very revealing the person who receives it. Missionary Giesbrecht is okse-apkitkuk", the father who mourns for his child.
ien they first learned to know him, he had lost a le girl and hence the name. A bald-headed man was christened "Ak-hawe-napat," the roof without grass. Their syllables are sharp with a prominent "k" which gives the language a peculiar sound. It is interesting that they give each other German names besides their own Indian names, and so we find Indians named Johann Giesbrecht, Gerhard and other names. Most all of the Indian men speak a fair Low-German which they have learned from the Mennonites.

Indians, A Great Asset

To the white man here, the Indians are a great asset. From the first they did all the hard work for little pay and that pay in foods, etc. They cleared the bush so that the colony people would have land for cultivation and for roads, picked the cotton and cut the kaffir. They are somewhat more demanding now and are also more in demand. They are always friendly and even women and children do not fear them. No Indian has ever been known to harm the people here. They have helped the Mennonites in other ways. Their orientation in the dense bush is almost perfect and they are at home in it, whereas the white man gets lost in it if not careful. If someone has strayed, the Indians are put on the track and usually soon find him.

About As Many Indians as Mennonites

In 1943 there were about 625 Indians in Fernheim, the Russian Mennonite colony, which covers an area of about sixty square miles. The colony consists of eighteen villages and Philadelphia, and on the outskirts of each village one usually finds an Indian village. Close around the center, Philadelphia, are several Indian villages, making the Indian population about equal to the Mennonite population of the town.

Missionary Gerhardt Giesbrecht

Though the mission is supported by a "Missions Bund" and different people have served in different ways, its welfare is largely in the hands of one brother, Missionary Gerhardt Giesbrecht. I owe most of the information for this article to Missionary Giesbrecht, a good friend of ours. A quiet, well-meaning, mirthful man, he is a real friend to the Indians, and they love and respect him greatly. He has had many interesting experiences with them.

"Wild Men"?

When he first got off of the ship which brought them to this land and laid foot on the Chaco soil, he was moved by the sight of an Indian family—man, woman and child. It was a cold day and these people were all but naked and very dirty. When he inquired about them he was told they were "wild men." "Does God create wild men and tame men," he thought? He had always been mission-minded, but now he felt more definitely where his mission work was to be. Even though they came here with nothing to a land from which it was hard to eke out a bare living, he harbored this idea and worked on it, till two years later the question of a mission was taken up in the churches.

Seven baptized boys with Missionary Giesbrecht

The Mission Farm

As no one could give much it was decided to start a mission farm which through its products should be the beginning of a fund and the place used to provide a school, church, etc. for the mission. They had $30.00 for the beginning of the work. They thought that this mission work should be carried on outside of the colony, so they chose a site quite a distance to the south. This, however, has proven unsatisfactory as the Indians like to live close to the Mennonite villages in order to get work and also to be able to buy things from the store with the money they earn. They don't like to be separated from their children, if these are to go to school there. The Mission still owns the farm, but the main work has been transferred to Philadelphia.

The first workers were two families that were willing to work on this farm and with the Indians. Missionary Giesbrecht was at this time chairman of the Mission Board. Two years later he with his family took over the spiritual work there.

Learning The Lengua Alphabet

There were many problems connected with the beginning of the Mission. Through the fact that the Indians knew some Low-German, the missionary got the first hold of the Lengua language. Johann, a young Lengua man well acquainted with both languages, was most helpful to Missionary Giesbrecht in starting the language translation. After he had studied the language for two months, beginning with a vocabulary of about seventy-five words, he started a school, learning more as he taught. He had eight young men and boys in this first school. After nine hours of classwork they could say, read and write the Lengua alphabet. This was encouraging, for it proved that the "wild men" had a capacity to learn, just like other people. The school met out-of-doors under the trees with the students sitting on the ground. Missionary Giesbrecht would dictate and write a letter of the alphabet while the students r peated what he said. He noticed that after each lett they repeated, one of the group would add somethi else. Later he found that this one was giving a wor picture for that letter thus: i-mark and a kaffir se on top, o-chicken egg, U-bucket, M-noise a cow mak and in this way they all remembered the letters. He s that this was essential to them and has used this pl of teaching ever since. After the school was well start the Indians broke up camp for no known reason a that was the end of that school. He has started wi schools innumerable times with the same result. It not that they dislike him or his school, but they are nomadic people and seem to have to move about co stantly. This is what makes the work so difficult.

Rev. Bernard Epp Joins Work

After Missionary Giesbrecht had worked alone a time, Rev. Bernard Epp, Canada, joined him. T task of really learning the language was started at t time. Because Rev. Epp knew the English, an Engli engua wordbook procured from the English Mission o the Lengua in another area could be used. The result as a German-Lengua wordbook. For many hours ohann, Rev. Epp and Rev. Giesbrecht worked together n this, on material to use in their work, and on trans- ting parts of the Bible into the Lengua language. issionary Epp helped in the Mission for over three ears. His wife joined him for the last year and started e idea of taking Indian children into Mennonite omes.

Missionary Has Confidence of Indians

Missionary Giesbrecht won the confidence and ad- iration of the Indians by trying to be one of them. ften he would take a little pack and go out several ays into the bush to live with them. He ate what they e and slept with them, something that would be hard do. It was in the bush that he heard the first Indian ayer. Johann, who was later the first candidate for ptism, had been working with him on the translation the Bible all day and had now gone back to his mp. The missionary was resting in the hammock hen he heard the most pitiful moaning in the camp. e hurried there and found that another Indian had rsuaded Johann's wife to leave Johann and become s wife. Johann was heartbroken and was getting ready leave. Missionary Giesbrecht couldn't persuade him stay but followed him through the bush in the dark. hann was crying as he ran. Finally Giesbrecht over- ok him, talked the whole thing over with him and en said, " Let's pray about it," so they kneeled down d first he and then Johann prayed. Then he could rsuade Johann to return to his own home, but he uldn't go back to the Indian village. He never got s wife back, but the man who had taken her died sud- nly soon after.

The Indians have no special marriage ceremonies, t they usually stay true to each other. Since the aco war, where they learned loose morals from the raguayans, they have fallen in this, and often men ave one wife for another and vice versa.

Simplicity In Mission Work

After three years of what seemed fruitless work on mission farm, Missionary Giesbrecht and family me to Philadelphia to continue work here. Here they uld have a more permanent school and also started eaching services. The sermons have to be the simplest ssible and are best understood if very descriptive. He o teaches them to sing which they do very well. They d in public prayer—truly child-like trustful prayers. has also done much personal work through the ole time.

The Way Opens

He tells of several incidents that helped him to win nfidence. A ready avenue of approach is through their k. A woman lay sick with possible T. B. of the bone, th no hope for recovery. But Missionary Giesbrecht ntinued to pray for her in the presence of the In- ns. God heard his prayer, and today the woman's health is good. Another woman had been given up as dead and had been left with a jug of water. God used him to restore her to her people and thus create great confidence and respect for the "mission man" and to draw the Indians to him through a Christian experience.

Indians and their typical huts

Discouragement

For ten years Missionary Giesbrecht had worked in this manner doing much for the Lord's cause. During this time he had valuable help from Mr. and Mrs. Martin Duerksen, he teaching in the school and she taking in some orphan Indian children into their family of little ones. The Duerksen's are at the present studying for this work in Argentina and will be valuable workers later on. One of the most discouraging things that they had to contend with during this time, strange to say, was the attitude of many of the Mennonites in the colony. Instead of encouraging the work, many were opposed to it. Their contention was that the uncivilized people were happy in the conditions under which they were living, why bother them with the things foreign to them? The real reason for their oppostion seems to have been the fact that they feared that the Indian would cease to be dependent on them and that they would through this lose their cheap and unassuming workers.

The First Converts

In spite of the years of work and effort there were still no converts among the Indians. Often the faithful missionary must have wondered when this time would come. Finally Johann, the before-mentioned Indian, declared himself ready and willing for baptism. The church waited quite some time to grant his request, testing and proving him to see if he was sincere. Then, quite to everyone's surprise, six more young men declared their intention to be baptized also. Oh, what a joy! They were saved and wanted to follow their Lord also in this step. Missionary Giesbrecht questioned them and instructed them as to what the church really meant and what was expected of baptized Christians. They were eager to carry this out. It is common practice for

ASBURY HALL

Ministers' Retreat in Retrospect

by Ronald von Riesen

Bell Tower and Asbury Hall with dining ha and camp store on first floor. Sleeping roor upstairs.

A total of 101 ministers and missionaries and their wives enjoyed the privilege of assembling together for a week of inspiration, fellowship, and recreation on the shore of Lake Okoboji, near Spirit Lake, Iowa. Many new friendships were formed and all found new strength in the quietness of the atmosphere and in confidence with their Creator and with their fellowlaborers.

Some found it rather difficult to stir at the ringing of the 6:30 bell, other were up at 5:30 heating their water for the morning clean-up. Some expected a summer resort but instead found themselves very close to nature. Some spent their afternoons on the lake and were able to take home the traditional fish stories; others spent their time in making leather purses and bags for their friends. Some just lay in the shade and visited as though they had been looking forward to this for years. ALL came hungry and thirsty for the Bread of Life and they were amply rewarded by the studies of I Corinthians by Rev. A. E. Kreider, the discourses on the "Scriptural Basis of Our Faith" by Dr. S. F. Pannabecker and the evening messages Rev. Don. E. Smucker.

Perhaps the most pracitcal were the split sessi for the ministers and their wives, where various p blems of the pastor and missionaries were discuss Each found help in the other's experiences, for in "multitude of counselors there is safety" (Proverbs 14).

Sunday was an unusal day for all of us as th was no anxiety about our morning sermons, for t time we sat in the pew and worshipped together. An i pressive communion service was the climax of morning.

As the week drew to a close, one could sense spirit of oneness that was over all. As we were ab to depart all assembled in a circle, joined hands, sang "God Be With You Till We Meet Again," there was a catch-of our breath over the joy of fell ship that had come to a close. All were satisfied this retreat, sponsored by the Board of Education, w not be the last.—Ronald von Riesen, Executive

What the Retreat Meant to Me

Blessed, uplifting fellowship, inspiration through spiritual truths, relaxation of mind and body—these are some of the benefits the Minister's Retreat have brought me.

—P. P. Wedel, Moundridge, Kansas.

To me the Retreat has been a time of spiritual growth and uplifting, a time of rest, at time of real fellowship with co-workers which is a rare opportunity but is of immense value to a pastor.

—D. D. Klassen, Homewood, Manitoba

Inspiration, spiritual food, closer fellowship with the ministers, knowing them as they really are, not only in their clerical garb. I found them to be human and deeply spiritual. The most wonderful fact about this Retreat is that Christ's great prayer, "That they might be one" is being realized. How we praise the Lord for this work of grace. Then the wonderful fellowship of the wives of the ministers, getting acquainted, discussing their problems as ministers' wives, the spiritual uplift, the mingling of ministers and missionaries certainly was uplifting.

—Aganetha Fast, China Missionary

Spirit Lake was a pioneer move in General Conference life. There is real joy in "blazing the trail" for the years to come. And I believe we did that. Here is one more example of new life in the brotherhood. Thank God for it.

—Don E. Smucker, Princeton, New Jersey

It has been good for us to have been at this retreat. We feel reinvigorated physically and spiritually. We shall take with us into our more isolated Mennonite church that inspiration which we felt we needed to continue in the work of our Lord with joy and much courage and thus render better service to the church we love and have dedicated ourselves to serve by the grace of God.

—Hilda and H. N. Harder, Aberdeen, Idaho

A new and greater appreciation of my fellow ministers, both the older and the young; a real realization of my own nothingness, coupled with at least a deep-seated desire to be used more effectively of my Lord.

—Ted Roth, Whitewater, Kansas.

To get better acquainted with my fellow ministers, enjoy their fellowship, and see the earnest desire for greater unity in our Conference, are the things that impressed me most.

—E. S. Mullett, Wayland, Iowa

(1) I have again been confirmed in this, differences may be differences because of the small perspective our limited environment leads us, but they have little—sometimes no—importance to the greater views that find themselves to us as we fellowship with those from many environments. (2) I have learned to know men who have within themselves great possibilities of genuine and Christian leadership in our Conference.

—H. D. Epp, Henderson, Nebraska

The Retreat was a great blessing to me. I enjoyed the ministers' split sessions where the problems of our work could be openly discussed. The Bible studies were uplifting and inspiring. I also appreciate the warm spirit of fellowship with which we as representatives from across the border were treated. We are eagerly looking forward to the next opportunity of this kind.

—John Wichert, Vineland, Ontario

The spirit of fellowship and understanding of each other; the evident devotion to the cause of Christ on the part of all was encouraging and inspiring. The discourses on the "Scriptural Basis of our Faith" was especially helpful in deepening and broadening my appreciation of the principles to which our Mennonite church should still bear witness. I have become convinced more than ever that in general our ministers stand upon a sound scriptural basis.

—J. J. Voth, North Newton, Kansas

The profound truths from God's Word as related to the Christian believer's faith and walk, especially in the light of our cherished Mennonite background, were brought to our attention and remembrance in such a vibrant, satisfying way that it warmed my soul and gave me the deep desire anew to serve my Lord and Master in a more consecrated way. It seemed I was again sitting under Prof. C. H. Wedel in Mennonite History and Bible Study. I thank God for our young ministers who are taking up the torch of evangelical teaching and preaching where those who have passed on laid it down. As ministers' and missionaries' wives who have perhaps the least training for duties which they assume, the hours of informal discussion of common problems was most profitable. May this first Retreat be a pattern for similar gatherings in the future.

—Mrs. P. R. Schroeder, Mt. Lake, Minnesota

I was impressed with the deep-seated hunger of all ministers for genuine fellowship with one another When children of God are truly "in Christ" differences of opinion are not permitted to spoil their fellowship. My wife and I will make every effort to attend the next Minister's Retreat.

—J. M. Regier, Hillsboro, Kansas

It was with great hesitation and not a few misgivings that I finally decided to attend the Retreat, considering myself only as a lay preacher. However, no one needs to hesitate on that account, for on arriving on the camp grounds, I at once felt a feeling of genuine welcome. And a wonderful spirit of Christian love, unity, and fellowship prevailed into which I too could heartily enter in. Many rich blessed truths of God's Word were again brought to our hearts, with emphasis upon the vital things pertaining to the minister's and the Christian life and conduct. Never have I enjoyed such simple ground of fellowship and brotherly love as with these brethren from far and near. It is with a

Mennonite Bookstore Moved

by J. M. Sudermar

The General Conference Bookstore which up to the present time was located in the Headquarters building at 722 Main Street, Newton, Kansas, has been moved to its new location at 710 Main Street. Several things made this change necessary. In the first place, the Headquarters building did not provide enough room for the desk-space needed by the various conference workers and their assistants and also for the bookstore. Then, too, the commotion caused by the customers going in and out created too much disturbance for the conference workers. In the third place, more workers will in time need desk-space in the Headquarters building, and eventually all the space in the building will be needed for this purpose. These facts made it imperative to move the bookstore to another location.

Some members of our conference constituency probably will ask the question, "Why have another conference bookstore at Newton when we already have the bookstore at Berne?" The Publication Board asked itself this same question, and after careful consideration of the situation came to the following conclusions: First, since our conference churches and Sunday Schools are located in practically every section of the United States and Canada, better and quicker service can be given if the conference maintains the store at Berne and also one farther to the West, Secondly, considerable transportation expense can be saved if supplies can be shipped from the two places instead of only from the one. A large percentage of the business carried on by the conference stores is mail order business. Thirdly, since Newton lies near the center of the largest Mennonite settlements in the United States, it is logical that conference bookstore be located at this place. Thi enables a large number of conference affiliated peopl to come in person to make their purchases and thereby adds to their convenience and saves them the extr expense of transportation. Last but not least, sinc Newton is the established headquarters of our conference, it is only natural to expect that a conference bookstore would be maintained at this place. No doub a careful study of the situation will convince mos unprejudiced inquirers that the Publication Boar acted wisely by establishing the bookstore at Newto

Mention should be made here that our conferenc has for a number of years maintained a book depository in Canada for the convenience of the Canadia churches, and at the last session of the Board it wa decided to enlarge this depository so that bett service might be rendered to the Canadian churche More about this will appear in the conference pape in the near future.

In conclusion we wish to add a word of cauti by saying that it is not the intention of the Publication Board that the maintenance of several conferen bookstores should be viewed from the standpoint competition. On the contrary, it is hoped that t competitive element will not be allowed to enter in all and that purchases from any of the conferen stores will be made solely on the basis of convenien to the purchaser and the saving of transportation e pense.—J. M. Suderman, Secretary of Publication Boa

Relief Needs - Only Sensational?

by Robert Root

One of my strongest impressions during my present brief trip back to the United States is that people are confused about the food situation abroad. For example, yesterday the barber in my home town while cutting my hair asked what the truth of the relief story was. He said he had heard the big appeals but that he had talked to G.I.'s who had seen the war areas and that they thought the need was exaggerated.

"Well, I have met lots of G.I.'s who have been greatly concerned about the poor life of friends they made in nations abroad. But, surpising as it may seem, I can understand the point of view of those who say they haven't seen so much starvation in Europe. Sometimes I think myself that there's a tendency to overplay the horror angles.

The reason for this is plain: Those of us in relief work tend to trot out the terrifying stories and photographs for the same reason that those of us in newspaper work put big headlines on sensational divorce items. Some instinct seems to tell us that only thus can we shock people awake and make them pay attention.

There are, of course, sensational relief items. Here are a few I've run into:

1. German prisoners of war whose skinny arms and legs were as skeletal as those of Buchenwald inmates.
2. Another German POW half-a-continent away who was coughing weakly and was expected by doctors to die immediately of malnutrition.
3. Two boys without any shoes in Berlin.
4. The boy in Coblenz who had to borrow shoes to get to the Swiss barracks to be given another pair.
5. The skeletal German deportee, bedfast for two months for lack of food, lying on a mattress, with ragged coats as his only sheet and bedding.

But I have to agree with any G.I. who tells me he never saw such. For these instances are not typical, and we can be thankful they are not—for if they were, the relief situation would be so overwhelmingly hopeless that we might as well toss in the sponge. If five per cent, or even only one per cent, of a population is literally naked and starving, it means that the bulk of the rest are in desperate need of food and clothing.

Therefore, the fact that dying people do not lie in the gutters of European cities does not mean that their need is not tremendous. As sensational divorces lead thoughtful minds to a really serious divorce situation, so thinking people should go beyond the sensational relief reports to the more widespread general hardship that they indicate.

I can give a picture of a corner of this relief problem by just recounting some facts I learned in a recent trip to Austria. This is just an objective account for thinking people, without a sensational attempt to "play it up":

One saw almost no food in shops in Vienna. In one place I did see a few American cans of meat, obviously from relief supplies. Crates of lettuce were the only food I saw for sale. Several relatively well-dressed people were digging greens in public parks. The "official" calorie level was around 700 calories a day, but I have since read that it has been raised—to about half the necessary minimum to maintain adult health!

In two schools I saw firsthand the feeding being given children between classes. The American churches, through the World Council of Churches, contributed some flour which went into this soup—a small amount, admittedly, but so much better than nothing. The gaunt principal of one school, whose loose collar showed how he had lost dozens of pounds, said that from time to time children become so weak in class they have to lie down.

A church superintendent in Vienna said that one church in the city had lost thirty of the 250 in its congregation during the last winter. Most of those who died were elderly. Starvation was perhaps not the direct cause, but cold and malnutrition had sapped them so that they fell an easy prey to diseases.

This superintendent's little grandson was a wistful, big-eyed child with long thin arms and legs. His aunt who was caring for him said that he had been growing taller but staying the same weight. He was hungry all the time, but of course there was no extra food to give him. Even after being fed at school, he came home asking for more to eat. When I think how hard it would be to turn my little boy down if he said he was hungry, I know how many European parents feel when they have to say, "There's nothing to eat."

I returned to Switzerland on a train of the Swiss Red Cross which was taking 470 Austrian children to be fed three months in Swiss homes. Most of them were thirty and forty pounds underweight and, looking at one of their number who was only seven pounds under, they asked how it happened that she could go to Switzerland!

The Swiss fed them lightly on such things as bread and soup, for they explained that to give more to stomachs not accustomed to it would have been unsafe. Some of them told me they guessed they had been hungry most of the time for the last year.

Perhaps that is neither starvation nor drama. But it is something very serious about which people who can use their heads can feel concern. Even if the casual observer may think they only look "a little thin," the young in many parts of Europe get a poor start, and adults fall before tuberculosis and others killers when the food is at present levels. Through "Good Samaritan" channels of the churches, Americans can feel the satisfaction of helping a bad situation so that it will not become as terrifying everywhere as it has already been in some dramatic instances.

Ludwig Van Beethoven

A life that overcame great handicaps

by Russell J. Robinson

BEETHOVEN IS KNOWN to the world today as a genius in the field of musical composition. Yet, when he composed his "First Symphony" at the age of thirty, he was looked upon as a crank rather than a master of his art. In fact, his teacher once remarked of him, "As a composer he is hopeless."

Beethoven's father, Johann, was a poor man. He started his son's musical education when he was but four years of age with the study of the violin and clavier. At seven years, Beethoven was making public appearances and six years later was appointed assistant court organist at Bonn, Germany.

At seventeen years of age Beethoven was in Vienna studying under Mozart. His instructions were cut short, by the death of his mother. His father, shiftless and weak-willed, had become addicted to drink. The support of the family (he had two younger brothers) thus became Ludwig's responsibility.

This state of affairs played havoc with his disposition. He became sullen, morose, sarcastic. In conversation his replies were reduced to a series of growls. This attitude, coupled with his swarthy appearance, caused his fellow-players in the orchestra at Bonn to dub him "the mad Spaniard."

Despite this personality, or lack of it, and the fact that he had a most fiery temper Beethoven was able to make and keep a host of friends. One of them was Prince Carl Lichnowsky, a member of the Austrian aristocracy. So great was the Prince's regard for Beethoven that he took him into his home, granted him an annual pension of three hundred dollars and introduced him into the elite of society.

For a time Beethoven enjoyed the gay social affairs, the contact with the ladies of the social set and his popularity with them. Soon however, he became bored. His gruff and sarcastic manner again asserted itself. As a result he withdrew within himself. He once remarked, "I have been put into the world, not to enjoy a pleasant life, but to accomplish a great work."

Meanwhile, the music critics of that time, while singing his praises as a player refused to see his ability as a composer. Beethoven yearned to create and the fact that his compositions were belittled or entirely ignored caused him much mental anguish.

In his "Second Symphony" Beethoven flouted the opinions of the critics. In this composition he so far departed from the accepted musical form as to stir up a storm of protest from the outraged critics. Ludwig paid these outbursts no heed. In his artist's sou he knew that he was right, his critics wrong.

As though it were not enough that the critics assailed him, nature launched an attack of her own. He was thirty years of age when his hearing became impaired. The defect grew rapidly worse until within three years he had become totally deaf. With such a handicap many men would have submitted to failure Not Beethoven. Forced into solitude even among crowds, he suffered bitterly. "This affliction," he once remarked, "is more difficult for the artist than for any other man."

Rather than ending his career, his deafness seeme to bring about an increase in the volume and powe of his compositions. Within five years he produce four symphonies as well as the damatic opera "Fidelio" and his "Appassionata Sonata." One of th greatest of Beethoven's works was his "Fifth Symphony."

In all, Beethoven produced over five hundred musical creations. Though he lived alone in the mids of his fellow-men and could hear no man's voice ther was a greater Voice which penetrated within him That was the voice of God. As Beethoven once remarked, "I live alone, but I do not regret it, for know that God is closer to me than to the others."—Highway.

Middle District Young People Adopt Resolutions

Resolutions were adopted at the last Middle District Young People's Conference. The following are those resolutions:

1. Each C. E. Society send at least one delegate to represent their group at the M. D. C. Young People's Session, and that those societies who have not helped support the 1945-46 Budget (C.P.S., $150; Relief, $150; Expenses of Vine Press, $80; Traveling expenses, $75; making a total of $455.00), promptly make special effort to do so, so that our goal might be realized. The time to get in delinquent quotas to be extended to July 1.
2. We the M.D.C.Y.P., emphasize a progressive educational program including discussions of social problems in the light of the Christian Gospel,—both domestic and international.
3. Mennonite young people take advantage of and cooperate with our denominational schools, hospitals and other institutions.
4. We be on the alert for techniques and methods of promoting good will, understanding and genuine love between classes, races, creeds and nationalities.
5. We investigate the possibilities of forming service units to meet the needs of given individuals or groups and urge young people to individually find out what occupations in relief work and missions are open for them, and to try to train for at least one year of service in this field.
6. We make special effort to propagate the Biblical doctrine of non-resistance during peace time: also, that the young people of the conference investigate the possibilities of an extensive radio peace program.
7. We give every assistance to returning service men (both C.P.S. and armed service) to help re-establish them in our communities and churches.
8. We remember those of our number still in C.P.S. and the armed service with letters and in our prayer.
9. In the name of Christ we extend a hearty and sincere welcome to the youth of the twenty-two Central Confernce churches that recently became a part of the General Conference.
10. The publication of the Vine Press be continued as it endeavors to unite us through this paper and correspondence. All money should be taken out of the budget for subscriptions of the Vine Press and that it be sent to all Middle District Conference societies.
11. That the very earnest and enthusiastic missionary interest shown by the M.D.Y.P.U. be implemented by having the executive committee take immediate steps with the home missions committee to find a suitable field somewhere in the South and a satisfactory worker for us to give our full support.

Halstead C. E. Holds All-Day Retreat

August 27 proved to be the highlight of the Christian Endeavor year for the Halstead Young People's Society. The event was the fourth annual all-day retreat. Again a large number availed themselves of this opportunity to spend a day in meditation, study, and play.

The Harvey County Park was chosen as the place of the retreat. After registration the group spent a half hour in singing hymns. This was followed by a talk by the guest speaker, David Suderman, who spoke to the group on profitable ways of using leisure time. The remainder of the morning was spent in a discussion of this subject.

At noon a picnic was enjoyed. The afternoon meeting was opened by singing fun songs. The group then was divided into three groups, program, project, and social, to make and discuss plans for the coming year. After assembling again, reports were given from each group. Judging from the reports and by the cooperation of all, a big year should be ahead for the society. It was decided to undertake again the potato project, trying to profit by this year's mistakes. The project proved to be a good means of unifying the group during the summer months when no regular meetings are held, besides also aiding the society somewhat financially. Following the afternoon meeting softball was played until supper time.

The day was climaxed by an impressive campfire meeting. With the group seated around the glowing embers of the dying campfire all joined in singing several hymns and a short devotional period, followed by a brief talk on the value of music by Mr. Suderman. The pastor, Rev. Jacob Friesen, then led the group in singing several appropriate songs followed by a short message, challenging each one present to keep on "climbing higher." After the singing of "We are Climbing Jacob's Ladder" the group quietly disbanded.

Items of Interest

From September 2 to 7, the third annual International Workshop in Visual Education was held at Green Lake, Wisconsin. The purpose of the workshop is to promote the best materials and methods in the use of visual materials in the church according to Dr. Mary Leigh Palmer who has been responsible for arranging the workshop. With visual aids and materials being used ever more by the churches, the workshop idea becomes significant.

A conference of Young Churchman was held at Lakeside, Ohio, from September 3-6. It was under the sponsorship of several inter-church organization including the International Council of Religous Education and the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America. The purpose of the Conference was to develop and train "young men in local churches over the country for more effective Christian leadership."

A National Adult Work Planning Conference was held at Lake Geneva, Wisconsin, July 28 to August 4. This conference had as its objective the problem related with planning and developing a program for the adults of the church, which "means combining in one balanced program for the men and women of local churches all the causes and interests represented by the various denominational boards and agencies . . ."

The year 1945 was a notable one for the Church of Scotland from the financial point of view. The increase for the year of eighty-four thousand three hundred and sixty-six pounds was largely accounted for by contributions received in response to special appeals, particularly for the National Church Extension Scheme. Yet ordinary funds were more than maintained.

A statement from the Lorraine Avenue Mennonite Church, Wichita, Kansas, indicates very clearly how different the program of a city church must be from that of a country church because of the difference in the situation of each. One outstanding difference is the close contacts which are possible with many non-church people within the neighborhood of the church. Opportunities to serve and bring in these people are being sought and used where possible. One excellent means it that of the week-day school being offered school children.

The American policy of "getting tough" in her foreign relations has recently cause the London press to question the wisdom of following that line. Said a veteran Washington observer: "A policy of firmness may lead to peace, but it never has in the past." Apparently, the general opinion of the public favors a tough attitude which says "we will go anywhere we please."

The United Brethren Church will, in its General Conference to be held November 16 at Johnstown, Pennsylvania, present a plan for organizing the youth of the church in a Youth Fellowship. At this same conference the United Brethren Church and the Evangelical Church will be officially united into one body, the Evangelical United Brethren Church. The new youth fellowship being proposed will be The Youth Fellowship of the Evangelical United Brethren Church. It will have its own officers elected quadrennially. It will work under the direction of the General Board of Christian Education. Local Christian Endeavor societies and Otterbein Guild organizations will have available a choice of two kinds of organization within the Youth Fellowship organization. A part of the program of this organization will be a great missionary project.

September 17 is New Year's Day according to the Jewish calendar. This coming Jewish year will be 5707. On September 26, the solemn and picturesque holiday, Yom Kippur, is to be celebrated. Yom Kippur is the Day of Atonement (see Leviticus 16 and 23). On that day, in Old Testament days, the high priest, stripped of his ceremonial robes and clad in a simple white robe, entered the holy of holies and sprinkled the blood "upon the mercy seat and before the mercy seat."

all of the Indians, men, women and even children to smoke and drink. He showed these boys the bad effect of strong drink and forbade it. He feels sure that none of them have taken a drink since. He felt he need not necessarily forbid smoking but once as they were speaking of it he asked them, "Why do you think that I don't smoke?" and they replied, "Because you are a Christian." "Yes," said Missionary Giesbrecht, "And I dont think that Jesus smoked either." That was all that was said, but none of them have smoked since.

On February 24 of this year, a lovely morning, these seven young men were baptized by immersion. The whole colony had assembled to see this first baptism and to ask God's blessing upon the young converts. Many of the colony people changed their attitude as to the value and the necessity of this wonderful work. Pray for these young men, our first Lengua Mennonites, that they might remain true.

A Testimony

One incident about the testimony that they are now giving. Eskert's five-month-old baby, Eva, lay sick with pneumonia. Missionary Giesbrecht had been called and had told them most of the Bible stories where Jesus heals the sick, and had prayed that she might recover. It was very cold and the little one got worse and worse The doctor was called and went to the village with Missionary Giesbrecht. Loud noise greeted them. The men were chanting, the women crying, the children screeching at the top of their voices and the dogs barking. Three medicine men were bending over the bare child and trying to suck out the evil spirits. But the Christian father of the child was sitting quietly at the entrance of the hut with bowed head. As Missionary Giesbrecht spoke the noise quieted down till all was still. The doctor ordered the baby to be brought to the hospital. Today little Eva is still with us. All, and especially the missionary, are rejoicing that she is better. The mother accompanied by Eckert comes regularily to nurse it and they are very anxious to have it back, and they can as soon as the weather will be somewhat warmer. They have asked Missionary Giesbrecht for better houses so that their little ones will be warm in the winter, like the baby is in the hospital.

They are a testimony in other ways, too. Without the missionary's knowledge, they conduct preaching and song services in different villages of their own people. Their sincerity and faith often puts us to shame. They meet regularily for prayer meeting at Missionary Giesbrecht's place two times a week. And their prayers are amazing, he says. Each time they pray that God should protect the missionary families, Bernard Epp and Jacob Franz, who are on their way over here. They pray that He may loose the tongues of the two girls from here that are studying the language at this time.

Plans For The Future

I have already intimated something of the plans for the future. At a recent Mission Board meeting it was decided to join with the Mennonite Brethren Conference in the States (though the Bund is composed of the different Mennonite churches here), and try to enlarge the work. Two missionaries, Epp and Franz, with their families are expected here any time and will be a much needed addition. It is fortunate that Rev. Epp already knows the language to some extent, having been in the work here before. Rev. Franz will very probably start work with the Chalupe Indians. Two colony girls have heard the call to serve in the Mission, one a graduate nurse from our hospital (Annie Janz), and are now learning the difficult language with Missionary Giesbrecht's help.

Help For The Burdened

In the missionary's home hanging on the wall is a motto which reads thus: "Helyootam, olhathyowaksik sat apkilpatam komaskuk sat apkilyampay. Matt. 11:28." "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest." Over and over Missionary Giesbrecht has to tell them how Jesus wants to take their burdens and they listen with great interest. In other parts of the Chaco, where the Indians have heard of missionaries, they are begging them to come and give them the Gospel. Pray that we all may be faithful witnesses as we work among this heathen people and that many may give Him their burdens.

Enriching Bible Studies, seasons of prayer in the lakeside twilight, penetrating presentations of our Mennonite traditions and our theological problems, lively discussions of our common concerns, eating together, washing dishes together and playing volley ball together —All these experiences and many others helped to make the first ministerial retreat spiritually enriching, mentally refreshing, socially satisfying and physically restful to me and my family.

College and Seminary News

BETHEL COLLEGE

Though registration is still incomplete, enrollment at the end of the first week reached 364, the largest at any one time in the history of the school and more than twice the number of last year. Class distribution at present runs: Freshman, 176; Sophomores, 61; Juniors, 58; Seniors, 43; and Special Students, 25. Kansas students number 267, but twenty-three other states are represented as well as six countries—fifteen from Canada, two from Puerto Rico, one each from Belgium, Italy, and India, and five from Holland, with other applicants planning to arrive later in the year. There are enrolled 161 women and 203 men, of which about fifty have returned from the armed forces and eighty from CPS. Thirty-five married students are living in college apartments. Housing facilities, though crowded, can care for a few more students, especially in the government trailers for G.I.'s.

FREEMAN JUNIOR COLLEGE

The enrollment so far showed a 15 per cent increase over last year in the Academy department and a 157 per cent increase in the College department. There has also been an increase in the number of students rooming on the campus and in town although the majority of the students still live at home and come in each day by car or school bus. The Dining Hall is again doing very well. It is especially busy during the noon hour. Friday afternoon the annual Faculty-Student reception was held. In the evening the faculty met with the Board of Education in a joint business meeting. After the meeting the group adjourned to the Dining Hall for lunch and social visiting. Such meetings foster unity and a better understanding of mutual problems. This week Rev. John C. Wenger of the Goshen College faculty has been conducting meetings in the Gym. These have been sponsored by the Ministerial Association of the community. His talks to the students each morning in chapel were inspirational. The Community Program Service of the school will present several outstanding numbers this year. Among them will be a lecture by Foreign Correspondent, Howard Pierce Davis, a violin and piano concert by Michel Gibson and Irving Schwerke, a concert by Baritone John Gurney, and a spring concert by the famous Don Cossacks.

BLUFFTON COLLEGE

Registration at the close of the first day of classes totaled 232 students of college rank. Of this number 124, or 53 per cent, are Mennonites. Late comers are expected to swell the total to about 250. Included in the student body are one student from Mexico, two from Canada, one from Puerto Rico, one from Italy, and one from Syria. Four more students are expected from Canada if they can get clearance, one from Puerto Rico is temporarily delayed in New York, and three are expected soon from Holland. Activities related to the opening of school will be completed during the week of September 15. On Friday evening, Sepetmber 13, the all college mixer was held in the gymnasium. A "Truth and Consequences" program was held the following evening, with freshman answering the questions. A candle light service was held in the Chapel on Sunday evening. This climaxed the freshman induction program. The entering class this year is substantially larger than any that has ever entered the college.

sonage which will be ready for occupancy very soon. Rev. and Mrs. Regier and small daughter are making their home temporarily with Mr. and Mrs. Eli Tschetter. Rev. Victor P. Graber of Delft, Minnesota, will conduct a series of special revival meetings from October 13 to 25. He will also be one of the principal speakers at the Sunday School convention to be held at the Emmanuel Church near Doland on October 20. Mr. and Mrs. Peter B. Hofer were the honorees at a miscellaneous shower given recently at the church. Mr. Hofer has received his discharge from the armed forces. He served in the Italian theatre of war where he met his wife, the former Clara Polverino.—Mrs. J. E. Walter, Reporter.

—First Church, Philadelphia, Pa., Rev. John W. Boehr faithfully supplied our pulpit from March 17 to September 1. September 4 he rendered a sacred concert for us. This sermon in song was his last public appearance in the east for the present, since he recently accepted a teaching position in Grace Bible Institute. With his family he left Philadelphia September 5 to go to Omaha, Nebraska. His brother Richard, a student at Wheaton College, will supply our pulpit on September 8. Beginning September 29 Rev. Wesley Ewert will be our supply pastor. He comes from Canada and is planning to complete his seminary work this fall at Hartford Theological Seminary.—Mrs. H. S. Weiss, Corr.

—First Church, Nappanee, Indiana: At our union service the other Sunday evening, held at the community park, Dr. J. E. Hartzler of Goshen showed his pictures of the Holy Land. One evening ten juniors and intermediates, accompanied by two of the Bible school teachers entertained twenty-five children from a migrant farm near here at Plymouth, Indiana. They presented the children with the Klean-Up Kits they had made in vacation Bible school.—Mrs. Loyal Corwin, Corr.

Harder formerly worked with the Arizona Indians and now is the principal of the Berean Academy at Elbing. Our pastor and his wife enjoyed the "mountain top" experience at Spirit Lake, Iowa, and are looking forward to similar vacations in the year to come. "It is more blessed to give than to receive" was beautifully illustrated September 6 when twenty-five "Goodwill Christmas Bundles" were gathered to be sent to children of war torn countries. Mrs. Waldo Harder spoke to the children and Rev. H. J. Dyck invoked God's blessing upon the children and their gifts.—Mrs. Louis A. Janzen, Corr.

Voth, who is traveling in the interest of the Women's Missionary Societies, spoke in our church in the evening of September 6. On September 11 Miss Elizabeth Foth and Rev. Ervin Wedel spoke in our church of their respective work. Many of our young people have again left for the different schools. We will miss them in our church activities. The polio ban, which kept the children and young people from attending church activities for six weeks, is over.—Helen Penner, Corr.

—The Lorraine Avenue Church, Wichita, Kansas, is building a new house of worship. Dr. J. H. Langenwalter, pastor, wrote on Sepetmber 17: "The rough flooring for the main floor will probably be all laid by night. That will be followed by the laying of the walls above the main floor. The laying of the corner stone is planned for a few weeks from now."

That They May Be One

"That they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us; that the world may believe that thou hast sent me.

And the glory which thou gavest me I have given them; that they may be one, even as we are one:

I in them, and thou in me, that they may be made perfect in one; and that the world may know that thou hast sent me, and hast loved them, as thou hast loved me.

Father, I will that they also, whom thou hast given me, be with me where I am; that they may behold my glory, which thou hast given me: for thou lovedst me before the foundation of the world.

O righteous Father, the world hath not known thee: but I have known thee, and these have known that thou hast sent me.

And I have declared unto them thy name, and will declare it: that the love wherewith thou hast loved me may be in them, and I in them." John 17: 21-26.

"And as they were eating, Jesus took bread, and blessed it, and brake it, and gave it to the disciples, and said, Take, eat; this is my body.

And he took the cup, and gave thanks, and gave it to them, saying, Drink ye all of it;

For this is my blood of the new testament, which is shed for many for the remission of sins." Matthew 26:26-28.

World Wide Communion Sunday, October 6

"Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid which is Christ Jesus"

From the editor's point - of - view:

WORLD WIDE COMMUNION SUNDAY, which is to be observed October 6, finds its basis in the prayer of Jesus, "Holy Father, keep through thine own name those whom thou hast given me, that they may be one, as we are." John 17:11b. Christians all over the world, as well as Christians within nations, are still not very much one in the sense working together as the closely connected organs of one body with one Head. Thus in event of war ties to nation usually are stronger than the ties to Christian world brotherhood, and Christians fight against Christians. Even now members of the great Christian Body are suffering, while other members are living in good means. Mennonites have been very divisive. However, in their principle of non-resistance they have been in line with the unity of the Christian Church the world around. Furthermore, they now are making significant contributions to that Church unity by carrying on relief work. The pastor of a Protestant Reformed Church of Frankfort, Germany, wrote the following after having received three sacks of flour from a shipment made by Mennonites of the Hillsboro, Kansas, community: "Thanking you very much for your kind gift which gave courage and faith to many old, despairing and starving people. That it is not only the gift itself but also the spirit of peace-making and good will which we all of us have felt to be linked with this action." Thus Mennonites are fellowshipping with other Christians by sharing bread with them. Mennonites seem to find their best basis of unity in acts of love. Perhaps, it is from this approach that Mennonites will find something very suggestive in the thought of World Wide Communion Sunday to the end that someday maybe all may come closer to Christ's ideal: ". . . that they may be one, as we are."

THE YOUNG CHURCH MEN, who met at Lakeside, Ohio, September 3-6, represented a unique and important group. Three hundred fifty delegates—all of them under thirty and 90 per cent of them veterans—met and discussed "how they might help strengthen their local churches." Various topics were treated in workshop discussion groups. One of these on worship recommended the establishment of "a sermon committee to canvass members on topics they want most to hear preached." These young people seem to feel that too often the minister is "in the dark" as to what the most pressing problems and concerns of his hearers happen to be. A discussion group on "Young Adult Programs" agreed "That among youth groups there now tends to be lack of purpose and that the social aspects were sometimes not related directly enough to the central purpose of the church." Has the time come to re-evaluate the purpose of our C.E. programs? The young churchmen were also sensitive to pressing current issues. The conference in full session passed a special recommendation which "urged the exchange of young churchmen with Russia in order to foster better relations with that nation." John B. Quick, now a seminary student after three years in the Air Corps, said in an address: "There is much that the Church can do to meet the predicament of the world. She should begin, first of all, in her own backyard; for she too is a part of this predicament. The Church has too simply equated Christian values with secular values. Democracy, isolationism, the status quo are not necessarily Christian values. Labor unions are not forms of heresy nor is the voice of youth. The Church cannot avoid current issues. The members of every Church are greatly affected by current issues. The Church should first of all seek to place a Christian perspective on current issues, and though she can derive no absolute good from them, she should, in the light of Christian values, seek the greatest good in them. At the present time, the Church should be foremost in the campaign for feeding and clothing a destitute world. She would be prepared to challenge, both in the homes about her and in the seats of government, all talk about the inevitability of an immediate Third World War. Certainly all efforts to insure peace have not yet been exhausted." He further said, "Finally, her voice should be raised loudest against all forms of man's inhumanity to man, both at home and abroad. A complacent Church is an irresponsible Church." The young church men just referred to are planning to continue their work. What these young men, so many of whom were in the war, will try to make of the Church should be significant.

How to Call a Minister

by P. K. Regier

It is with a good deal of hesitation that I accept the editor's request to write an article on how to call a minister. The reasons for this are obvious. In the first place it may seem presumptuous that a minister should be telling the churches how to call a minister. Then too, there is such a divergence of practice and conviction on this point that one wonders how much good could be accomplished by writing on this matter. However, there are some basic standards and principles in regard to this important question that churches would do well to consider them for their own best interest as well as for the best interest of the minister who is to be called. This article, then, is written in the hope that just a few guiding principles may be set forth to help both the church and the minister.

To every minister who is to serve a parish there must be an inward call and an outward call. The inward call is outside of the scope of the present discussion. Suffice it to say that as the result of the inward call there must be a deep, abiding conviction that it is the will of God that he should consecrate himself to the ministry of the Word and that God has called him to this task. The outward call, however, is also necessary, otherwise there would be no field of service. The outward call which a congregation extends to a minister is the theme of this treatise.

To begin with, it would seem reasonable that the church should come to a good understanding with itself as to what kind of a man it wants for a pastor. Too often the choice is made on the basis of instinctive impressions and attachments. It is perfectly possible that a man might be an all around success in one church and more or less of a failure in another, depending on whether or not the qualifications of the man and the needs of the Church are well matched to each other.

Having determined what manner of man it would have for its pastor, the Church sets forth in search of him. As a general rule it is well if a committee is formed to whom the matter of procuring a candidate is intrusted. This committee should be carefully selected, representing all the different elements of which the church is composed, and embodying the best wisdom of the congregation.

This committee should then get in touch with sources having the information regarding possible candidates, such as the Placement Committee or our own Seminary. To candidates brought to its notice the committee should apply prayerfully such standards as have previously been determined for their particular church. When a minister is found who seems to promise a fair measure of these qualifications, his name, with the facts which the committee has learned about him, should be reported to the church. It would be well if this committee, or some member of the committee could first see the candidate in some pulpit, preferably without his knowledge, that they may testify concerning him not from hearsay merely, but from personal knowledge.

Should a candidate be invited to preach a trial sermon in the church before a call is extended to him? The answer to this question is not easy to give. If the candidate is a man well known in all the churches, such an exhibition of himself is quite superfluous. Even if he is not well known this practice is of rather doubtful expedience. The test is apt to be entirely unfair. The better preacher he is, the less likely is he to be quite himself in such an ordeal. The consciousness that he is on trial will not be conducive to create a high spiritual frame of mind. The church which insists on first hearing a candidate, may therefore, adopt a method by which its own ends are apt to be defeated. However, the arguments are not all against such a practice. It still may be possible for a good man to forget himself, even though he is on trial, and many happy pastorates have been initiated by this method. On the whole, however, it is safe to say, it is not only less embarrassing for the minister, but wiser for the church, if the whole matter be intrusted to a wise, divinely guided committee, upon whose report the church consents to act.

We come now to the discussion of one important rule that should always be observed by both the vacant church and by the ministerial candidate. I wish to quote at length from Dr. Washington Gladden as expressed in his book, "The Christian Pastor." He says, "No Church should enter into negotiations with a second candidate while it has one before it whose case is not yet determined; and no minister should permit himself to be considered as a candidate by a Church until he is positively assured that the Church is negotiating with no candidate with respect to whom it has not reached a decision. The plainest dictates of good sense and Christian decency should enforce upon every Church the rule of one candidate at a time, and should require every minister to see to it that the Church lives up to this rule. Nothing is more scandalous than that a Church should pass through its pulpit a line of candidates, suspending judgment upon them until it has heard a considerable number, and then picking and choosing among them. Into such a competition no self-respecting minister will consent to go. Out of such conflicts over candidates the bitterest and most disgraceful Church quarrels often arise. The Church should permit but one name at a time to be presented to it; not until it has determined that it does not want this man, should it open negotiations with any other man, or permit him to appear in its pulpit as a possible candidate. The condition into which Churches are sometimes thrown by long periods of candidating, and of disputations over candidates is melancholy in the extreme. The whole attitude of the Congregation becomes critical and captious; the people come to listen, not with devout and receptive minds, but with itching ears; aesthetical standards replace spiritual standards; the question, 'How much good can I find in this message?' is overlaid by the question, 'How do I like the messenger?' Add to this the disagreements and alienations which such strife envolves, and a state of things is revealed which offers an unpromising field to the wisest and most devoted pastor."

The matter of calling a minister need not be an occasion of dividing a church, but to the contrary, can be the very thing to draw the church into greater unity and harmony. Let the church get together in a prayerful spirit, let a church unite in seeking earnestly the guidance of God and let a church deliberate over this matter in reasonableness and harmony and it may become the very occasion to eliminate factions and bind all the possible groups into that fine spirit of Christian unity that should prevail in every church. Under such conditions the new pastor, when he has been found, may find a warm welcome in a united and happy church.

Toward Understanding Young People

by Harry Yoder

Many things are involved in the matter of understanding young people. Perhaps some of the most valuable helps are the common-place, practical things of which we need to remind ourselves. It is so easy to brush aside the need of understanding young people or even ourselves. I will merely mention a few of the basic practical concerns which must be reckoned with as one attempts to meet this problem.

The Prophet Ezekiel gives us a fine example of the primary step in our task. In the third chapter of Ezekiel we find him describing the people among whom he was to do his work and to whom he was sent to prophesy. They were the children of Judah who were exiles in far-away Babylon. Israel as a nation had been broken up and had practically ceased to exist. Here in captivity they were in great need, even for the sheer physical necessities of life. In this condition it was easy to forget the Temple, the glories of Israel's past, and God's purpose for them as Israelites. Ezekiel had been singled out to pass on to these people divine warnings as well as encouragement and cheer.

In order to do his work effectively he must be in touch with men as well as with God. The secret of his successful working among men is expressed in chapter 3 verse 15. "Then I came to them of the captivity, . . . and I sat where they sat, and remained there astonished among them seven days." There is no doubt that Ezekiel had intended to begin by reproving them for their sins. Verse 14 says, "I went in bitterness in the heat of my spirit." He had intended giving them some very sharp words concerning their idolatries. But when he "sat where they sat," and saw the conditions under which they were living, the misfortunes, the disabilities, and the temptations, which were theirs, he was overwhelmed. The glow of love and pity was kindled in his heart.

Ezekiel now had the basic foundation for fulfilling his mission. He, "sat where they sat." He saw the situation through their eyes and was prepared to draw on all the resources God had given him to help these people.

It is apparent that the theme in verse 15 is Christian sympathy. If we are to understand young people we must sit where they sit and, through the eyes of Christian sympathy, view the situation in which they find themselves. Jesus himself was concerned with reality and went to the heart of the matter. As we meet each other in reality and find the real person, so Jesus believed we might find God.

Understanding Christian sympathy is a compassionate love for those concerned. In seeking to understand young people Christian love for them must be foremost. Without that there will be no adequate steps taken. The person whose narrow circle of love does not include young people has automatically lost the opportunity to understand them.

Christian sympathy together with a profound love for young people naturally leads to the desire to be helpful. Dr. Wilfred Grenfell did not simply sit in the west end of London and send medical supplies to the

"And all thy children shall be taught of the Lord, and great shall be the peace of thy children." This statement is both a promise and a wish on the part of the Lord. It expresses His wish for children. It promises our children the fruits of teaching and of peace. To achieve these ends which the Lord has in mind we need to build.

"That our sons may be our plants growing up in their youth; that our daughters may be as corner stones, polished after the similitude of a palace." This statement expresses a wish and a purpose. It is the wish of those who really care for their children, and for those of their neighbors. The purpose aims at the ideals set for our children by God Himself. Both the wish and the purpose are born of love for the children.

Much building is done which does not meet the approval of God, nor does it fulfill the wishes and purposes of our love. Viewed from this angle the matter of building becomes a divine compulsion. Bemoaning belated or negelcted opportunities of providing for the spiritual, the physical and the social needs of our children does not keep them in harmony with our expressed ideals nor from the temptations provided by those who build for selfish ends.

"The stone which the builders rejected the same is become the head of the corner; this is the Lord's doing and it is marvelous in our eyes." To reject what God wants is a very serious matter. It is bad enough when a dead stone is concerned. It became unspeakably bad when it concerned Him Whom God had sent as the needed Messiah.

In a very definite sense our children are also stones for the building of God's Kingdom. They may be rejected by not giving them a chance to become what God has in mind for them. There is little difference between "rejected" and "neglected" when it comes to the practical application of the principles laid down by Jesus. "All things therefore whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you; even so do ye also unto them: for this is the law and the prophets." "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength. Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. There is none other commandment greater than these."

The foregoing statements have most thought provoking meanings for our children who grow up in the city and for the many children of our friends who come to the city from many places. We are building for both. We are trying to do it in accordance with the existing needs to be met where we are.

"Except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain who build it." Even in the midst of the consciousness of a great need, we value this admonition to be humble. Nobody knows how much we human beings need the Lord so much as do those who are really concerned to do His will. It is in this spirit that we are trying to build a new sanctuary which may be a house of worship for our children and yours.

The laying of the corner stone of this sanctuary is to occur at 3:00 P. M. on Sunday, October 6, 1946. You are welcome to attend.

MENNONITES THE WORLD OVER

By Cornelius Krahn

A CONFESSION

Many a confession has been written that has stirred the hearts of men. Some have been confessions of sin and faith. Such was the confession written by the great Christian Augustine. Today we want to deal with a book that is a confession of faith, sin and disillusionment at the same time. This book entitled I Chose Freedom is the account of "the personal and political life" of the Soviet official Victor Kravchenko and was published recently by Charles Scribner's Sons.

Our Interest in the Book. The writer of the book was born and raised next to the Chortitza Mennonite settlement, lived in Alexandrovsk (Zaporozhye), studied in Kharkov, was chief engineer at the metallurgical combinat in Nikopol, helped with the collectivization of the farmers in that region, witnessed the mass starvation of the Ukraine in 1932-33 etc. Thus we see that he is not a casual visitor of the "land of our fathers" but a high official who was raised and lived with the masses of people of which our Mennonites were a part. The Writer's Background. Victor Kravchenko hardly knew his father during his early youth because the latter was an active revolutionary who spent most of his time in czarist prisons. His father was one of those members of the working class who was a revolutionary because of a deep rooted conviction. He strove for the improvement of conditions among the common people. Through the influence of his father young Victor was deeply embued with sympathy for the masses and a sense of social justice, which remained indelible. By the time the Revolution broke out, Victor was about ready to join the Comsomol. Later he joined the Communist Party. For those who are inclined to consider every Communist degraded and immoral it would be well to read the chapters that the fervent idealistic zeal of the author for a better Russian society than that under which his father with many others had suffered so much. His ability, integrity, character, and good status in the Communist Party secured for him a successful career, and even the survival of many purges. Needless to say Dostoyevski, Tolstoy, Gorky and many other Russian intellectuals were filled with a similar sense of social justice and a zeal to improve the deplorable political, social and economic condition of czarist Russia.

From Faith to Disillusionment. The strength of the book lies not in the description of what has been achieved in the realms of politics, economics, and culture, but in the account of how a convinced, faithful and idealistic Communist gradually became disappointed and disillusioned through the methods and means by which these achievements were made. Kravchenko's inside information throws some light on why we read again and again in letters by Mennonites from the Ukraine that the men from the villages were sent to Siberia as early as 1937. According to Kravchenko this mass exile was by no means limited to Mennonite communities. First millions were sent into exile in order to speed up the collectivization. Later purges swept in waves through the rank and file, eliminating not only close associates of Lenin and key men of the party, but also many among the common masses . . . The writer gives the inside story of the collectivization and the purges as they were applied from the top to the bottom. It was during those hours of agony that the idealist and humanitarian Communist Kravchenko broke with communism. He describes the concentration camps and the treatment of slave laborers in the Ural Mountains where he was in charge of a manufacturing plant.

Russia During the War. According to the writer the war came to Russia entirely unanticipated because Stalin had trusted Hilter blindly. How this can be reconciled with the author's claim that even in Stalin's Communist Party no one trusts anyone is hard to explain. Russia's final victory in the war is credited to its vast territory, to the ability of the Russians to endure immeasurable suffering, and to American Lend-Lease. Kravchenko waives all claims that Communism in Russia has accepted more democratic values as expressed in the new constitution in its attitude toward the Russian past, traditions, religion, etc. They are explained as moves on that gigantic chess board in the game to win a world revolution.

The book I Chose Freedom was written after the writer has escaped from the Soviet Purchasing Committee in Washington, D. C., where he had been delegated by his government to handle American Lend-Lease. He claims to have written the book in order to promote an understanding of the Russian reality by the democratic world. This he considers the pre-condition for his country's liberation from within since Russian aspiration for freedom needs the weight of world opinion and its spiritual support.

needy people of Labrador. His Christian sympathy and love for them led him to dedicate his life to service for them. Through the avenue of service he understood them more fully. Just so, those who have taken the first steps in understanding youth will be motivated to loving service in helping solve their problems, and through loving service will better understand them.

Thus, I would say briefly, three important steps, among many others, are necessary in understanding young people. First, we must in Christian sympathy see the situation of young people from their point of view. Second, there must be a profound love for their concerns. Third, there must be a desire for actually helping them as they face reality. With these three steps we have an opportunity to show them The Way of Life. We can introduce them to the principles and values of our Lord, which are eternal.

Baptismal Service in Saskatoon

by A. J. Neuenschwander

During the winter months a large part of the minister's efforts in many churches are spent in the special catechism classes and instruction periods.

We take the following thoughts from a report sent in by Rev. J. J. Thiessen,

It is not only intellectual knowledge that we seek to give in our instruction periods, but a heart knowledge. First we seek to impress each pupil that until he is born again, he is a sinner. Then we present Jesus Christ as Saviour who alone can save the sinner. The decision emphasized and reached, we proceed to teach that a worthy life in God's House as well as in the everyday life, must follow.

This year we asked those that attended the twenty-week instruction period to give in writing their decision and their purpose to follow Christ faithfully.

On Pentecost Sunday, June 9, the candidates were baptized and received into the church. Rev. Paul Schroeder, Drake Saskatchewan, made the introduction. The text for the sermon by Rev. Thiessen was Ezekiel 36:25-27: "I will sprinkle clean water upon you, and ye shall be clean: from all your filthiness and from all your idols, will I cleanse you. A new heart also will I give you, and a new spirit will I put within you: I will take away the stony heart out of your flesh, and I will give you a clean heart of flesh. And I will put my spirit within you, and cause you to walk in my statutes, and ye shall keep my judgments, and do them."

With the singing of "Just as I am" by the candidates, the rite of baptism was performed. One member of the class, Stella Peters could not be with the group in the church, but the group accompanied the minister to the Sanatorium and there, in a room filled with flowers by her class-mates, she too openly confessed Christ as her Saviour and was baptized. Needless to say, this made a deep and definite impression on every member of the class..

The memorable day came to a close with the observance of Holy Communion in the evening in a church that had been packed to capacity. The congregation wended its way homeward giving thanks and praise to God in the salvation that they have in Christ as Lord. Praise God from whom all blessings flow!

LIFE WORTH LIVING

"I pray not that thou shouldest take them out of the world but that thou shouldest keep them from evil." John 17:15. When we look from the worldly sense then it is better for the believers to be taken to heaven as soon as they begin to follow Christ. They would then have no temptations and no struggles to pass through. But then who would do Christ's work? The noblest are grown amid difficulties and hardships. Our Lord himself had to undergo hardships and pains and struggles. If we have to reach the heights of blessedness, we must be willing to pass through the field of struggles. When the victory is won the loudest cheers will be to those who fought the most battles. So it will be in Heaven when the redeemed are welcomed home. (The forgoing is a meditation by Dr. Mrs. Samuel, native Christian serving in the mission station at Jadeesphur, C. P., India.)

SEVENTEEN FOREIGN STUDENTS ARRIVE

Seventeen foreign students, 11 young men and 6 young women, arrived in New York on September 16. With the exception of one, who comes from Belgium, they are all members of the Doopsgesinde (Mennonite) Church in Holland, and have come to study in Mennonite Colleges. The students spent two days at the M. C. C. headquarters and were officially greeted by C. H. Hostetler, President of Messiah Bible College, in speaking for the Mennonite and Affiliated Colleges at a reception on September 19. Their names and respective colleges which they will attend are as follows: Peter Verhulst, Rene de Monchy, Annetta de Graaf, Bluffton College; Johannes Matthijssen, Lenze Meinsma, Willy Piron, Immetje Terwey, Johanna Kuitse, Goshen College; Johannes Hilverda, Peter Doves, Leo Beck, Elisabeth Craandijk, Alida Ferf, Bethel College; Reinder Mesdag, Freeman College; Henk Wittevsen, Alvert Hijmans van den Bergh, Messiah Bible College; Eeke van der Schaaf, Hesston, College.

Explanation Regarding the Resignation of Missionary Fred Johnson

On May 15, 1946, Brother Fred Johnson terminated his work under the General Conference Foreign Mission Board and moved from Moen Copi, where he had been stationed, to Oraibi, Arizona. The Mission Board regrets that after more than twenty-three years of service under our Board Brother Johnson has taken this step.

He has not only severed his connections with the Mission Board, but has also started an independent work in Oraibi in opposition to our missionaries and our mission work.

The resignation was Brother Johnson's answer to a series of conferences and communications in which the Board requested him not to invite anyone as a Bible teacher who has failed to convince the Mission Board of the soundness of his interpretation of the scriptures regarding the future state of those who die in unbelief.

Since Brother Johnson plans to speak and solicit funds in Mennonite communities, the Board feels that it owes this explanation to our people.

The Board requests special prayer for our mission work among the Hopi Indians.—

THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH AND WORLD PEACE

As a non militant organization, the Christian church has no share in the nation's conflict. Neither has she, directly, a share in settling such conflict. Indirectly her work in peace-making is continuous at all times. Her influence at the peace conference dates back to the teaching done a few generations past.

Our Lord commissioned the church to evangelize (the mission program) the world, and to educate (teach them all things whatsoever I have commanded you) the believer. This is the church's duty.

Jesus said, "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth, go ye therefore." He had a right to give orders as the only ruler of the universe. This right was his because he had given himself as a ransom for mankind. The disciples were to share in this power through the Holy Ghost, whom he promised to send them from the father, and go and witness. They were also to occupy until the Lord should return, "Lo I am with you always even unto the end of the earth." The church has failed in her commission, and has not taught nonresistance to her followers.

Let the church repent of her sins and receive forgiveness to be renewed in Spirit and in Power and go about the Lord's business, leaving the care of all other matters in his all powerful hands.

"Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness and all things shall be added unto you."—J. F. Sawatzky, Newton, Kansas.

MENNONITE CATTLE CREWS

The Mennonite Central Committee has made arrangements with the Brethren Service Committee whereby there will be Mennonite crews for UNRRA livestock shipments to Europe. Such an experience can be a service to suffering humanity and a constructive personal experience. But it is not necessarily so. It should be clear that it is a government project and that many men working as attendants are not conscientious Christians interested in relief for the suffering. Some of the serious-minded men who expected to be a part of a like minded crew have been greatly disappointed.

Experience with an all-Christian attendant crew arrangement this summer has convinced the Mennonite Central Committee that is a much preferred pattern. Therefore plans are now underway to make up Mennonite sponsored crews. Application blanks and further information of these possibilities can be secured by writing M. C. C. Representative, Brethren Service Center, New Windsor, Maryland. In writing for application blanks please indicate that you are a Mennonite.

To make such a plan effective it will be well to provide Mennonite foreman, leaders and ministers in so far as possible. If you are interested in such possibility, write to the M. C. C. Representative at New Windsor.

He leaves to mourn his untimely death his parents, one sister, and two brothers. Memorial services were held at the First Mennonite Church of Christian on September 22, 1946, at which Rev. P. P. Incentive for Youth

by Wilma Stern Lewis

(The following article, written about a problem faced by the Church of the Brethren by a member of that denomination, deals with a problem so common to our church that we submit it for the readers consideration and thought. Possibly in the future an effort could be made in planning and developing a program dealing with the specific needs and problems of young people in the church on large enough a scale to make of it a dynamic and effective piece of work. Ed.)

Our church does a magnificent piece of work in sponsoring and carrying on successfully many major activities. Not for one moment can the importance or any of these be minimized. Our missionaries and our relief workers are doing a splendid piece of work, but the call comes for more workers. The need for ministers is great.

Many of the above needs could be alleviated if the church were willing to sponsor an "all out" program in the interest of our youth. Many of our young people are eager and willing to assume responsibility and become active church workers; all they need is the stimulation of an enthusiastic leader.

Our national youth director is doing a fine piece of work and I am well aware of the excellent program provided for our young people. But who can determine the far-reaching effects of providing our youth leader with a number of equally dynamic workers whom he could place in various needy areas throughout the regions and districts of the brotherhood?

Time and time again I have seen young people become definitely interested in church work as a result of meeting outstanding personalities of our church in the summer camps. In a meeting of young people's leaders recently many attributed their interest in church work to our church leaders whom they had met in camp.

Where there is a strong church with a minister and an adult adviser wholeheartedly interested in youth work there will be obvious results. But where such situations do not exist, do we not as a church have a tremendous responsibility in providing the needed incentive for our young people?

Young people are eager to grow and to assume responsibility but they need the guidance of interested adult leaders. Far too often, and it is difficult to expect otherwise, the schedules of our volunteer leaders are exceedingly heavy, making it impossible for them to give youth the time and help which they need and so rightfully deserve.

Is it a far distant hope to believe that importance of choosing a number of our resourceful and animated leaders just as carefully as they are chosen for relief work abroad, and place them in our home field where they can show youth the way of abundant living through active participation in our church program? If such a program of action were instituted the demand for workers at home and abroad could be filled. A finer ministry and stronger churches would be an inevitable result.

The youth of today determine the church of tomorrow. Is our concern about the type of church that will be great enough to motivate us to action?

Hard Choices You Refused to Make

A Message to Young People

We are the hard choices you refused to make.

We stood beside the pathway of your life, waiting unobtrusively for you to touch us. But you passed us by.

We came to you in a variety of forms—the books you thought too hard to read, the school study that demanded much from you at the moment when play was the brighter path, the moral choices of "the hard right against the easy wrong."

You denied your task the last difficult touch that would have made your work perfect.

You chose the lower path of conduct because you feared someone would laugh.

You elected the short-term plan for your entire life, so that your immediate desire could be gratified.

Thus the power we could have woven into the texture of your soul you denied yourself. The steadiness for future conflict that have become your lifelong possession, you rejected when you rejected us.

For every hard choice, rejected or accepted gallantly, becomes a part of the inward life for ever.

We are the hard choices you refused to make.

What About the Youth Fellowship

Almost all our churches have a regular C. E. meeting. In a number of the churches, there is no age classification of the C. E. organization. The C. E., in reality, consists of the whole church. The difference between a C. E. meeting and a church meeting is that at the C. E. lay members of the church, generally the young people but not necessarily are in charge of the program. In other churches, the C. E. is organized according to age groups—juniors, intermediate, and senior.

In other church conferences, there is also quite a variety in the way local churches organize their program. Some have a youth fellowship others have a C.E. Some call theirs the youth fellowship of the C. E. when the young people gather together for their own program.

Doubtless much could be said about the virtues of the C. E. or the virtues of a youth fellowship. But, rather than argue either way, it would seem wiser to think through the needs and the ways of meeting the needs of the young people of the church.

Most churches have special women's organizations —sewing societies, mission societies, and so on. Men are not so well organized but often do have a men's fellowship. Why should young people have their own organization?

Perhaps two principal reasons could be suggested for special organizations for the young people. The first is that the young people are just in the process of developing convictions and attitudes and an outlook on life. They are in a process of rapid change as they grow up, and during this time they feel a kinship with each other because of their common problems and experiences. Much can be done at this very time when there is growth and development by making possible the sharing and seeking together of the depths and heights of Christian faith and reality. This can be presented effectively to a group of young people by discussing together the meaning of Christianity in relation to their own problems. The prospect of marriage and how it can be Christian, boy—girl relationships, what shall I do with my life?, how can I serve?, the challenge of living the life of love which can be so great a dynamic in the life of idealistic youth. All these topics can be discussed so effectively by a group of young people among themselves. And many others could be added to the list. This makes young people's meetings important.

A second important factor for consideration is the need for social fellowship which young people have. Many happy, rich and carefree experiences, which in latter years are bright memories, can be had through a church youth fellowship. Such wholesome social companionship is one of the essentials of effective church life. The need for it is constant. By singing together, playing games, having parties, outings, work programs and countless other causes for fellowship, a youth fellowship can present a wholesome social life which encourages a balanced Christian growth.

It can be called a young people's C. E., a youth fellowship, or have any of many other names. But, needed is provision in the church for the spiritual, intellectual, social, and physicial growth of the young people. The best way this can be done by each specific church needs to be considered on the local level. But, isn't there a valid need for a young peoples organization?

Three Friends

Two little ragged Negro boys stopped in at the corner candy store in Philadelphia one day and patiently waited until all other customers had left. Then they approached the storekeeper. He was attracted by their gentle manners; so when they asked if they could borrow three pennies, he offered them more. But they refused, insisting that that was all they needed.

The next day the children returned with the three pennies. The man protested, but the boys argued: "If we didn't pay you back, we couldn't ask you again if we needed to."

The rest of the story was not learned until months later. It seems that the mother of a frail little Italian boy was very ill, and had to be taken to the hospital. While she was there, his two closest friends—yes, the little Negro boys—had provided his lunch at school. They did it by shinning shoes on Market Street after school, and by serving a newspaper route before school. Only once did they fall short of the lunch ticket. It was then that the candy-store man helped out.—Selected

Communion

Edith Lovejoy Pierce

To take and then to give,
To take His blood and then to give oneself,
Simply, as one would extend a gathered flower;
To come because He calls, and because one would,
To make delight a duty,
To feed on Him, not to offend His tender generosity,
And because there is no other bread that satisfies
the soul;
To link known past and unknow future
In one external present;
To love and be loved by Him,
Until loving and being loved becomes one single act
Alike of vital energy and rapt passivity;
To know that beauty is like He is,
To see with the delicate nonvision of the blind,
To grasp the meaning of secrets hidden
Not by darkness but by too much light;
To sense that worship is self-surrender,
And to be human is to long for the divine;
To realize that joy is what all life is made for,
And that eternity will scarce be long enough;
To be untroubled by silence when words fail;
To find, explore, delight in, rest upon,
The sweet and mighty Other,
The everlasting Thou!

Lake of the Ozarks Retreat

by Joyce Basinger

The young people of the Summerfield, Illinois, church joined with the young people of the Bethel church at Fortuna, Missouri to hold a Y. P. Retreat at Gravois Beach at the Lakes of the Ozarks from August 28 to September 1. The Sunday service was held at the Bethel church with a basket dinner. Three different study courses were offered. Rev. Marvin Dirks presented the great missionary enterprise and also gave instruction in church music. On Sunday afternoon he conducted a singspiration at the church. This was greatly enjoyed by all. Rev. E. A. Albrecht, pastor of the Bethel Church, gave a study of the "Promises of God in the Bible." Rev. Albrecht pointed out the great promises of God in the Bible and what a comfort and inspiration they are to the believer in the hour of trial. Rev. Elmer Basinger, pastor of Summerfield Church, presented studies from Christ's Sermon on the Mount, emphasizing the distinctive Mennonite doctrines which are based upon that sermon. Gravois Beach is a very beautiful place to hold a retreat and the hope was expressed by many that another retreat might be held next year.

Upon Hearing a Night Rain

By Fred W. Church

The patter of rain upon my roof hath awakened me,
And its noise upon the leaves hath roused me from slumber.

A clean, cool breeze steals through my window,
And the odor of the sprinkled rich earth fills my room.

How gently it comes, meted out to the capacity of the soil's thirst;
Every drop sinks to the root-tips, no soil particles are eroded.

This is the rain for which the earth has been calling,
The dry earth, whose fertility was held within its clods.

This is the rain for which the plants have been pleading;
Flowers in the border, vegetables in the garden, and crops in the field.

This is the rain for which gardeners and farmers have been praying:
Rain for plants, for livestock, and to fill the year's courses.

Tomorrow's sun will be greeted by a million green banners held aloft,
And by a myriad of colorful flowers, waving proudly and full-faced.

And what human relief in such a rain as this!
Mercy is no surplus commodity of a night rain!

The coolness of the distilled upper courses for hot tenaments.
The freshness of washed air for hospitals and sick rooms;

The quiet music of the rain, plashing on leaves, pattering on panes;
And the mystic sense of a world in which utility and beauty agree.

The good medicine of a happy heart hath been brewed in this night rain;
The spirits of men, like freshened plants, will rise to hail the new morn!

RELIEF

Cash Contributions

Contributions for relief as well as relief expenditures have increased steadily during the past several years. The facts indicate that there has been an increased amount of gifts in cash and also a steady flow of gifts in kind (clothing, canned food, and wheat). Cash expenditures for relief have reached a total for the United States and Canada of over $80,000.00 per month. There has been a gratifying response to the need of the hungry, the naked, the homeless, and the prisoner. Expenditures for War Sufferers' Relief will continue as gifts are received.

In the past it has been the policy of the various Mennonite groups to forward their cash contributions to the Mennonite Central Committee through their Conference Treasurer. Cash contributions have, however, been received directly from individuals. We should like to emphasize that cash donations for relief purposes should be sent to your Conference Treasurer and not directly to the Akron office.

C. unit in Honan province is located in this city and no word was received directly from the workers for several weeks. Two letters were received directly from the Wilhelmina Kuyf and Ruth Fisher this past week. We quote, "At the moment, we are still in the Canadian Church Mission compound. Because Chu-hsein-chen, the town where we expected to open our medical work, has been taken by the Communists, then retaken by the Nationalists we have been unable to open our work there. It is hard to get reliable information. There is no question, it seems, of our personal safety. We are registered with the government and with the police. It is a disappointment not to be able to go on with our work in the way we had planned. The tractor project has closed down and Eddie Schrag and Harold Wik are here."

"We still seem to be having a war and no connections with the outside. Don't worry about us, we're safe . . . as long as the fighting goes on we can't do much relief work here."

Relief Briefs

Brother and Sister Harry Gascho arrived safely in Shanghai, China, on September 1.

Dr. and Mrs. Alvin Gaede and Gladys (Sommers) Gingerich left by plane from New York on September 18 for Ascuncion, Paraguay.

C. A. R. E. food packages can now be sent to the French Zone in Germany. This means that "the standard food package" can now be sent to people in the American and British and French zones, and all of Berlin. Residents of the Russian sector of Berlin go to the American sector to collect their food packages.

Canadian Groups Support Government Meat Coupon Drive

A few months ago the Canadian government inaugurated a continuous drive for unused meat coupons which would enable them to reduce home consumption in order to make available extra quantities of meat for the needy people in Europe. Churches and relief societies were urged to appeal to their own members for support. In July a circular was sent to all Mennonite and Brethren in Christ Churches in Canada asking for unused coupons to be sent to the Canadian M. C. C. office. By September 6 close to 140,000 individual coupons were received. This means many tons of meat for Europe sent by the Canadian government.

What these contributions mean to the Canadian officials was expressed in a letter from the Food Information Board of Canada to C. J. Rempel, Manager of the M. C. C. office in Kitchener: "Would you, on behalf of the Food Information Committee, extend to your constituent groups our thanks and appreciation for the truly marvellous job they have done in collecting meat ration coupons? The 50,000 coupons you reported constitute more than 20% of the total received from all Canadians during the month of July."

Riots and Relief in India

J. Harold Sherk in Calcutta writes that the scenes of desolation and death around that city have been heart-rending and horrifying. "Conservative estimates of casualties are 4,000 to 5,000 dead and 20,000 wounded. Thousands of families have been evacuated from danger zones . . . more than 1,000,000 have fled the city by train. When we first took our vehicles out there was so much debris on some streets that one could hardly get a car through. Where the more serious fighting took place the streets were littered with the bodies of men and animals. Many were thrown into the canals and the river and in places the sewers have been clogged with them. Troops were brought out and the rioting and killing decreased as the strength of the troops increased and was made felt throughout the city. Multitudes of small shops and some large ones were looted and burned. When shop-keepers tried to defend their property they were killed. Many private residences were looted and burned out, and what couldn't be carried away or burned was smashed. Mostly as usual, it was the poor who suffered, but in some cases it affected the well-to-do and even rich people. Comparatively few Christians suffered loss in person or property though there have been some cases reported."

"With limited personnel and supplies we haven't been able to do very much in the way of relief but we have been getting a little done. Food has been the big problem because few persons had been able to lay up enough supplies for a long siege in their homes and many had nothing more than their daily ration. At Champahati we distributed rice and arranged for a milk canteen for the small children. Since then we have opened a milk canteen at an Angelican church in another part of the city.

A cable from Bro. Sherk was received on August 28 saying that all the workers were safe and well.

Briefs

The missionary ship, Marine Lynx which was to sail September 11 from San Francisco for Shanghai, Hongkong, and Manila will likely not sail until after the nation-wide shipping strike. Seven M. C. C. relief workers are booked for passage on this boat.

Katherine Duerksen R. N. who left New York on September 5 arrived safely in Southampton, England, on September 10.

MATERIAL AID NOTES

Reports from the field indicate that some of the spoilage which occurs in foods canned in glass might be avoided by using a different type of lid. A recent letter from one of our workers in France stated that a larger percentage of spoilage occurred with one-piece lids of zinc and porcelain than with other types. The letter went on to recommend the use of combination metal or metal and glass lids. Some of the one-piece lids, were loose, thus allowing air to enter the jar. This loss could probably be reduced by rechecking the seals on each individual jar after it is processed.

During the past few weeks the following shipments have left the United States for Relief Areas:

To the American Zone in Germany, 1,000 cases of evaporated milk; to Ethiopia, a shipment of dried fruits, seeds, medical equipment and a pickup truck; to the relief unit in Puerto Rico, a small shipment of tableware and medical equipment; and to Paraguay, a pickup truck.

College and Seminary News

BLUFFTON COLLEGE NEWS

Dr. J. S. Schultz attended a character education conference at Baldwin Wallace College, Berea, Ohio, September 18-20. This was a part of their one-hundredth anniversary celebration. Delegates were chosen to represent various character building agencies. Pres. L. L. Ramseyer is on the program for a Visual Aids conference in Lima, Ohio, Saturday, September 28. He will lead a discussion on the administration of visual aids programs in the schools. Figures on registration show: 126 Freshmen, 54 Sophomores, 36 Juniors, 24 Seniors, and 4 special students of college grade. In addition 21 below college level have registered for music work. A number of additional students are still expected. Gospel teams held their first meeting on the evening of September 19. Seventy students made the trip to the college cabin. Carl Smucker was the speaker. Dean Byers was the speaker for the first YMCA meeting September 18.

BETHEL COLLEGE

A large student group attended the reception given them by the Bethel College Church on Sunday evening, September 22. The pleasant fellowship hour of getting acquainted and singing was in charge of Bob Tully and the pastor, Rev. Hostetler. Mr. B. Bargen extended words of welcome from the congregation and Milton Harder (Butterfield, Minnesota) responded for the students. The student Sunday School organization, of which Willard Linscheid (North Newton) is president, has voted to divide alphabetically into four groups, again favoring a rotation of teachers chosen from among both faculty and students. Willard Friesen, Lloyd Gundy, Bernice Lehrman, and Maurine Siemens serve as section chairmen. A number of students are taking out associate memberships with the church, which will affiliate them more closely with the work of the local congregation, but will automatically cease as they leave the community.

LIFE AT OUR SEMINARY AND BIBLE SCHOOL

Life here at our school in Chicago is more than sleeping and eating and studying . . . it is fellowship with one another and with God our Lord through Christ.

Tuesday evening of each week is looked forward to by the students and faculty members of our school. At six o'clock this large family of about forty people gathers around tables, in our school home, and there is served a good meal. The family spirit is revealed, because this family is true to life. Here are grandparents, older students, younger ones, as well as a number of children and small babies who enrich the family life. After the evening meal some time is taken for open discussion. Problems that confront the life of this family are discussed, and the solutions are sought in a democratic way. Here we have free expression of mind, heart and soul. But before this family retires for the night, a word of scripture is read, words of exposition are given, the challenge to work with and for God is impressed on each heart, and then prayers follow that are spontaneous, humble, childlike in faith and trust that God will supply all our needs in the future as He has in the past. With dedicated hearts and bowed heads this family closes its day with singing "Have thine own Way, Lord," "Where He Leads me I will Follow," and other hymns of consecration. Certainly His way is the best way . . . here we seek to follow Him every step of the way.—E. J. M.

Jottings

—First Church, north of Butterfield, Minnesota: Rich spiritual food was offered us when the Rev. Alfred Stafness of Canada, at present a student at Wheaton College, served as the speaker at special services the first week in Sepetmber. On September 10, a special women's meeting was held with Mrs. W. C. Voth of Kansas as the speaker. Miss Elizabeth Foth of New York and the Rev. and Mrs. Erwin Wedel, missionaries to the negroes in the southern states, were with us the evening of September 13.—Mrs. C. S. Harder, Corr.

—Gospel Mennonite Church, Mountain Lake, Minnesota: September 15 was a day of rejoicing because the "Polio Ban" was lifted and the boys and girls were again permitted to attend Sunday school and church. A prayer of praise was especially offered for the return of the children and that so far none of our young people had been stricken with the awful disease. In the evening Elizabeth Foth and Erwin Wedels, mission workers, gave interesting and inspiring reports.—Elizabeth Lohrenz, Corr.

—First Church, Berne, Indiana. On Sunday afternoon, September 15, one of our members, Marguerite Sprunger was married to Leonard Wiebe, of Upland, California. The pastor officiated in a double ring ceremony. The bridegroom's father, Rev. Alfred Wiebe, assisted with a sermonette and prayer. The newly wedded couple will leave shortly for Upland, where they will be ordained as missionaries, in the First Mennonite church. They expect to serve as missionaries on our Moencopi, Arizona mission field. This was also the last Sunday for our pastor's assistant, Rev. Edward Burkhalter, as he is leaving for New York to continue his work in the Biblical Seminary. He and Mrs. Burkhalter are preparing to go as missionaries in a year or so. On Monday evening September 23, our church will have a special business meeting. A new church clerk is to be elected because of the resignation of Edwin Gilliom on account of failing health. He has served as clerk for a number of years. Also, the report of the organ committee will be given and considered. The organ has served the church for nearly thirty years and is badly in need of repair or rebuilding.—Martha Gilliom, Corr.

—Zion Mennonite Church, Souderton, Pa. Missionary Duerkson spoke to our congregation at a mid-week service on September 11. Miss Alice Bachert, missionary to Columbia, South America, told of mission work at the Sunday morning services of September 15. In the afternoon our Junior and Adult Choirs and families enjoyed a fall fellowship picnic at Montgomery County Park. On Sunday, September 22, LeRoy Clemens will relate experiences from his recent trip to Poland on a cattle boat. Our church also participated in the Good Will Christmas Bundles project. Many members packed their own boxes while two of our young ladies classes secured the contents and packed boxes for the church. Ninety-nine bundles were recently taken to the Akron depot. Several cars full from this congregation recently journeyed to Philadelphia to hear the Archbishop of Canterbury and John Foster Dulles speak in Convention Hall.

—Rev. J. J. Schultz, who represents the Mennonite Benevolent Society of Winnipeg, Manitoba, recently visited in and around Newton, Whitewater, and Buhler, Kansas, and Beatrice, Nebraska. Rev. Schultz sought to contact those who might be interested in loaning money at the rate of 4 per cent to the Mennonite Benevolent Society. This Society has purchased two arge houses and 107 acres of land. The total initial cost stands at $52,000. Sixty-five of the 107 acres are under cultivation. On them are a cowbarn, a chicken house, and a pig barn. Already $17,000 have been received in cash by the Society and $2,500 in loans. Membership in the Mennonite Benevolent Society may be had for a fifty dollars entrance fee and the payment of three dollars yearly. The Society has 240 members. The home for aged and invalids now has sixty-two inmates. About 60 per cent of these are nvalids.

—The Mennonite Relief Clothing Center, Newton, Kansas, is now sending shipments of clothing to the east coast by means of truck. The first truckload took 133 bales or about seven tons. Another truckload was to go around September 20. This one was to take about a hundred bales. The truck is furnished by the M.C.C. Two new workers are to arrive at the Center the first part of October. They are Paul Kennel and Virgil Engle, C.P.S. men from Belton, Montana. They will replace Lloyd Gundy and Robert Yoder, C.P.S. men, who have now received their release from C.P.S. Mr. Gundy is attending Bethel College, and Robert Yoder went to his home at Kalona, Iowa. Leon Thomas, from near Lancaster, Pa., is the man in charge of the M.C.C. food center located at 314 Main Street, Newton. He formerly worked at Goshen and Kalona.

—Butterfield, Minnesota: Rev. and Mrs. Erwin Wedel from Jackson, Mississippi, and Miss Elizabeth Foth from Brooklyn, New York, spoke in our church on Sunday morning, September 15. They reported on mission work amongst the negroes of the South and amongst the slum dwellers of New York.—Mrs. Gust Miller, Corr.

—Rev. Homer Leisy writes: "The Grace Mennonite Church, Dallas, Oregon, extends a very cordial invitation to the dedicatory services of our new church addition, October 13, 1946, at 2:30 P.M." The program lists Rev. Homer Leisy in charge of the dedicatory service and Rev. W. A. Regier as guest speaker. Other ministers to take part are: Rev. Clyde Dirks, Rev. P. A. Kliewer, and Rev. Paul Roth.

—Summerfield, Illinois: We had the pleasure of having Dr. and Mrs. Herbert Dester with us for our mission festival on September 23. In the morning Dr. Dester brought us a missionary message, and in the evening the Desters showed slides and moving pictures of the work in India. At the 1945 General Conference several amendments to the Constitution of the Conference were adopted. These have been incorporated in a reprint of the "Charter and Constitution of the General Conference of the Mennonite Church of North America." of his trip. Rev. Howard Landis and family of Germantown, Pa., arrived at Bluffton Thursday morning to take up the pastorate of the Ebenezer Church. The Ladies Missionary Society gave a shower to Mrs. Charles Warren at their September meeting. The Warrens expect to go to India soon.—Corr.

—First Church, Bluffton, Ohio: In former years the church families entertained the new students in their homes. This year, on September 8, the Sunday school entertained them at a picnic dinner on the campus as a gesture of friendship. Also a meeting was planned for the evening of September 22, at which time the new students were introduced to the congregation. There was a program and social hour. At this meeting Rev. Smucker invited the students to become associate members of the congregation. All those who respond to this opportunity will be welcomed as associate members on October 6. September 15 was observed as Christian Education Sunday. The monthly missionary offering of the Sunday school was sent to the Mennonite Biblical Seminary, and a generous church offering was given to Bluffton College. On that day our pastor gave us an appropriate and excellent sermon on "Christian Wisdom." The offering should have been taken after the sermon.—Laura Smith, Corr.

—First Church, Beatrice, Nebraska: On September 22 our church commemorated the thirty-fifth anniversary of the Mennonite Deaconess Home and Hospital. A program included musical numbers, reminiscences by Sister Elizabeth Wiebe, who has been with the hospital for thirty-five years, a message by Rev. Walter H. Dyck, and a topic on deaconess work by Sister Lena Mae Smith of the Bethel Hospital, Newton, Kansas.—Maragaret Albrecht, Corr.

—The Menno Mennonite Church, Lind, Washington, was not able to secure a minister the past two Sundays. A program featuring articles from "India Calling" was rendered during this time. The mission collection for the last month amounted to $206.24. The community has been blest with enough rain to do some winter wheat seeding. Our only two young men who were drafted have received their discharges from C.P.S. Our young people's meetings have again dispersed for the winter months because many have returned to colleges and schools.—Mrs. Henry J. Franz, Corr.

—Zion Church, Donnellson, Iowa: During the morning services of September 8, six young people joined the church by baptism. September 15 about forty-five members attended the annual get-together of the Iowa Mennonite churches at Pulaski.—Pearl Krehbill, Corr.

—First Church, Fredonia, Kansas: Dr. and Mrs. Suckau of Omaha, Nebraska, held a series of meetings at Fredonia, September 15-20. His messages were very challenging. The meetings were well attended.—Mrs. Ben Decker, Corr.

Elsa Grantland To Visit Churches and Conference

Elsa Grantland To Visit Churches and Conference

(Rev. J. M. Regier, Chairman of the Home Mission Board, has sent the following letter to pastors of the Western District churches mentioned below and asks that the letter be published in The Mennonite.—Editor)

Hillsboro, Kansas.
September 16, 1946

Dear Brethren:

One of the General Conference home mission workers, Miss Elsa E. Grantland, Paint Rock, North Carolina, and a member of our Chicago Mennonite Church, has been invited to be present at our Western District Conference.

She has consented to spend two weeks visiting churches. She can arrange this more readily before than after the Conference. We have arranged for seventeen speaking engagements during the two weeks. That means that forty-five of our churches cannot be visited, and I persume the one who is arranging this itinerary will throw himself open to criticism.

We hope, wherever possible, you will also invite the neighboring churches over to your meeting.

I have personally never met Miss Grantland, but judging from her letters and from the statements made by the brethren who know her quite well, she is a very interesting speaker. She works with the poor mountain people, both white and black.

Should an offering be taken, whether for home missions in general or for her work in particular, please, send the money to our General Conference Headquarters in Newton. Our Board plans to pay her expenses.

We are asking you kindly always to assist her to the next church, as she is totally strange in this territory, and would not know how to get from one place to the next.

Very Sincerely, J. M. Regier

Just As I Am

Just as I am, without one plea, But that Thy blood was shed for me,
And that Thou bidd'st me come to Thee, O Lamb of God, I come, I come.
Just as I am, and waiting not To rid my soul of one dark blot,
To Thee, whose blood can cleanse each spot, O Lamb of God, I come, I come.
Just as I am, tho' tossed about With many a conflict, many a doubt,
Fightings and fears within, without, O Lamb of God, I come, I come.
Just as I am, poor, wretched, blind; Sight, riches, healing of the mind,
Yea, all I need, in Thee to find, O Lamb of God, I come, I come.
Just as I am! Thou wilt receive, Wilt welcome, pardon, cleanse, relieve;
Because Thy promise I believe, O Lamb of God, I come, I come.

—Charlotte Elliott, 1836

From the editor's point - of - view:

CONVERSION ACCOUNTS, when accurate can be very helpful. Such descriptions serve to clarify what happens in the most fundamental change that a human being can experience. However, because of their nature conversion experiences are not easily described. We sing, "I know not how this saving faith To me He did impart, Nor how believing in His Word Wrought peace with-in my heart." Yet an emphasis upon the conversion experience is involved in the Mennonite emphasis of baptism on "confession of faith." Adult baptism presupposes such a conversion experience. Therefore it is important that we have some idea of what to look for in this matter of a conversion experience. Furthermore, if it is the most fundamental change which can come to an individual, one ought to know it as something very meaningful. Confusion has sometimes come about by trying to strait-jacket the form of all conversion experiences. An emphasis upon the sudden type of experience has made some feel that all must be of this nature. Yet a man of wide Christian experience after inquiring "of many people in many parts of the world" suggests that of those who have undergone a real change, he found about 40 per cent in the "sudden" group and 60 per cent in the "gradual." Undoubtedly, the reality of neither kind can be denied. The important thing is the change that an individual undergoes in conversion. What is that change like? With the thought of shedding light upon this question, we present in this issue a symposium on "What Conversion Means to Me" and also a vivid description of the conversion experience of an intellectual.

CONVERSION is not equally sweeping or inclusive for all people. The degree to which a man's conscience has been enlightened helps to determine the degree to which he experiences conversion. The native Christians of mission fields sometimes clearly illustrate this. They are converted, but their conscience lacking light in certain matters, they may at first be a somewhat rough Christian. When a man is converted he comes clean as far as the standards or right which he possesses. If he, for example, has not developed a conscience against armed conflict, he can engage in it, while having in his heart the peace of a conversion experience. This helps us to understand how some such Christians can be comparatively radiant. Thus "peace in one's heart" cannot be the only standard for measuring a conversion experience. The peace may come somewhat more easily if the conscience has not been sufficiently developed. Such a conversion experience is very good as far as it goes, but it does point to the need for growth. It also points to the need for a clearer conception of the essence of conversion.

FAITH is as fixed a part of life as is breathing. As long as there is life there is faith. Even the atheist has faith; he has faith in the policy of not believing in God. One cannot get away from faith. We either put our faith in one thing or another, in one person or another. We either have faith in the possibilities of life or in the impossibilities. Since faith is such a powerful force—a right faith can remove mountains, and a wrong faith can create them—it is evident that our investment of it is a very important matter. If we put our faith in the negative, we will very likely find the negative working itself out in our life; we come to realize that in which we put our faith. As we believe that "this is my Father's world," we find itself proving to be that very thing. We always have faith of some kind. The important thing is that we have a Christian faith.

REALISM is sometimes described as looking at things as they are and not as we would like them to be. Perhaps, there isn't much wrong with this definition. The trouble comes in the words, "Things as they are." Especially is this true when human beings are in the picture, and they usually are. To see a man as a sinner and as a sinner only is not realism. Realism sees him as a sinner but even more so as a potential child of God. The sinfulness of a people is not the deepest reality about them. Their potentiality for Godliness is the deepest reality. So when the self-styled realists of politics, the press, etc., admonish us to look at "things as they are," we might exercise our Christian privilege and duty of looking deep enough and far enough to see the whole of the picture and not only a part of it.

What Conversion Means to Me:

a symposium

JOHN S. RAUGH, pastor of the Smith Corner Church, East Freedom, Pa., under the Home Mission Board of the General Conference:

Conversion in a moral or religious sense is a complete change in attitude toward God and the world. It involves a complete surrender of self to God.

We learn from the Holy Writ that conversion and the new birth are one and the same, and that it is necessary in this life if one is to live in the joys of heaven which Jesus has gone to prepare for his own.

Only the subjects of the kingdom of God will inhabit the new heaven, and for a person to enter the kingdom of God he must be born again, because it is a kingdom into which one is born and cannot be entered any other way. The same is true of this world. When one enters he is born into the world and cannot enter any other way.

Jesus says be ye also ready for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh. So we can truly say that conversion is a preparation or a getting ready for the coming of the Son of man.

Conversion or being born again is not "turning a new leaf," nor is it simply starting to church and Sunday school, but it is a creative act of the Holy Spirit (II Cor. 5:17, Eph. 2:10). It is an experience whether gradual or sudden. It all means the same thing, that is, receiving the Spirit Of God. I Cor. 2:12. To receive the Spirit of God one must break with self and be concerned about one's fellow men, Eph. 4:28. Then after receiving the Holy Spirit he will understand what the will of the Lord is, Eph. 5:17.

Conversion brings certain changes in the converted. One who has been converted has been made a partaker of the divine nature (II Pet. 1:4), and of the life of Christ, Gal. 2:20.

Conversion is not a state of mind as some would have us believe; it is an actual happening; it is Christ formed in the believer, thus, the man who once lived the "old man" is dead, gone, is not living in the body of the converted person.

The converted person is a new man for this reason. Christ, by his Spirit, dwells in him. Man is controlled or known by his thoughts and actions or his words and deeds. The natural man is conceived in sin and born in iniquity by the will of man. The new or converted man is born of God by the will of God.

The natural man acts and thinks according to his nherited, corrupt nature, but the converted man thinks and acts according to his new nature. Nevertheless, in this life there is that struggle which the disciples experienced in the garden, "the Spirit indeed is willing but the flesh is weak."

Conversion means the salvaging by Christ of man's soul from the wreckage of humanity and saving it from a miserable, eternal hell. It means delivering us from the wrath to come and saving us to an inhertance incorruptible and undefiled in Heaven in the eternal presence of our Father God.

Conversion means the acceptance by man of the "Free Grace and Dying Love" of God our Father, and Jesus Christ his Son our Saviour.

D. D. EITZEN, Associate Professor of Pastoral Counselling at the Graduate School of Religion, University of Southern California:

Conversion is an experience which eventuates at least three forms of behavior: (1) A person becomes increasingly objective about his essential subjectivity—commonly known as "conviction of sin" (Isaiah 6:5). (2) His intellectual and emotional commitment is henceforth to a cause that is infinitely beyond his subjective self—"Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved." (3) This volitional commitment integrates all his faculties into a life of service—"Here am I: send me." Conversion is the transformation of a person's subjectivity into objectivity.

God in His infinite wisdom chose to make man supremely different from the rest of creation—He endowed him with the ability to be aware of his own powers and advantages. Man only can reflect upon his Creator. The contemplation of God is not possible in the animal world. Man therefore has the ability to think after God as to what is meaningful (redeeming) not only for today but ultimately.

Subjectivity or awareness of one's awareness is the distinctive inherent nature of man. The late William Temple, archbishop of Canterbury, writes, "All people at birth, until delivered from it, live in a state of self-centredness; that is, in the perspective of self as centre."

Awareness of one's powers is then a gift from God which makes man supremely unique and renders him capable of being creative with the Creator. It also renders him capable of being creative independent of God and in competition with God; the higher a person's I. Q., the greater the temptation. This is sin in its starkness. Man's ever-present temptation to be self-sufficient is the essence of sin. ("Let us build us a city and a tower whose top may reach into heaven" or "ye shall be as gods."

Jesus dramatized this natural tendency of man by having the prodigal son request his independence.

But man's self-consciousness limits him to an awareness of his personal needs, the greatest one being his need to be meaningfully related to the Whole of which he is but a part. Hence consistency in subjectivity leads to objectivity just as he who goes far enough in a southerly direction finally goes north. Hence the prodigal son "came to himself"—to a recognition of the futility of seeking his self-sufficiency and that his salvation lay in becoming a meaningful member, albeit a servant, of a family.

To be converted is to be released from the compulsion to become god and dedicate my powers to work with God. To be converted is to be released from self-rightness to a life of loving. "To melt and be like a running brook that sings its melody to the night; to know the pain of too much tenderness; to be wounded by your own understanding of love and to bleed willingly and joyfully; to wake at dawn with a winged heart and give thanks for another day of loving." This is life in God, this is life abundantly, this is the fruit of conversion.

A little girl told the minister that her older sister was converted. When asked how she knew, she replied, „See knipt nu nich meah." (She pinches me no more.)

The alloted four hundred words are exhausted. A treatment of this subject should deal with the theological concept, God's grace, the death of Christ on the cross, repentance, rebirth. Furthermore, the only credentials for writing on this subject is to have experienced it personally. Suffice it here to testify that my daily conversion need is to be humble about my humility.

C. H. FRIESEN, frequent contributor to papers and magazines and a member of the Buhler Mennonite Church, Buhler, Kansas:

In trying to give a short treatise on conversion it shall be done in line of the scripture. Apparently there prevails quite a confusion about conversion. The Bible is the only source from which to attain a right conception of it. By conversion we understand to undergo a moral change. Very often it is a mere reformation in behaviour, perchance from drunkenness to sobriety. In the Bible we find repeatedly that even all Isreal turned to God, but evidently it was merely an outward affair without touching the heart (Cf. Ps. 78:56-57). And daily we have opportunity to observe it.

It is obvious that there is some difference between Old Testament and New Testament conversions. For instance, when the whole nation in repentance turned about and outwardly complied with the precepts of the law, God was pleased and forgave. Whilst in this age of grace and The Holy Spirit every individual is concerned, viz, "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the Kingdom of God" (John 3:2). Therefore, to apply Old Testament methods will lead astray.

Since Pentecost, the ascended Lord Jesus has sent The Holy Spirit into this world, among other things, to convict her of her unbelief. (Cf. John 16:8-10). After the sinner hears the gospel of Jesus Christ, The Holy Spirit tries to convict him of his depravity and lost condition. If He is successful, he will open his heart and accept in faith the Lord Jesus as his personal Saviour. The first step—opening his heart—is conversion. It is partly a free-will submission to the call for salvation. The second step—acceptance of grace—is exclusively a creative act of God, "not of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God"(John 1:13). This is genuine conversion, also designated as new birth, and it rightly can be said, "If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature: old things are passed away; behold all things are become new" (II Cor. 5:17).

But alas! the great majority of those who are aroused by the Spirit stop here and make up their mind to lead a better life, to read now and then in the Bible, to attend devotional services, and so forth, and honestly believe by doing so they are converted. Heartily they sing, "All is well with my soul." In this state they pass away. But what a terrbile awakening awaits them! to hear on that day from the mouth of the Lord Jesus, "I never knew you: depart from me, ye that work iniquity" (Matt. 7:21-23; cf. Heb. 2:3).

MRS. J. R. DUERKSEN, missionary to India, now on furlough and pursuing studies at Bethel College:

Conversion means to me a turning about that comes to any individual who "meets the Lord." The outward circumstances may vary with each person. But I feel that one essential is a sense of guilt before God and the realization of a need for a Saviour. This may come about through a verse of scripture, a song, a testimony, a sermon or a word of admonition. God is not dependent on any particular place or method in His dealing with men.

But there must come a time when the individual faces the question, "What will I do with Jesus?" When the answer is a whole-hearted surrender to Him then conversion has really taken place. Now the question is no longer, "What do I want?" It is, "What does the Lord will for me?".

In my own life, the altar call brought me to decision, both as regards my relation to my Saviou as well as my surrender for full time service. I thank God that there were Christian leaders who presented the claims of Christ and pled with young people t give Him His due. I rejoice that there are still those wh realize the present-day need of young people to find their Saviour and seek in every way to bring them to place of decision.

The Conversion of an Intellectual

by Jacob H. Janzen

"Meet our new colleague!"

"This is the Director of our school, Mr. Janzen!" said Ivan Ivanowitch Braeul introducing the scarcely twenty-one-year-old Ivan Heinrichovitch Janzen to the Director of the Ohrloff Boys' High School, Kornelius Benjaminovitch Unruh, whose physical weight of nearly 480 pounds still could not measure up to the extraordinary volume of his erudition.

Janzen was well educated himself and very capable of filling the position entrusted to him by the school board—and he knew it.

He bowed politely before his superior, the Director, and the usual courteous nothings were exchanged. But young Janzen found it difficult to reciprocate the cordiality with which Director Unruh welcomed him into the fellowship of the three-man teaching staff of the school.

He was, to be sure, of highly polished manners and had associatel with the highest ranks of Russian society in his student years at Theodosia, Crimea. But in his relations to his fellowmen was a certain frigidity which alienated people from him at the first meeting.

Pride and selfishness do not go so well with love.

But Janzen did not care.

He needed no company of morons on the lofty peak of his own superiority.

He was a good teacher, too, and in command of every rule, method and technique of his vocation, and his pupils liked to study with him, but they hated him as a man and nicknamed him "The Smart Devil."

Janzen had accepted baptism in the literal sense of that word. He had not submitted to it or longed for it. He had just complied with an existing rule without burdening his moral conscience. He was not an infidel, and it was stipulated that everybody be baptized before he could venture to teach Mennonite youth.

But by accepting baptism he still stuck to his tacit mental reservations. Religion was to him nothing but just another branch of philosphy extending into the realm of the metaphysical. It could be experienced by everybody emotionally, but it could be comprehended really only by those who were scientifically capable of following a deep, philosophical, logical train-of-thought toward the discovery of the ultimate truth.

He appreciated Christ as a philosophical conception, but he didn't have much use for the historical Christ and had never experienced Him as the redeeming power, which he, by the way, needed just like any other human being.

He liked to go to church, and he tolerated every preacher who, at least, endeavoured to enlighten his charges scientifically on the subject with which he was dealing; but he hated the evangelists who put the emphasis on the emotional aspect of their subjects, shrieked and bellowed for hours without saying a thing at all.

His contention was that facts impress them who perceive them, emotionally, but that it is abominable to whip up feelings by artistic speech with no meaning whatsoever to it.

I have studied under him, and have later been his colleague for years, and I still feel like he did at that time.

The drawback of the thing is, though, that the evangelistic criers sometimes do say something in their emotionally delivered messages, and their way of presenting the gospel appeals to a certain type of people although it offends the intellectuals.

My own conversion went a somewhat roundabout way.

The seeds which my loyal Christian parents had sown into my heart never died, and when I was baptized on the confession of my faith, it was really not my faith but my father's. But no other man's faith can save an indiviual, and my inherited faith had to become my own before it could redeem me from perdition. In spite of the faith of my parents I was dragged by the powers of hell through the deep mire of sin and had to bear the consequences until I met my Saviour at the deathbed of my first child.

It was there that I came to know that I stood face to face with Jesus, the historical, still living and powerful Jesus. There He overpowered me, and my father's faith became my own.

"Now you, too, have gone over to the obscure," said John when we first met after my conversion.

It hurt me, but I had nothing to say. I was powerless against his scientific arguments, but I loved those obscure people whom he despised, and they meant so much to me.

But in God's own good time John's day dawned.

We had at that time (1906) a "Billy Sunday" of our own in Southern Russia, and his name was Jacob Vetter. He did not reside in our villages, but he visited us from time to time and John hated him with all his heart. But he was unable to scare Vetter away or to keep him out when he was away and tried re-invade our territory.

John decided to debunk his absurdities in one of his own meetings and went to church that particular night intending to unmask without mercy craftiness of the "religious charlatan."

JACOB H. JANZEN, Elder of the United Mennonite Church, Waterloo, Ontario, was born in Russia, received his schooling there, and taught in Mennonite schools in Russia. In this article he describes the conversion of his brother.

He braced himself with all his willpower and his intelligence, went, and met, not Jacob Vetter, but a stronger one who had laid his own plans for this evening.

The evangelist, to be sure, was there and delivered his message in his usual way while Janzen listened attentively to store up in his memory everything that would be adventageous for him to unmask the whole contemptible buffoonery of this clown.

And it came about that, paying so close attention to the man in the pulpit, he could not but notice, also, that the speaker did not only shriek and bellow. He had really something to say, even if he said it in his ridiculous way. There were words in that sermon which pierced John's heart, and he forgot all about Vetter. Christ was grappling with him, and although at this moment there was nothing to conceive that Jesus Christ scientifically by, he felt the real presence of Him unmistakably. It was hard for John to withstand His power and he felt very miserable.

From the pulpit came the call for a decision, "Stand now everybody who wants to be relieved of his burdens by the redeeming power of Jesus Christ, our Saviour!"

"Hold it!" thought John. "Here is my chance to get even with you and to show the whole audience how worthless your promises are. I sure am a burdened man, and if I can get rid of my burden just by standing up in this meeting, I shall go home today from here a happy man."

He tipped up in his pew, but while he was standing he felt the eyes of the whole congregation fixed upon him, and he did not like it. All fighting power had gone out of him. Vetter seemed not even to notice him, and he was glad for that because he wanted to show that man nothing. Instead a deep desire to be released from his burden of shame and remorse filled his heart, and with the others he went forward and prayed with them.

Rising from his knees after that prayer he noticed that he felt himself drawn powerfully toward the people with whom he had just prayed, although many of them were of the kind which he so far had always classified with the morons. A sweet love, unknown to him hitherto, filled his heart. The whole world had changed. He was a changed man himself and went home filled with the love and the peace of Christ which passes all understanding.

He continued to teach school after that until his death in September, 1917, but his former nickname was soon abolished and forgotten by his students. They respected him as their teacher and loved him as their friend.

He was called by his church to the ministry and served faithfully, especially doing pastoral work among the neglected and lowly in our community. He loved everybody and was loved by everybody and thus became the happiest man in the world of his time.

I do not know whether Jacob Vetter and my brother have met after the latter's conversion. But I know that Jesus Christ stood by John until the end.

When I visited John shortly after his conversion I found him pondering over Acts 9:16. He had underscored the words "I will shew him. . . "

"He, certainly, has shown me a thing or two!" John said.

During his sickness (pernicious anemia) he was calm and joyful and passed over to the great beyond in his sleep.

"Das Mennonitische Lexikon" says of him, "Janzen the always doubting, but also the always searching, the rationally-oppositionally minded, experienced in the year 1906 a conversion toward a more pietistic philosophy of life, and became henceforth an active, and in his work, very fruitful member of the Mennonite churches, enjoying a popularity and a respect by his fellowmen of which not many can boast." (M.L.Vol.2, Page 393, col.2)

I believe, "conversion toward a more pietistic philosophy of life" does not cover the ground in this case. According to his own appraisal of his experience, and, also according to my own observations, it was far more than that. In 1906 John met the living Christ in person and surrendered—not to a school of religious thought but to Jesus Christ, his Saviour, Himself.

Selma Unruh Reports

C. I. M. Nyanga, Africa
September 2, 1946

Dear Mission Friends:

The Lord has wonderfully undertaken for me. I thank Him for His protecting hand over me during my trip, and I thank Him for health and strength.

I left New York by plane on April 26 and arrived in Leopoldville, Africa on April 29. I enjoyed the plane trip and also the boat trip up the river. On May 30 I came to the Nyanga station. It is a beautiful station and I am happy in serving my Master here.

The latter part of August is the beginning of the rainy season. We have had several showers of rain, and things are beginning to look refreshed after the dry season. We have not only had showers of material blessings, but we also had showers of spiritual blessings during August.

From August 3 to 6 we had the Annual Missionary Conference at our station, while Rev. Rediger is visiting the field. Otherwise it is held in December. The conference sermon was brought by Rev. Rediger. Inspirational messages were given by the new missionaries, and the music was furnished by different groups from each station. The thought of the inspirational messages can be summed up in a few sentences. Namely, if we look unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith, and trust Him, He will enable us to bring the gospel to those whose understanding is darkened; and as Caleb, who wholly followed the Lord and was victorious, so we too can be victorious and have joy in our work for Him, even though obstacles come our way.

In the last session of our conference we had communion services with Rev. Rediger presiding.

Eight new missionaries have arrived on the field since March. It was a joy to see them all at the conference. There is a deep thrill which comes when one meets spiritual companions who have dedicated their lives for the same purpose, and who are devoted to the purpose of building the kingdom of God.

We have about eighty outstation teachers from the native Christians in the villages. From August 17 to 21 we had them on the station. On Saturday and Sunday evening we had five different groups of the people on the mission gather around the fire at different places for prayer. On Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday forenoon the teachers were instructed in different subjects which they are to teach in the villages during the coming semester.

On Wednesday afternoon two assistant pastors were chosen. We have had only one up to now. The one will be helping on the station and nearby villages, while the other two will work in the outstations. These meetings were closed with a communion service with the native church.

The Bible School and Day School are opening today. Many new students have come in again. We need your prayers for this important work of the mission. Yours in His Service, Selma Unruh (Rev. Rediger is the Executive Secretary of the Congo Inland Mission.)

College and Seminary News

FREEMAN JUNIOR COLLEGE

The College Corporation has its annual meeting September 20. Rev. P. P. Tschetter of Pretty Prairie, Kansas, was a chapel speaker recently. The Academy play will be given November 15 in the College Gym. Miss Kaufman has selected St. Elmo, a play based on the novel by Augusta J. Evans. The Study Hall for academy students is filled to capacity this year. Twenty-two more desks were added recently and still more are needed. The Foods Classes have been canning fruit and making pickles for dining hall use.

This week Wednesday Rev. Waldo Flickinger of Alsen, North Dakota, spoke to the students in a chapel service. Rev. Hugo Mireau spoke to the Christian Youth group on Monday. Thursdays the chapel periods are again under the direction of the Music Department. The Ritz Trumpeteers, a brass and woodwind ensemble, presented a program to the students and faculty on Thursday afternoon. These programs are sponsored by the school secured through the Community Program Service of the University of Minnesota. Two series of programs will be presented this school year. One series will be for the students and will be presented during the day. The second series will consist of evening concerts and lectures for the whole community.

BETHEL COLLEGE

The extra-curricular program of the school has been drawn up for another year with about twenty student organizations supplementing practically every phase of study and campus activity. Participation is controlled by personal counselling and a system of enrollment which seeks to balance and limit the load of each student. All these organizations come under the general supervision of the Student Council, headed this year by Amanda Ediger (Buhler). Each of the nine residence halls has organized and elected its representative to the Governing Councils. Results of the tryouts for the choir of sixty voices were announced by the Music Department, which is also organizing the band, orchestra, and vocal and instrumental ensembles. A strong intramural sports program has been arranged and, according to a resolution passed by the Board of Directors, the College is resuming intercollegiate athletic competition on a three-year probationary basis.

Religious Education through Visual Aid

by Cornelius Krahn

Visual aids are being more and more widely used, not only in secular education and for commercial purposes, but also in the field of religious education. It is not hard to predict that it will gain in prominence in the latter field as soon as religious leaders realize that the means for this purpose are within their reach. With this in mind we would like to share some experiences we have gathered while trying to build up a slide library for class and church work.

How To Obtain Slides

The most widely used materials are in 2x2 slides, 35 mm. film strips and motion pictures. This material is being obtained in various ways. A great many of our younger and older people on trips, in Civilian Public Service, in relief work, and on the mission field take kodachrome and motion pictures. In this manner everyone enjoys sharing their experiences when they return. From these sources a church can easily accumulate and build a slide library.

A more systematic way of building up and maintaining a slide library is to order catalogs of religious slides and films, selecting those sets of slides and film strips that will fill your needs. The denominational publishing houses have set up the Religious Film Association (19 S. LaSalle St., Chicago 3, Illinois) that supplies a catalog of motion pictures, and colored and black and white slides for sale or for rent. The Society for Visual Eduaction, Inc. (100 East Ohio St. Chicago 11, Illinois) furnishes catalogs on slides of religious paintings, etc. Other sources could be mentioned.

The kodachrome (colored) slides usually cost fifty cents each paper bound. For permanent use they should be bound in glass to give them the best protection. Black and white film strips are the least expensive (usually two dollars per film strip consisting of twenty to fifty slides) For permanent use they also should be put into glass slide binders.

These kodachrome and black and white 2x2 slide sets can be of great help in any church sponsored project in teaching the stories of the Old and New Testament, the life of Christ, missions and many other subjects.

The collecting and building up of a slide library can even take on a more personal and intimate character. It can be compared with building up a family album or a church record in pictures. In a family, in a church, or in a community there are many pictures that tell the story of growth and development. Charts, maps, and other visual aids can be made into slides in this way. The Bethel College Slide Service is willing to help you make black and white slides from these pictures.

Previously we mentioned the binding of slides in glass binders. It seems to us that the S.V.E. slide binders that are being sold in sets of one hundred for $3.75 are most economical. Anyone can learn how to bind the slides to give them greater protection.

Obtaining Projectors

As was mentioned 2x2 slides are most commonly used today. The projectors for these slides vary in quality and price but are within the reach of every church. One of the lowest priced small projectors, more for home use, can be purchased for about fifteen dollars A very common good make is the S. V. E projector model AAA, with a 300 watt lamp, that can be used with slides and film strips, which cost $76.75. They are available at any photo supply store. With slides and a projector pictures can be shown on a white wall o sheet. If a screen is desired the Da-lite screen, costing about twenty-five dollars can be recommended.

Obtaining projectors for motion pictures is no quite as simple because good ones cost in the neighborhood of five hundred dollars. They may, of course, b rented in some localities.

Bethel College Slide Service

The Bethel College Slide Service is expecting to function on a larger scale than before. A number of sets o colored and black and white slides have been adde making the total of some thirty sets. Most of the set illustrate events from the history of the Christia church in general and the Mennonite church in particular. We also have a number of sets of slides o Biblical topics and on Christmas. For most of thes sets lecture guides are availabe. We are also prepare to continue our lecture service by coming out to churches within a driving distance, using our own equipmen For further information in this matter as well as an question raised by this discussion write to the Beth College Slide Service, North Newton, Kansas.

Dr. Cornelius Krahn, head of the Bethel College Historical Library, has had much experience in building slide collections. Furthermore, he has had many valuable manuscripts and pictures microfilmed, so that one can now step into the Historical Library and through the means of a special machine read or see these microfilm records.

Retreat Grounds and the Northern District

by Carl Epp

The church communities of the Northern District Conference are rather widely separated. Thus the work, as well as the purposes and aims of the various people's organizations in the district have not been unified or coordinated in the past.

The establishment of Young People's Day as part of the District Conference program was a great step towards acquainting the various groups with each other's work and in unifying their efforts. Another step is the proposed first all-district young people's retreat to be held in the summer of 1947. Here the young people of the district will have their first opportunity to get together in a week of discussion, worship, and recreation as a unified, district group. This should serve to strengthen the individual groups as well as the relationships between groups.

A third step logically follows—the procuring of a district owned retreat grounds. The project of either purchasing a building a camp site in itself is an incentive to work together and thus an influence in uniting the groups. A summer work and study camp could even be used as a means of building up the camp buildings and facilities.

This article inaugurates a few articles to follow discussing the question of retreat grounds. There has been aroused in recent years a keen interest on the part of some districts to have their own retreat grounds. The Eastern District has their own, Saskatchewan owns Elim Gospel Beach, and the Middle and Central Districts are considering acquiring a site as is also the Western District. Ontario has begun to hold retreats, the Northern District plans to hold its first district retreat this coming year. Previously they have had their retreats in smaller units.

Although the Northern District does not plan to acquire their own grounds in the immediate future, Carl Epp of Henderson has raised some general points regarding the problems as it looks to the Northern District as they launch this new part of their program. Carl Epp is president of the Northern District.

In the future, other districts will be invited to express their views on this question.

Various church groups or committees can make use of such a conference owned retreat grounds. Possibly a seminar or study group for leader training could be held on the grounds throughout the summer, the members maintaining the camp and serving as the "overhead" of workers during the conferences and retreats.

The general location of the grounds should be as easily accessible to all the church groups in the district as possible regardless of their size. At least the traveling expenses of the those from a distance should be equalized with those from nearby by proportioning a uniform mileage charge among all attending the retreats. This is important if we follow our assumption that the purpose of district wide retrats is to help unite the efforts of all the various groups.

Several points can be mentioned in considering a specific location of the camp site. The place, of course, should be scenic, and a spot on a lake or river bank is almost a "must." The site should be accessible by good roads and not too distant from a town or source of camp supplies. Availability of electricity and a good water supply is also important.

The establishment of the retreat grounds as a center of a worthwhile youth program presents a real challenge to the Northern District as it does to Mennonite young people in other districts. May we accept this challenge and work prayerfully to meet it.

When We Taste Defeat

The famous football coach, Knute Rockne, was fond of saying that no football team could become a great team until it was beaten. "When they taste their first defeat, the stuff that's in them will come out. If they're made of the right stuff, they'll storm back and be better than ever before. If they're phonies, that one defeat will lick them." However, it often takes the inspiring coach to rally their spirits. When God called to Elijah, "What doest thou here?" he sent the depressed prophet forth to perform three of the important acts of his life.

If you are ever under the juniper tree, remember that Abraham Lincoln failed in business in 1831, was defeated for the legislature in 1832, failed in business again in 1833, was elected to the legistlature in 1834, had his sweetheart die in 1835, had a nervous breakdown, 1836, was defeated for speaker in 1838, was defeated for elector in 1840, was defeated for Congress in 1843, was elected to Congress in 1846, was defeated for re-election in 1848, was defeated for the Senate in 1855, was defeated for vice-president in 1856, was defeated for the Senate in 1858; but he was elected President in 1860.—The Teacher.

Meeting Temptations

by Wesley Kaufman

"Watch and pray that ye enter not into temptation; the Spirit indeed is willing, but the flesh is weak." Matt. 26:41.

Life is full of peril. Satan is no supersititous myth, but an actual foe, "going about like a roaring lion seeking whom he may devour." Cunning, powerful and treacherous he hates God and hates the good. He tempted Christ. He wanted to "sift" Peter, and he wants to sift us too.

Two things he especially tries to do with us; to draw us back into his service; or failing in that, to make us just as inefficient as possible in Christian work. To make us inefficient he first attempts to lead us into sin. Yielding of sin he knows makes cowards of us. Our cowardice discourages us in the Christian life, and once discouraged we are almost of no use in Christian work, as D. L. Moody said, "God seldom uses a discouraged Christian." But Satan's real purpose is to destroy us. As Jael killed Sisera while he slept so Satan would first put to sleep and then kill us.

But how are we to meet temptations? What are some of the conditions of victory?

1. The first condition is heart consecration, being wholly and loyally Christ's. Satan may be very strong, but he loses his power over us when we are wholly sanctified to Christ.

2. A second condition of victory we may call strategy. Strategy is the way some armies succeed in war. It is one way the Christian can succeed in the battle with Satan. Paul gives us a hint of what this means when he says "Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good." It is possible to have our hearts and hands so occupied with things that are good that Satan can find no place in us.

The story is told that Mr. Moody at a meeting picked up a glass and holding it before the audience asked, "how can I get the air out of this glass?" There was no response. Reaching for a pitcher of water he filled the glass to overflowing. He then said that every bit of air had been emptied from the glass. Just so can we keep Satan, the world, and worldly things out of our hearts. It is by filling it to overflowing with the things of Christ and of the Spirit. This is wise strategy. It is keeping out Satan by being pre-occupied by Christ. It is a most successful way of overcoming Satan and his wiles.

3. Let us avoid temptations that are not in the path of Christian duty. We pray. "Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil." Let us not expose ourselves to unnecessary temptations.

The story is told of a man who professed conversion. His sin had been drunkenness, but upon being converted he said he would prove its genuineness by going to the city, passing by all the saloons, and coming home as sober as he went. It can be no surprise to anyone to know that having gone in that spirit he came home as drunk as ever. He met needless temptation, and not in the way of his duty. Pray the Lord to keep you from presumptuous sins and carefully avoid all temptations not in the way of duty.

4. But temptations will come, what then?

(1) Watch. "Keep thy heart with all diligence, for out of it are the issues of life." Watch every avenue by which the enemy makes his approach.

(2) Pray. Pray for a way of escape if God will show that to you. If he cannot grant you that, pray for help and strength to resist and overcome in open, face-to-face battle with the powers of darkness.

Men and devils may tempt, but men and devils cannot force us to yield. Martin Luther used to say, "We cannot keep the birds from flying over our heads, but we can prevent them from building their nests in our hair." So we cannot prevent temptations from whispering in our ears, but we can prevent them from making nests in our hearts. No one can compel us to sin.

"Blessed is the man that endureth temptation, for when he is tried he shall receive the crown of life, which the Lord hath promised to them that love Him,"

Wesley Kaufman is a member of the Bethany Church, Kingman, Kansas. This paper was presented at a "Christian Workers Program" which to Bethany is the same as the C. E. programs most churches have. The evening's program consisted of three talks: "Meeting Temptations," "What the Church Expects of Me," and "What I Expect of the Church."

The Intermediate Senior, and Young Adult groups of Stirling Avenue church, Kitchener, Ontario, presented a religious drama "The Lost Church" at the Sunday evening service, September 15. The four scences take place in the home of a worldly man who has no use for the church. He has a dream depicting what the world would have been like without the church and, therefore, changes his attitude declaring his allegiance to Christ and the church. For four years the young people have annually sponsored a Sunday evening service at which an offering is taken to boost the building fund.

The interest in a fellowship among Christian youth by correspondence is continuing to be manifested. A recent letter was received from Winnipeg, Manitoba, expressing the desire to establish a correspondence fellowship between the young people of Winnipeg and those in foreign lands. Those interested in such correspondence are urged to write the editor of the Mennonite Youth section for more particulars.

Recently a report was made in these columns regarding cattle shipments which was erroneous. Here are the most recent figures: Between June 29, 1945 and August 17, 1946, the sea-going cowboys have made 4,310 man trips, shipping 61,558 horses and 21,273 cows abroad. In spite of the larger proportion of horses, those who shipped across still are called "cowboys."

A report from the Friends Committee on National Legistlation states that the judiciary committees of both houses of Congress have reported out favorable on a bill to establish a claims commission for Japanese Americans who had been evacuated during the war. This commission would attempt to make just payment for the losses Japanese-American incurred by being evacuated. This action if favorably legislated will make possible a less embittered feeling by Japanese-Americans because of their experience.

In a meeting with the UNRRA's council prior to the Geneva conference of the UNRRA organization, some twenty organizations were represented. The advisability of letting UNRRA expire in mid-winter was discussed and, interestingly enough, the most vocal supporter of continued American responsibility for relief was the Veterans of Foreign Wars.

In July, the brewers sent representatives to the Department of Agriculture to request the repeal of the 30 per cent cut in grain supplies for breweries. There were thirty speakers representing the breweries and two speakers opposing the breweries request—the W. C. T. U. and the Friends Committee on National Legislation. The cut remained in effect. The brewery interests did not get additional grain.

Waldensian Center

Boyd Nelson writes that a center and home for the M. C. C. work among the Waldenses has now been established. He also suggests that there is a general interest among the Waldenses for Mennonite literature such as peace, church history, and doctrine. He requests available literature from closing CPS libraries, and for copies of Martyrs Mirror and works of Menno Simon. "The reason for this request is that a large number of people have asked about Mennonites and seem open to learning about them. Besides the histories are very similar and would have much appeal among these people."

Departures and Arrivals

Walter Eicher is scheduled to leave New York on September 28 for the French zone of Germany. He has been appointed as one of the three MCC-CRALOG representatives in Germany and his work will be similar to that of Robert Kreider in the American zone. Cornelius Dyck, now in Holland, will enter the British zone in the near future to take up similar duties.

Julius G. Toews of Altona, Manitoba, left New York on September 25 for Rotterdam, Holland. He is fulfilling a special assignment as relief worker in Northwest Europe and will also persue the work of auditing MCC relief expenditures.

Richard Bentizinger, Ottumwa, Iowa, sailed from New York on September 26 for Genoa, Italy. He will work with the M. C. C. relief unit in Italy.

Dr. and Mrs. Alvin Gaede and Gladys (Sommers) Gingerich arrived safely Asuncion, Paraguay, according to a cable received September 26.

MATERIAL AID

Sugar for Relief Canning

Information has been received that sugar for relief canning by a community or commercial processor may be obtained by the canner. The final disposition is not a factor involved in the granting of the sugar. An allotment of this type is granted in section 191.10 of the Third Revised Ration Order No. 3. The amount of sugar per commodity is covered in section 17.1 (.103) (g). The application should be submitted by the canner directly to his State OPA office. In case of difficulty in obtaining an allotment from a state board, contact should be made with the Material Aid Section of the MCC.

A limited amount of sugar is still available for group projects where canning is not done by an organized cannery. Requests for ration points should be directed to the Akron office.

MENNONITE AID SECTION NOTES

The Mennonite Aid Section at its meeting on September 13, 1946, recommended that C. F. Klassen represent M. C. C. in Europe in the task of moving Mennonite displaced persons, and that an M. C. C. sponsored incorporated allied organization to set up through which offices all funds for financing migrations be assembled and handled. The Mennonite Aid Section further recommended that a committee of eight brethren be appointed to prepare the plans for the task of moving Mennonite displaced persons. Members of this planning committee were appointed as follows: C. L. Graber, Elvin Souder, C. A. DeFehr, J. W. Warkentin, H. J. Andres, Ernest Bennett, Winfield Fretz, and William T. Snyder. The planning committee is scheduled to meet on September 28 at Goshen, Indiana.

CPS NOTES

Fort Collins Men Thanked for Services

The following letter from Ray M. Barger, Sheriff of Larimer County, Colorado, was received by the men of Fort Collins CPS Camp, Colorado: "I wish to express my sincere thanks and appreciation for your cooperation and efforts in the recent search for Harley Booth at Drake, Colorado. Your splendid work in this mission is very recommendable and deserves special recognition for the outstanding ability shown, also for assistance which you boys have afforded this office in fighting fires and other assistance. Men of goodwill working together are the soundest underwriters of the American Way of Life."

Philippine Relief Unit

Selective Service has tentatively approved the use ten of CPS men for relief in the Philippines. To qualify an assignee must have been in camp three months and would be subject to a three-year assignment. A number of these men have already been chosen, but any others who are interested may apply immediately to J. N. Byler, Director of Relief.—Released Sepetmber 27, 1946, Mennonite Central Committee.

The price of CARE Packages has been reduced from the regular $15.00 to $10.00 effective October 1, 1946. Many folks will be wondering what will be done with the extra $5.00 remittances that will have been received after October 1. It has been decided that this amount will be set aside in a separate fund from which undesignated packages will be purchased for needy Mennonites, or for packages for which names will be supplied.

Jottings

—Johannestal Church, Hillsboro, Kansas: Five of our young people are attending Bethel College this year. We sent twenty-three Goodwill Christmas Bundles to the M. C. C. September 22 we celebrated a Harvest Thanksgiving. In the forenoon we had Dr. R. C. Kauffman speak to us on his impressions of India, received during his two years of relief work there. Among other things he pointed out that until you change the basic structure of the people you can't even help them. This is where missionary work comes in. Two reasons for doing relief work are: it is our Christian obligation; secondly missionary work needs relief work. Then we all had a "Liebes Mahl" together in the church basement. In the afternoon we had several musical selections, including solos by Mr. Alvin Franz of Odessa, Washington. Dr. Ed. G. Kaufman, president of Bethel

HEADQUARTERS OFFICE CORNER

The officers of the General Conference have appointed Rev. Gerhard G. David Toews, resigned, on the General Conference Board of Home Missions.—Walter H. Dyck, Secretary

We Have Your Number

If the address on your copy of THE MENNONITE each week has a number to the right of your name, like this: C-18

Your name C-18
Your city
Your state

it means that YOUR CHURCH has adopted the 100 per cent plan. It has sent you a gift subscription, as a church.

Chances are the members of your church are well informed about what's going on in the Kingdom Work of the Mennonite Church—they KNOW about such things as foreign relief, occupation of the English, French, American and Russian zones in Germany, about our missionary activities, CARE packages, carloadlot shipments of food to the hungry, latest news on CPS policy, Conference projects, young people's activities, and "who recently moved" where!

The 100-per-cent plan helps everyone: It helps the pastor with inspirational articles and an informed lay audience. It helps the church member, who knows the work of his church in the world-wide arena of human affairs and who, therefore, feels the uplift of Christian brotherhood. It helps your conference put out a better paper without additional costs, because the more people read it, the less it costs to put it out.

C-57 is the highest number we have used so far. That means 57 churches have found the 100-per-cent plan helpful. Is YOUR church ONE of the 57? Why not make that something to talk about on Sunday afternoon get-togethers, at family reunions, at church meetings, at church dinners—and see what happens!

also of his trip to Europe. He also showed pictures of smoke-jumping. Mrs. Waldo Nickel is in the local hospital as a result of injuries received when the Nickel car was hit head-on by a car driven by a driver under the influence of liquor. This is another argument against the proposed let-down in liquor laws in the state of Kansas. We are looking forward to a visit by Miss Elsa Grantland, who has been doing mission work in the hills of North Carolina under the General Conference Home Mission Board.—Mrs. E. R. Funk, Corr.

—First Church, McPherson, Kansas: Rev. and Mrs. Roland Goering reported a very enjoyable time at the Ministers' Retreat. During their absence on Sunday, September 8, Dr. A. M. Lohrentz gave an interesting talk and answered several questions concerning the Mennonite settlement in Paraquay. Approximately thirty-five Goodwill Christmas Bundles were sent the M.C.C. Rev. H. B. Schmidt, from the Tabor Church, Goessel, Kansas, and Rev. Roland Goering had a pulpit exchange on Sepetmber 22. This idea was an outgrowth of the Ministers' Retreat and is for the purpose of getting the different Mennonite churches better acquainted with one another.—Mrs. Homer Kaufman, Corr.

—Eden Church, Moundridge, Kansas: On September 29 Dr. E. G. Kaufman brought a very interesting and informative report on his recent tour of Europe with Dr. Miller of Goshen College. Rev. Ronald von Riesen brought an inspiring message in the morning.—Ellis Goering, Corr.

—Dr. and Mrs. John R. Schmidt, who have cared for the health needs of the Mennonites in the Paraguayan Chaco since 1944, have returned to the United States. They arrived at Newton, Kansas, last week. (If you missed Dr. Schmidt's article on "The Mennonite Mission in the Chaco," then see The Mennonite of September 24.

—Mennonite Bible Mission, Chicago, Illinois: Since the fall term at the Mennonite Biblical Seminary has begun, a number of the students have assisted in the church services. Special musical numbers were given by Mr. and Mrs. Bert Russel, David Habegger, and a quartet composed of Mr. and Mrs. David Habegger and Mr. and Mrs. Irwin Richert. Mr. Richert also gave an interesting talk on his trip to Europe as an attendant on a cattle boat. Dr. A. Warkentin, President of the Seminary, delivered the morning message September 22, and Ernst Harder spoke Sunday evening. Esther Neufeld is now attending Bethel College, and Elvina Neufeld is attending the University of Illinois School of Medicine.—Evelyn Triebe, Corr.

Volume 61. October 15, 1946 Number 41

Warm-hearted Mennonites from many communities in the United States contributed the food which fills the boxes shown in the above picture. C.P.S. men are checking these boxes preparatory to sending them to Europe. According to an item which recently appeared in the youth section of this paper, 53 per cent of the food sent from America to the American zone of Germany was supplied by two small groups, the Quakers and the Mennonites. The item further stated that 90 per cent of all the food contributed by Protestant Christianity in the United States to Evangelisches Hilfswerk in Germany were Mennonite Central Committee supplies. According to our understanding Evangelisches Hilfswerk is the relief organization of the Protestant churches of Germany. Therefore, if the foregoing figures are correct, it is evident that the need in Germany must still be very, very great for, Mennonite relief efforts must be very small in face of the needs of a nation which has been so largely reduced to rubble. In former issues we have printed expressions of thanks for flour contributed by the Mennonites. On another page of this issue is a letter of appreciation sent by a German pastor to the Mennonite Relief Clothing Centers, Newton, Kansas, for some clothing.

". . . Lord, when saw we thee an hungered, and fed thee? or thirsty, and gave thee drink?

When saw we thee a stranger, and took thee in? or naked and clothed thee? Or when saw we thee sick, or in prison, and came unto thee?

And the King shall answer and say unto them, Verily I say unto you, Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." Matt. 25:37-40.

"Inasmuch . . . ye have done it unto me."

From the editor's point - of - view:

SIN needs to be thought of clearly if Christians are to keep from swallowing camels while straining at gnats. It seems that in order to see sin for what it is one needs to have a clear understanding of God's purpose for man. If Jesus voiced God's purpose for man when he prayed, "That they all may be one; as thou Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us," then a right relationship with God and man would seem to be very important. In that case it is up to man to find his right place in life, the place where God wants him. This makes sin something like a man's attempt to forge to the head of the line after refusing to take his place, while those in the line are tempted to exclaim, "Who does he think he is anyway?" The sinner has a wrong idea of himself, of God, and of others. It would seem that to see sin clearly it is necessary to see God, self, and others clearly. (In order to get at the nature of sin, we are presenting in this issue a symposium on "What Is Sin?" See page 3.)

FUNERALS need to be harmonized with the rest of life. People usually do not think much of the nature of a funeral until the last moment of someone's life in the body has literally passed. At such a time it is also difficult to think, for the emotions have sway. To make funerals more in harmony with the lives that preceed them necessitates thought when the emotions are calm. We trust that the article on funerals, which appears elsewhere in this issue, will be helpful in a matter which nearly all must face sooner or later.

THE INDIVIDUAL AND THE SOCIAL need to be balanced as far as the organization of an individual or of a society is concerned. The lonely recluse needs social activities. One who likes a continual social whirl needs more periods of quiet in which he can become better integrated. The introvert needs to become more extraverted, and the extravert needs to become more introverted. So also it is with nations. America is known as the land of "rugged individualism." Russia is known as the land of "socialism." In America we enjoy a lot of individualism, but when that individualism begins to throw our economy into confusion and eventually into depressions, then we tend to agree that we need a better plan for running the dear, old U. S. A. Then it is felt that perhaps America could plan a little more in place of letting everyone do as is good in his own eyes. Our great natural resources, our vast expanses of territory, and our democratic background have helped to absorb many a shock which would otherwise have rocked us. But our population is increasing and our natural resources are decreasing. The trend is towards more planning for the "general welfare." Russia, on the other hand, is known as a land where individual liberties are very much subject to central control. It is the land of five-year plans, etc. It is a land of regulation, where the individual is not permitted to do just pretty much as he pleases. It is a land where the welfare of all is to be served by the individual. It is a land where there has been terrible suffering. Some feel that Russia is moving more toward individualism. If it is true that the nations which emphasize individualism are becoming more mindful of the general welfare, and if it is true that the land of socialism is being led to a greater appreciation of the individual, then it would seem to indicate that the two emphases need each other. Both emphases have good in them, but when either one is driven to the extreme, then it becomes something with the seeds of decay in it. In fact, it would seem that neither can exist very long alone. Man has very much of a tendency to see halves as wholes. Just because a half is an excellent half he becomes so enthusiastic about it as to claim it as the whole. If our analysis so far is correct, then it would seem that America and Russia might learn from each other in humility and get along more peacefully. If this became a fact, then many a problem, which is vexing the two today, might be settled much more easily. The Christian faith makes one whole of the individual and social emphases, for it brings to the individual the highest realization of self possible while at the same time it makes of him a servant of all. This faith has life in it.

What Is Sin?

Rev. Elbert Koontz, Pastor of the Beatrice Mennonite Church, Beatrice, Nebraska:

The problem of sin is a problem that has faced man from the time that he became aware of the fact that he was free to choose. Various philosophies and theological systems have tried to explain its origin and define it in various ways and in various times. The Biblical conception is set forth in the book of Genesis and remains true today, both theologically and psychologically.

Sin entered the human race when man yielded to the temptation to do something that was forbidden. Sin still works the same way. Sin, however, is not only doing those things that are forbidden. We believe that Christianity is an affirmation and is something that is to be carried out in positive terms. Our conception of sin is often pathetically small and can be expressed in the little jingle that one sometimes hears:

"I don't smoke
I don't chew,
I don't go
With the girls that do."

Sin is far more than the negatives. In James 4:7 we read of the other aspect of sin when it says, "To him, therefore, that knoweth to do good, and doeth it not, to him it is sin." This sheds a new light on what sin is. It is not merely the legalistic conception of transgression of the laws that God has given. It is not merely rebellion against God. It is not doing the thing that we know to be good. Sin is missing the mark.

Expressed in other terms, Dean Carl Stolz in his book, The Psychology of Religious Living, says: "Psychologically sin is the disturbance of the equilibrium of the personality by an attitude or act inconsistent with the accepted standard." Our medical hospitals and mental hospitals are full of people who have had such disturbances. Anything that tends to harm the body, mind, or spirit is sin. It is ultimately a sin against God who creates us as we are.

Sin is the conscious choice of a lesser good or value n preference to a higher one when the higher value s known to the indivdual or group. Sin presupposes a tandard of ideals, and failing to live up to them is in. For the Christian Christ is the ideal. The Bible sets orth that standard.

Sin is that attitude of behavior in individuals or roups that is continually tearing down the good of life. t is continually burning up the good in life. It is a unning process. Sin is the choice of the lower when one nows the highest. Sin tends to defeat the higher in society. It is disloyality to the highest one feels. It is disregard for personality, both individually and nationally.

All this is to say that the absence of sin is not mere conforming to a legalistic, set standard. The Pharisees had such a standard and tried to follow it. To Jesus this was not sufficient. Paul tried to live up to this standard and avoid sin. He failed. He needed something more. That something more he met in Christ who did not change the standards that were set but gave him power to live by those standards and set before him a "more excellent way." It was a positive way. "For him, therefore, that knoweth to do good, and doeth it not, to him it is sin."

Rev. H. D. Burkholder, Pastor of the Immanuel Mennonite Church, Los Angeles, and President of the Pacific District Conference, and a senior at George Pepperdine College, Los Angeles:

Sin is one of the greatest facts in the world. A single issue of a daily paper ought to be sufficient to impress this truth on our heart. Moreover, the presence of death is only accounted for by the presence of sin. "By one man sin entered into the world and death by sin" (Romans 5:12).

One of the present dangers is the attempt, on the part of leading philosophers, psychologists and theologians, to minimize the heinousness of sin. They tell us that sin is only a weakness, a mistake, or an accident. However, according to a righteous, holy and just God, "sin is the transgression of the law" (I John 3:4). It is man's failure to conform to the divine standard. It is, basically, rebellion against God.

The Bible distinguishes between the terms "sin" and "sins." It is necessary for us to know the difference if we are to "rightly divide the word of truth."

"Sin" is the Greek word, hamartia, and means missing the mark or deviating from a prescribed law or duty. It is considered, not as an action, but as the quality or action, the evil principle.

"Sins" is the Greek word, hamartema, and means actual transgression. It is the evil principle of sin in action.

These terms, sin and sins, have often been contrasted as follows:

Sin is character; Sins are conduct.
Sin is the center; Sins, the circumference.
Sin is the root; Sins, the fruit.
Sin is the producer; Sins, the product.
Sin is what we are; Sins, what we have done.
Sin is the fountain; Sins, its flow.

We must recognize the fact that there is more than a grammatical difference between these words in the Bible.

Sin has its seat in the heart. "The heart is deceitful above all things and desperately wicked" (Jeremiah 17:9). "For out of the heart proceed evil thoughts, murders, adulteries, fornication, thefts, false witness, blasphemies" (Matthew 15:19). The heart, according to scriptural psychology, is the central organ of the soul out of which are the issues of life. And from this center its influence and operations spread to the intellect, the will, the affection, in short, to the entire man, including his body. In his sinful state the whole man is the object of God's displeasure.

The Great Physician, diagnosing man's case, says, "The whole head is sick, and the whole heart faint. From the sole of the foot even unto the head there is no soundness in it: but wounds, and bruises, and putrifying sores" (Isaiah 1:6). For a more detailed description read Romans 3:10-23.

Sin is more heinous than what we have been inclined to believe. Although it separates man from God, we can nevertheless rejoice in the remedy which God, the offended, has provided for man, the offender. "The blood of Jesus Christ, God's Son, cleanseth us from all sin" (I John 1:7). It is that blood, offered on the cross in atonement for our sins, which is the only remedy for man's horrible sin. "And without the shedding of blood there is no remission" (Hebrews 9:22).

Those who ignore or oppose the doctrine of atonement are trampling under foot the blood of Christ and are stamping out their only hope of salvation from sin.

Some intellectuals find it difficult to understand how God can take blood which is tangible to cleanse sin which is intangible. The writer also has difficulty in understanding this truth. However, as far as he is concerned, "God said it, and that settles it," for with God all things are possible.

Dear reader, the Bible says, "All have sinned." It also says, "The wages of sin is death," but thank God "Christ died for our sins" "that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish but have everlasting life." Let us plead the shed blood of Christ for the remission of our sin as well as our sins. "If we confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." (I John 1:9).

Rev. Wilmer Shelly, Pastor of the Topeka Mennonite Church, Topeka, Indiana:

Sin can be described as deviating from a given standard. If the standard is a goal then sin is missing it. If it is a command then sin is disobedience. If it is an ideal then sin is failure. Therefore, we speak of sin as missing the mark, as disobedience, and as failure—utter failure to "follow in His steps." Always it offends God. Sin is not an invention of the church; rather it is a hideous death-dealing and soul-destroying fact.

Sin can only bring sorrow, both to man and to God for since there is "joy in heaven over one sinner that repenteth" it can only follow that there is sorrow where there is no repentance. God did not bring sin into being, for why should "God sorrow over that which He Himself has brought into being"? (Bruce in his "Apologetics").

Hosea views sin as the estrangement of Israel from God. Isaiah views sin as insensibility to the holiness and majesty of God. Jesus gives us no information as to the origin of sin, but He considers all men as sinners and in need of repentance, for He suggests to the Apostles and to us that we should pray, "forgive us our sins" Luke 11:4. If salvation is for the whole world (John 3:16) than the whole world must stand in need of salvation and all men must be regarded as sinful. Jesus made no exception in the need for repentance.

Paul indeed recognizes sin in all men and himself as "the chief of sinners." There is "sin which dwelleth in me." (Rom. 7:17) Even if sins of commission were omitted, surely, we are all aware of many sins of omission for we have all come short of the glory of God, if not by commission then by omission. As far as Paul was concerned this carnal life was subject to desires which are sinful, but he urged the Romans (6:12) not to permit sin to reign in our mortal bodies. We are not to yield our members unto sin but unto God. The desire and tendency may be present, but we can be delivered from the power, (dominion) of it, Rom. 6:14. We can not be freed from sin, but we can be delivered from its bondage. Man is by creation carnal; he has a lower nature whose desires and passions tend to sin. We are not born with certain diseases but we have tendencies and our resistance is weaker for certain disease. Th Corinthians were carnal (I Cor. 3:3) and therefore subject to sin. They were as yet weak and immature and on a milk diet.

The Levitical concept of sin was that the inner lif was defiled by external acts. Jesus reversed this, fo "that which proceedeth out of a man that defileth th man," Mark 7:20. Jesus was therefore concerned abou the inner man "for out of the heart proceed evi thoughts, murders, adulteries, fornications, thefts, fals witness, blasphemies," Matt. 15:19. Who then shall de liver us? We thank God through Jesus Christ our Lor

Rev. Willard Claassen, Pastor of the Salem Churc Freeman, South Dakota, and a member of the Gener Conference Committee on Doctrine and Conduct:

Sin, or the moral failure of man, has been the su ject of almost endless speculation. In answering t question, why men sin, different explanations ha been given according to the varying viewpoints th have been taken of man and his relation to God a the world about him. These views of sin may be su med up under the following heads: 1. The belief of t ancients and of many until now that sin is mer sensuousness. This view grounds sin in the physic,

Can Our Funerals Please God?

by J. H. Langenwalter

The answer to the foregoing question is: "That depends on the funerals." A funeral is a rite used in the disposition of a dead human body.

A young physician in a large city had to live economically. He had been doing his office work himself. A poor woman, the mother of two little children, begged for a chance to earn a little money for herself and her children. He engaged her. She was to give the office a thorough cleaning on Saturday mornings. One Saturday morning the doctor found this woman gazing across the street where there was a large church. He stepped to the window and saw that there was a funeral. Then he was surprised to hear the woman say: "Some day I will have a funeral like that." She told him that every Saturday she paid a sum toward an "insurance" policy which would assure of a funeral with a lot of flowers, a fine casket and great display. When asked what provision she was making for her children, she simply gasped.

The family was on the way from an unsuccessful attempt at tenant farming during the depression to the home of the wife's parents in a distant state. On the way the youngest of five small children became ill and died. One of the busiest ordained men of the community was called to "officiate" at the funeral. He had been told that the family was desparately poor. He found evidence of that fact in everything, except the casket and the display of flowers. Afterward he was told that the car of the family had been "attached for necessary expenses." Before the whole truth was known, the family had been helped on its way by sympathetic people.

She had not grown old gracefully. Her children had avoided her for years. However, when she finally died, they made arrangements for a funeral "befitting the social and financial standing" of their mother. It was to be the "grandest funeral the old home town had ever seen," and it was, from their view point. The minister was duly informed that he was to give their mother due recognition for the fine Christian life she had lived. He refused to be untruthful. He gave food for thought to the living in a dignified way. The general public felt that he had met a bad situation in a wonderfully Christian way. The family saw to it that he was removed from his parish by the "proper authorities".

He had served well in the pulpits and the schools of several denominations. He became seriously ill. The doctors ordered a blood transfusion. The president, a truly great man at the head of one of the most noted colleges of our country, asked for volunteers. He was detained a few minutes after chapel. When he proceeded toward his office the halls were filled with students ready to give their blood for their beloved professor! It was too late. The funeral was characterized by quiet dignity and deep gratitude for the privilege of having known this man. The expressions of sympathy were sincere and without ostentation on the beautiful hillside on that eventide, and for years afterward.

A suggested program when the disposition of a dead human body becomes necessary:

A. Let a few friends attend to the disposition of the body as soon as possible and convenient. They will do it well and in the spirit of Jesus who opposed funeral shams in the home of Jairus.

B. Let there be a memorial service when most convenient and helpful to the family. Let them be seated in their usual places in the house of worship. If the service is to be held in another place, let the family sit where they prefer.

C. Let there be a printed program of the complete services.

Appropriate instrumental music should form the background of the whole service. Well prepared prayers and well selected passages of Scripture and poems can be followed on the program. This is also true of stanzas selected from fitting hymns and possibly also of a brief and truthful estimate of the life of the departed.

Too often at funerals the human voice has proved to be a hindrance rather than a help in a time of great need.

D. Let the service be brief and characterized by quiet and sincere sympathy. Such an occasion is no place for idle curiosity or harmful, emotional expressions.

Let, "As thy days, so shall thy strength be" and, "Underneath are the everlasting Arms" be the atmosphere of hope and courage for the family and friends of the departed. Let the spirit of "Bear ye one another's burdens," and "Love thy neighbor as thyself" be the message for the rest of the community.

Dr. J. H. Langenwalter, who for many years has served as college professor and president and as pastor of churches, is now pastor of the Lorraine Avenue Mennonite Church, Wichita, Kansas.

By Cornelius Krahn

Are Your Relatives in Need of Help? Rev. Bruno Ewert, formerly Pastor of the Heuboden Mennonite Church, now in Denmark, has sent us a list of more than four hundred Mennonite families, formerly from Prussia, and now scattered in the British and American zones of occupation. We hear and read quite a bit about the Prussian Mennonites that are now behind barbed wire in Denmark. Less is known about the greater number of these Mennonites scattered over Europe. The Mennonites of Denmark have succeeded in locating many of their close relatives among the latter. The above mentioned list is probably the largest of its kind and gives information on names, number of members in family and the former and present address. Especially Mennonites from the Newton and Beatrice communities will be interested in finding out whether they can locate some relatives in this way, since it is a well known fact that these people lack the bare necessities of life to a greater degree than those in Denmark. Send the names of people you are looking for to Miss Katie Andres, 414 East 4th Street, Newton, Kansas, who is willing to check the list for you and answer your request. Please enclose a self-addressed stamped envelope or postcard for your reply.

The Price of CARE Packages Reduced. The Cooperative for American Remittance to Europe Inc. (CARE) has just announced that beginning October 1 food packages formerly sent to Europe for fifteen dollars can now be purchased for ten dollars. They state, "now for ten dollars you can buy, with guaranteed delivery, (duty free and ration free) 29 lbs. of balanced food plus soap . . . for your relatives, friends, or other beneficiaries in eleven countries, or your money back."

"Ye Visited Me." Dr. Chr. Neff and Rev. Haendiges writes these lines after the visits paid to them by American Mennonites: "From all this we realize with how much brotherly love and with what sacrifice the American brethren think of our Brueder in Not, how they have helped them in the past and intend to help them in the future. You have not only 'cast your bread upon the waters,' but also you have 'come to visit us.' In all zones of our distressed country to the thousands of homeless refugees your brotherly hand is being extended. You are doing this out of love to our common Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ and out of love toward the brethren. We have become poor and cannot repay you, but we would like to express our heartfelt thanks. May the Lord reward you as he promised in Matthew 25:34-40. We shall cling to Him and His Word. Yours in Christian fellowship,

The Alsatian Mennonites reported in a recent letter, written by Rev. Jos. Widmer, about a conference which they had held near Muelhausen and also about the experiences which they had undergone during the war. During the early stage of the war Alsace was taken by the Germans after having been French since World War I. But that was only for a short time because the front soon returned. Muelhausen was destroyed to a large extent and Modenheim, where the writer lives, suffered severely. "December 1944 to February 1945 was, for our region, the hardest time. We were between the Germans and the French who were fighting from house to house and lived in our basements while the firing was going on. How precious the nearness and refuge of God became in those hours! If it were not for the loss of loved ones we would not have wanted to miss these precious hours."

An Outstanding Dutch Mennonite Leader Passes Away. Rev. C. Nijdam, chairman of the Algemeene Doopsgezinde Societeit, passed away July 12, 1946. This was only a few weeks after he had delivered a significant address at the Annual Meeting of the Dutch Mennonite conference in which he emphasized the "spiritual reconstruction" of the brotherhood pointing out means and ways of achieving it. It was unique that this meeting was attended by two American Mennonite representatives, Dr. Ed. G. Kaufman and Dr. E. E. Miller. Rev. Nijdam has served a number of churches, including the one in Amsterdam, and held many responsible positions in the brotherhood. Besides being the chairman of the Algemeene Doopsgezinde Societeit, he was for many years active in the Gemeentedag Beweging and the Dutch Mennonite mission association with mission fields in Java and Sumatra.

PROTESTANT HOSPITAL CHAPLAINS ORGANIZE

The first national organization of Protestant hospital chaplains was formed in Philadelphia on September 27. The group is to be known as the Association of Protestant Hospital Chaplains, and will be a section of the American Protestant Hospital Association.

For several years the American Protestant Hospital Association has been encouraging the development of chaplaincy work in its member hospitals. The number of Protestant hospitals having full-time chaplains has more than doubled in the past six years.

The purpose of the new Chaplains' Association is to provide a professional fellowship for Protestant ministers who give at least a major portion of their time to ministry in civilian hospitals—Protestant hospitals, mental hospitals, veterans hospitals, city general hospitals, and other types of hospitals.

It is estimated that nearly five hundred Protestant ministers now devote full-time ministry in civilian hospitals in the United States, including the 162 Protestant chaplains in Veterans Administration institutions.

Russel L. Dicks Chaplain of Wesley Memorial Hospital, Chicago, was elected first president of the new body.

Inquiries concerning membership should be addressed to the Rev. Leicester R. Potter, Jr. Massachusetts Memorial Hospital, Boston, Mass.

ANNOUNCING THE OPENING

of the Mennonite Book Store, Newton, Kansas

The Mennonite Book Store of Newton, Kansas, which was formerly operated in connection with the Mennonite Publication Office at 722 Main Street, is now located at 710 Main Street, Newton, Kansas. All the fixtures as well as all books and other merchandise belonging to the book department have been moved to the new location, and the business is now being continued there.

Since the establishing of this bookstore is a new undertaking on the part of the Board of Publication of the General Conference, it is fitting that the occasion of the formal opening of the same be accompanied by an appropriate dedication and that God's blessing be asked to rest upon this undertaking so that it may redown to His glory and prove a benefit to many through the Christian literature and other useful merchandise that will be sold there. For this purpose, and also as a special advertising feature, a formal opening will be observed on Saturday, October 19. On that day the Mennonite Book Store will be open from 8 o'clock in the forenoon to 9 o'clock in the evening, and all who can do so are invited to come in to look over the store and the merchandise and to make purchases of such articles as they desire to have. Promptly at 10 o'clock A. M. a brief dedicatory service will be observed to which everyone is invited.

Several other special features will be offered that day which will make you want to attend this formal opening. Ice Cream will be served free to all adults who register and to children under twelve years of age who are accompanied by at least one of their parents. In addition, 10 per cent rebate will be allowed on all purchases made on that day amounting to one dollar or more. The same rebate will also be allowed on all mail orders during the week beginning October 13. By purchasing from the Mennonite Book Store you help support the publication work of the General Conference because all net profits derived from the business are used to promote the publication work of the conference. Don't forget the day. We will be pleased to welcome any and all who come.

German Pastor Sends Letter of Thanks for Clothing

Relief Centre of Evangelical Church

in Baden, Mosbach, Sept. 15, 1946

Dear Friends in the Lord in America!

When we received a new shipment of goods for relief of the suffering and the refugees through the CRALOG a few weeks ago it included close to 30 bales of clothing from you. Your address was on the labels designating the senders.

And so we want to thank you heartily for your love and kindness. You just don't know what happiness you brought to us, and how many people we have been able to help with these things. We as a Centre of Relief can only help as the means are put into our hands. The need is immense. Thousands of refugees have already come into our church area without a dress, a suit, or shoes. No bed is there, no bedding and underwear.

Sometime ago before your shipment came we had solicited clothing in our churches. Our brethren in the faith gave what they could, but it was not much, since we are all almost equally poor. I myself am a refugee and came here without anything, and sick. I am not getting better, as the food is so (scarce) poor.

But I am thankful to God that I may be leader in the evangelical relief centre here, and channel joy to those in need. With the clothing coming from you we have already been able to give aid to about 3000 people. You should have seen the joy that shone out of their eyes. Most of the refugees still live in temporary quarters. Many have no stove and no cooking utensils and cannot even cook their food. Could you possibly help us there a little? We certainly are thankful for your help and for each gift. There are many to whom we could not yet give as the number of the refugees is so very large. In our church area alone there are 15,000 refugees. Of these 7000 are children, and almost 2000 old and sick people.

We want to again thank you heartily for your gifts, which are such a big help to us. It is a comforting gladness for us to know that in a country people of a faith think of us. We ask of you to pray for us that God help us out of our troubles. And do not forget us in future days.

With many greetings from thankful hearts in Christian Fellowship of faith

Wallach, Pastor.

WHAT IS SIN?

bodily nature of man. The body becomes the occasion of all temptation and the executor of all evil desire (the apostle Paul and John refuted this heresy in the latter part of the first and in the second century A.D.) A variation of this view is the explanation of sin as an inheritance from a brute ancestory. Representatives of this view were Plato and more recently Schleiermacher, who has been called the father of modern liberal theology. 2. It is claimed by others that sin is merely finiteness or that which is incident to the imperfect development of man. As men creep before they walk, so they sin before they learn righteousness. Thought of as the fruit of ignorance and impotence, sin is not absolutely, but only relatively evil—an element in human education and a means of progress. Representatives of this view were Spinoza, Goethe, Carlyle, Emerson and many others. This view of sin is frequently found in theological writings today. It will appear to the reader without extended examination here that these views of moral evil are positively unbiblical.

Essential Principle

Reverent scholars of the Bible have sought to find in the scriptures the essential principle of sin. That is to say, what is sin in its essence? Various answers have been given: Augustine and Acquinas held the essence of sin to be pride; Luther and Calvin regarded its essence to be unbelief; Kreibig held it is "world-love;" A. H. Strong and many others with him held the essence of sin to be selfishness; the Brunner, Barth tradition holds it to be rebellion and disobedience to God; and thus one might add to the list.

The foregoing definitions of sin suggest that it is difficult to reduce sin to a single essential principle. Many of these principles, if not all, need rounding out with other biblical truths about sin. To insist, for example, that sin is merely selfishness is correct as far as it goes, but taken by itself selfishness is too indefinite a term to cover the other meanings which enter into the definition of sin. Is there necessarily selfishness in unbelief, malice or hatred of God? Likewise, the definition of sin as lack of conformity to God's law (I John 3:4) is indeed true as far as it goes, but behind the law is a personal God and sin is also a breach of our personal relation with God. (Psa. 51:4; Luke 15:18)

What Is Sin?

Jesus portrayed the ideal human life as a life of fellowship with God the Father. Sin is the want of this fellowship. Jesus traces sin to the inner motive of men. The sinful thought is in quality the same as the outward act. The exalted standard of Christ's own life is the measure of human obligation and at the same time the criterion for judging sin and guilt.

Sin is "any thought, word, action, omission, or desire contrary to the law of God." It is any want of conformity to the character of God whether it be in act (wilful acts as well as negligence), disposition (the habit of sinning becoming a disposition to sin), or state (all men are in a state of sin by inheritance, Rom. 5:12).

REPORTER VISITS FORT COLLINS C. P. S. CAMP

Eldon Roark, news writer for the Rocky Mountain News visited the Fort Collins, Colorado, C. P. S. camp in August. His news write-up lists many of the well-known facts about C. P. S. in a fair and sympathetic way. An interesting bit from his report is the following:

"The camp has a softball team that plays in the Fort Collins league. They were in second place till their pitcher got discharged. Now they have dropped 'way down.

'Do the fans ever jeer at your boys and embarrass them because they are conscientious objectors?' I asked.

'No, they don't,' Mr. Gaeddert said. 'Good sportsmanship prevails. The people in Fort Collins are very nice to us, and we appreciate it.' "

(Mr. Willard Gaeddert, director of the Fort Collins camp, is scheduled to teach physics at the University of Nebraska, Lincoln, Nebraska, upon his release from C. P. S. He formerly taught in Oklahoma.)

On Selecting a Campsite

by Ronald von Riesen

(Continuing the series of discussions regarding a Retreat Ground, we submit an article presenting the particular problems the Western Districts leaders are thinking about in light of their plans of obtaining their own site. Rev. Ronald von Riesen, Vice President of the Western District Young People's Union, is the contributor of the accompanying article.)

Before any group enters into a project, it is of utmost importance that our objectives be stated clearly. Objectives not only give meaning to our ventures but also tend to give direction and guidance in carrying out a task. This is especially true in the selection of a camp site. If we consider a retreat a complete withdrawal from familiar surroundings for the purpose of spiritual renewal, then a moderate distance should not be too great a factor if ideal physical surroundings are available. If, on the other hand, we consider a retreat primarily a drawing together for fellowship, then physical surroundings are not of paramount importance. For myself, I feel very keenly that the former should be our main objective.

A retreat should be a school in Christian living. Bible studies, nature studies, playing, eating and worshipping together, all are a part of the Christian life. The program centers not around classes, but living. There is little danger of compartmentalizing our religion in such an environment.

If that is our main objective, then we can readily see the value of ideal physical surroundings. The place may have much to do with the reality of the retreater's experience. A rustic environment becomes a visual aid when it offers beauty, quietness, and calm, and invites one to a new experience with his Creator. The environment can also be a liability. That which is unbeautiful and uncomfortable will also etch itself in the retreater's memory.

What then are some guiding principles that may help us in selecting a campsite? First in regard to the physical surroundings, and second with respect to administrative problems.

Physical Surroundings

1. The camp should be in an out-of-doors, natural setting away from any congested area. It should be reasonably isolated or far away from home. It is well to keep away from public roads or summer resorts. The noise of a truck or train may spoil the effectiveness of almost any worship experience.

2. There should be plenty of open ground for games, hikes, or any creative ventures. Buildings should never be crowded together. A cabin set in a clump of trees tends to give it personality and a uniqueness which is not present in an over crowded trailer village.

3. It should be a place of beauty, should have enough shade for many informal gatherings, and an abundance of sunlight for playing. It should have places for outdoor vespers, councils and campfires. It should be a place of simplicity free from superficial equipment.

4. It should be located near a sufficient supply of clear, cool water. One cannot be too careful about the water supply. In case of a spring, the source should always be investigated. The water should be tested annually by a competent chemist. Usually old campsites are undesirable for health and sanitary reasons.

5. It should be located in an interesting country where there will be ample opportunity to see things worthwhile. It may be a cave or a vantage point. The group is fortunate if they can locate near a lake, but one should be sure it is safe, that it has a reasonable constant water level and does not become muddy after every rain. If you cannot locate near a lake, seek something to take its place such as hills, bluffs, or mountains.

6. It should be located a reasonable distance from home or the center of the constituency served. Junior age groups should not be taken too far from home. I would suggest that a reasonable distance is that which can easily be driven in a half or three-quarters of a day. Folks should feel that they are away from home and not just on a weekend outing.

Administrative Problems

With respect to administrative problems a number of points come to my attention:

1. Who should own the grounds, the Young People or the Conference? This probably depends on the stability of the Young People's Organization. In general, I feel that young people need this responsibility.

It is good training in democracy. This will bring forth dividends in future church leadership. Young People are not as apt to abuse their freedom as we sometimes think. Expect the best and you receive the best. On the other hand, there are some good reasons for having the conference own the grounds. It may produce more confidence in the minds of the parents. People may more readily contribute to the development of the camp grounds if they are assured of adult leadership.

2. What should be the capacity of the Camp? In order to provide for maximum group fellowship and the least amount of regimentation the group should not exceed 100. Most authorities agree that one can do the most effective work with a group of 75 to 100. There should be one counselor to every 6 or 8 boys or girls. This gives for more individual attention and friendliness between the retreater and the leader.

3. Planning the development of the site is of utmost importance. A five or ten year program should be laid out. Not all will be completed the first year. One should begin with the most essentials. Those buildings which affect the health and general well-being of the retreater should be completed first. Planning committees would do well to avail themselves of expert advice in the camping field. There are many basic camping manuals available, such as: Camps and Their Modern Administration, by Hazel K. Allen, which can be secured from the Women's Press, 600 Lexington, New York City; Camp Management, by H. W. Gibson, Greenburg Publishers, New York City; also available is the monthly Camping Magazine, the official publication of the American Camping Association, 181 Chestnut Avenue, Metuchen, New Jersey.

The retreat idea is yet in its infancy in our Mennonite churches. Other denominations, such as the Church of the Brethren, have made far greater strides in expanding the possibilities of retreats. I hope that in the not too distant future we will have retreats for all age groups: juniors, intermediates, young people, young adults, married couples, ministers, teachers, and even family retreats. This should be a part of the total educational program of the church. People need to withdraw in order to renew their spirits and strengthen their moorings.

A World Newspaper

by Paul W. Keller

You may think you can "keep up with things" pretty well by reading your daily newspaper. But there is more evidence every day that people are more likely to be confused and misled than enlightened by what they read in the daily press.

Particularly are readers tricked into thinking of the news, as "national," when in reality there is very little news-worthy material these days that logically can be separated from its effect on the whole world scene. In fact, it is this sort of emphasis on thinking in "national" terms that keeps us from understanding the other nations of the world and makes possible the building up of tensions that may lead to World War III. To see ourselves as part of "one world" and to understand how current news touches us and every other world citizen may be a substantial step toward lasting peace.

That conviction has impressed a group of ex-C.P.S men to the extent that they, along with other like-minded individuals, have bent all their energies in recent months to the founding of World, an international weekly newspaper. It is hoped that the first issue can make its appearance in October.

In specific terms the aims of the new weekly are these:

1. To eliminate any geographic viewpoint from news coverage, to show the world sweep of common problems, to demonstrate that people live primarily in the world rather than in a particular portion of it.

2. To subscribe the news services both here and abroad, including the facilities of some of the world's better newspapers. Together with the dispatches of World's own correspondents, the composite will be presented factually, briefly and interestingly.

3. To present news as current history. Present editors rarely try to integrate stories from various sources on the same general subject, but leave it to the reader to piece them together.

4. To provide world news at the cheapest possible rate. Cost will be 5 cents per issue, $2.50 per year for

The Experience of Hunger

by Leonore Hollander Koehler

Leonore Koehler, recently repatriated after twelve and a half years in Europe, was a nutritional expert in Philadelphia before going to Prague. Her experience of hunger during the war in Germany was one endured by thousands and lies ahead of thousands more this coming winter.

Unspectacular Symptoms

Symptoms of slow quantitative undernourishment are very unspectacular. We all agreed that the first few days were terrible. In the middle of an active forenoon there would be attacks of giddiness accompanied by an intolerable hollow feeling. Pressure, like the classic tightening of the belt, gave a certain alleviation, and fainting was forstalled by a few minutes' rest. I used to lie at full length when an attack came, whether at home or in the woods, and occasionally fell asleep. Frau F. described a fear of falling off her bicycle, and Frau H. and Frau Z. told of a comic occasion when both napped while peeling potatoes together. We found this not agreeable and refreshing, as is normal drowsiness, and learned to overcome it by economy in motion.

In the time the body becomes accustomed to the empty feeling. Presumably stomach and intestines accommodate themselves by shrinking and eliminating fruitless contractions. The feelings of lassitude and weakness continue, but can be overcome by will power to an amazing extent.

I observed no cases of specific physical syndromes like starvation edema or vitamin deficiency. This was probably because our famine period approached gradually, permitting slow adaptation, and because of our nutritive diet. We received a minute supply of meat, skim milk and cheese, and additional protein from the bread made from bran, oatmeal, and possibly the ubiquitous potato. Vitamins were allocated with food supplements to expectant and nursing mothers and the sick. Thus the chief objective symptoms of slow starvation were inordinate loss of weight, weakness and greatly impaired resistance to whatever complaint the individual were exposed or disposed. Subjective states included hunger pangs, mental depression, weariness and irritability.

Doling out and scrimping were the rule, scheming and planning necessary, watchful marketing a bugbear. Distribution of scant supplies absorbed a large share of everyone's attention. If Frau Lehmann missed the fish and Frau Schultz had but failed to say so, a beautiful friendship was liable to sudden rift. Peaceful family life could be severely disrupted by lapses in butter discipline, and complex rotation systems were often devised to prevent Mutter from always eating bread heels.

But often small exchanges, sometimes at great sacrifice, brightened life for days. We mothers will not forget the shopkeepers who saw to it that we were not at a disadvantage because of the little time we had to shop. The bombed-outs, returning soldiers and refugees sometimes received help from the puny reserves of others, and often Jews received a share of German food despite strong official pressure. Hunger brings out strongly the good or bad in man.

Pictured here are some children being fed CRALOG food in Kassel, Germany. An extensive supplementary feeding program has been undertaken in Kassel fortifying the meager diet on which the children and adults exist. It is an interesting fact that 53 per cent of the food supplied in the American occupied zone of Germany has come from Quaker and Mennonite agencies.

" . . . to the fat of the eyelids"

Loss of body substance was evenly progressive in all cases I saw. Two of my acquaintances still looked fairly well filled out even after protracted hunger, but complained of lack of attentiveness and lapses of memory greater than the slight absentmindedness we all observed, together with passing difficulties in speech and vision. For most of us the body fat and muscle reserves were completely utilized, even to the fat of the eyelids. The sequence in which tissues and function were lost seemed to be very individual, and the indication was that those better able to mobilize the reserves were longer spared the ills which invariably come when fasting lasts too long.

The reaction of the individual at the breaking point of his strength also varies greatly. Minor ailments such as colds come easily and develop frequently into bronchitis, pleurisy and tuberculosis. Boils, carbuncles and mysterious skin and nerve infections are rife and very difficult to curb. The dreaded intestinal diseases are likely to be fatal, and with resistance low, epidemics are imminent.

The lassitude of starvation shows itself physically rather than mentally. Thoughts seem much more profound than during normal times, all emotions are intense and race madly, probing the past and present, dashing the inscrutible wall of the future. There is no lack of logic, but victims of real starvation cannot stem the agonizing squirrel-cage rush of recriminations. Past errors, especially one's own, pass in review, but there the matter never rests. Blames wander from them to Hilter's overdrawn account, to the nearest well-fed individual, black market artist or country peasant.

Items of Interest

The Gulfport, Mississippi, and Bartow, Flordia, CPS units are developing a Voluntary Service program. Because the work at these two locations, acclaimed by local people and governmental officials as being of outstanding significance, is far from done and the need continues to be great, the M.C.C. has plans underway to continue the service even if C.P.S. comes to a close. Four young women have recently volunteered to work with these units as a part of a Vountary Service Program in these two areas. Miss Frances Beckenbach of Bluffton and Goshen Colleges, Miss Laura and Esther Wedel, registered nurses from Moundridge, Kansas, and Miss Ethel Eby of Lititz, Pennsylvania, have taken up voluntary service in Mississippi and Florida.

A report from the M.C.C. states that there are now twelve men remaining in the reserve group which has been serving as "sea going cowboys." A call has been issued for additional volunteers for this service which continues to be needed, the statement said.

The first time in the history of the Mennonite church now sees the intermingling of Dutch students with American students. Names are new for both Amercian and Dutch students. Names such as Ferf, Craandjik, Hilverda will become familiar property of American student's vocabularies. And Algemeene Doopsgezinde Societeit will become more real as well as the geography of Holland. The coming of the Dutch students is looked upon as a stride forward in reestablishing fellowship with Dutch brethren.

As of June 30, 1946, the M.C.C. reported that the total cost of their part of the Civilian Public Service program was $3,041,635.43.

Educators from thirty countries have had a conference in the U. S. at which they established a world organization of teachers which is designed to unify the teaching profession and raise its standards. The conference also adopted an eight-point program, the aim of which is to instill the importance of world peace and co-operation in the children.

Perfection

Eleanor Dixon Glidden

Thou shalt possess kind heart and sense of humor;
Thou shalt remember all the rights of others;
Thou shalt deal honorably with man and woman,
And throw no stone at thy less fortunate brothers.
Thou shalt be slow to anger, strong of will
And all thy days with worth-while labor fill.
Thou shalt have courage fine and keen and free
To face reverses when they come to thee.
Thou shalt not be a fool and scoff at beauty,
But hold high dreams to gild the drab of duty.

Thou shalt not be a spendthrift or a miser;
Thou shalt show deference to those much wiser,
And courtesy to helpfulness and age,
Find strength and wisdom in a great book's page,
And comfort in the peace of stars and clouds
When life's great loneliness thy heart enshrouds.
Thou shalt love glowing hills and shining seas
And little things as well, like flowers and bees.
So shall thy heart all good things now enfold
And all the wide world's love thy life shall hold.

RELIEF

hilippine Islands

During the past month Dale Nebel and Dr. James renneman have been working toward the establish- ient of a fifty-bed hospital in the town of Vigan. Bro. ebel writes: "The past ten days have been very usy. We are unpacking and installing the hospital uipment. There are many bottlenecks and slow- owns. We cannot do the plumbing ourselves so we ave to wait until a plumber is ready to come. We annot do it ourselves because we do not have the ools—neither does the plumber, but he gets the job one anyway. I have never seen such improvising. Dr. renneman and I are doing the paper work and super- sing the crew and also helping out with the work rselves. Most of the equipment is installed; the drugs e unpacked and arranged. The surgical instruments e unpacked and are ready to go into the operating om. Things which we do not have are being made improvised. We are thankful for good health and e really do enjoy working with these people. There so much work to be done."

Bertran D. Smucker has been appointed for relief ork in Austria and arrived there as of September 13. e writes the following observations: "There is no ubt about it, the people of Austria are in need. It is fficult, however, to get an over all picture of com- rative need in Europe. It is certain that destruction Austria in no way compares to destruction in Ger- any, although 25 per cent of the buildings in Vienna re destroyed and rubble still partially blocks many reets and sidewalks. I think that the need in Austria d in Vienna is comparatively better than it has been r some time, although the basic ration is still re- rted to be 1,200 calories. Most people appear to be ite well dressed, although there is definite need work clothes and shoes. I have noticed that on e whole children's shoes are very shoddy—often nsisting of wooden sandals. The general need likely ll grow progressively worse this winter with the verest period coming in late winter and spring."

ilding Feeding

The British Military Government has approved setting up of an M.C.C. child feeding project in the itish Zone of Germany. The project calls for ten rkers and it is believed that the feeding project can gin operations about November 1.

At the present time there is an urgent need for a dical doctor to work with the M.C.C. Unit in China. China Unit is taking over and operating a new spital and would like to have an American doctor to with them at the beginning of the operation of this undertaking. Any doctor who may be interested a period of from nine months to a year of service uld contact the Mennonite Central Committee, Ak- , Pennsylvania.

MATERIAL AID NOTES

Gift Parcels to Needy Families

At this time of year, when we are drawing near to the Christmas season, our thoughts are drawn towards those who have not been as fortunate as we in a material way, those who have undergone the horrors of war and as a result are in need, both spiritually and physically. In recent weeks an appeal has been received from a number of our workers in Central Europe for a special project. A great number of needy Mennonite families have been found in Germany who cannot be reached through the present methods of relief distribution. There is a way by which we can, in a measure, bring relief to these sufferings ones of our faith. This is through the medium of 11-pound parcel post packages sent directly by mail from individuals in this country. These parcels can contain clothing, non-perishable food, medicinals and other items of a personal nature.

A list of approximately 1,000 needy Mennonte families and their addresses has been sent to this office by our relief workers. Additional names of needy families will be received in the near future. It is our suggestion that Mennonite families and individuals in this country send gifts parcels directly to these people. Requests for the names and addresses of these families should be mailed to Material Aid Section, Mennonite Central Committee, Akron, Pennsylvania. Along with the name of a family you will receive a suggested list of items to be included in the parcel. You will also receive a copy of the postal regulations which apply to the sending of parcels overseas.

Canadians requesting names will receive the names of families living in the British Zone of Germany. This zone is the only one open for the sending of gift parcels from Canada. British, French, and United States. Occupied Zones are all open for the sending of parcels from the United States. Canadian requests should also be directed to the Akron office.

This means of bringing relief should not be construed as replacing other efforts. Rather let us make this an extra, personal witness to our brethren of our concern for their welfare.

The regular channels for the sending of CARE food packages remain open. The price per parcel has now been lowered to $10 per package, delivered at its destination.

VOLUNTARY SERVICE

Winter Short Term Service Unit

Shut off from society in mental hospitals live thousands who are hungry for Christian love—kind care for their physical needs, friendly words of concern and appreciation, the little "plus" things on the ward, no brutal beating but instead "firm kindness" and "kind firmness" for their moments of fear and desperation.

This summer fifty-eight young women and men served "in the name of Christ" in three Mennonite service units—Norristown, Pennsylvania, Cleveland, Ohio, and Howard, Rhode Island. Most of these people were those who go to college during the winter but have their summer available for such a combination of giving Christian service and gaining a new and helpful experience.

Superintendents of the hospital so appreciated the type of spirit and help that they have asked for units next summer. Even though they may have more labor they feel that "plus-service" can be well used. One regular employee expressed himself saying "They have put new life into some of us, raised our morale."

This winter there will be opportunity for those young Christians who have a short period of time available for such service. It is felt that since summer time is often the busiest time for farm folks that there should be a winter service unit also. Tentative plans are being made for an eight-week service unit, likely part of January, February and March. Those interested should write for further information to Voluntary Service, Mennonite Central Committee, Akron Pennsylvania.—Released October 4, 1946, Mennonite Central Committee .

College and Seminary News

BLUFFTON COLLEGE

Dr. I. W. Bauman will conduct a special series of meetings in the Wayland, Iowa, church October 14-20. Dr. Bauman was supply pastor in this church during the summer of 1942. The first gospel team trip of the year will take a deputation group to Iowa for services in the four General Conferenc churches in that state October 19, 20. Programs will be given in the Eicher, Wayland, Pulsaki, and Donnellson churches. The annual Bible Lectures will be given during the week of November 17. The speaker will be Dr. Allen G. Wehrli, Professor of Old Testament Theology, Eden Seminary, Webster Grove, Missouri. The special ministers' conference will be held on November 20, 21. In addition to speakers from the Bluffton College territory. Rev. Lester Hostetler, pastor of the Bethel College church, will speak. A Women's Missionary Conference will also be held November 19, 20. Bluffton opened its football season with a 13-12 win over Wilmington, the Quaker school at Wilmington, Ohio. An unusually large group is rehearsing each Tuesday evening for the Messiah concert to be given during the Christmas season.

BETHEL COLLEGE

One of the high lights of the school year is the annual Christian Life Week, now in progress, to help students and faculty reconsecrate themselves ever more fully to Jesus Christ as their Lord and Savior. Rev. Edmund J. Miller, formerly from Lind, Washington, and now field representative for the Mennonite Biblical Seminary, is conducting services twice daily, basing chapel meditations on the Gospel of St. John and centering evening messages around "Experiences with the Master." He also spends time in private counselling with the students. Prayer meetings and opening devotional periods are in charge of the large and active Student Christian Association (Farie Stucky, president), which is sponsoring this special week. Other organizations which also take active part in the religious life and worship of the students are the Student Votunteers and Student Ministers Fellowship, headed respectively by Hermie Preheim and Rev. John Loewen.

FREEMAN JUNIOR COLLEGE

Last week the first monthly faculty meeting wa held. These meetings are held regularly the last Fri day of the month. Members of the faculty meet i the library. After a devotional period led by one o the members current problems are presented and iron ed out. Suggestions for improvements and new activ ities are made and discussed. Sometimes definit plans of procedure are worked out. Often no definit action is taken but the discussions give the executiv committee the benefit of the group opinion an thought in making decisions. Whatever course th executive committee maps out later, the group ha a feeling of having contributed and shared in th planning and this creates a keener feeling of respons bility in carrying out those plans. While the facult meets for discussion and business the faculty wive meet in the Home Economics rooms or in the Dinin Hall. Here they carry on various activities. Som times they have met for devotional periods; som times they have done relief sewing. At the last mee ing they mended clothes for boys living at the Dorm tory who are far from home. Upon completion their meetings the two groups join for lunch ar social fellowship. Faculty members and their wiv take turns in serving the lunch and playing host the group. Unmarried members are somewhat hand capped in the matter, so several of them are pe mitted to club together when their turn comes serve. They have a slight advantage in the fact th they have no culinary reputation to maintain. Clea ing up and washing dishes is in some respects the nost enjoyable time of all. At this stage all formality lisappears and the standing argument regarding the ·elative merits of masculine and feminine dishwashng techniques is reviewed with much gusto.

Ve will sort them and forward them to the Mennonite Central Committee whence they will be sent o their destination. Send or bring your books to C. Krahn, North Newton, Kansas.

When she was seven years old, the family migrated Canada, arriving in what was then Berlin, Ontario. After everal winters in Canada the family moved to Minnesota, where e grew to womanhood in the Mountain Lake and Butterfield ommunities. In 886, after receiving catechetical instruction, she was baptized, though she did not find peace and forgiveness until some time ter. In 1891 she and Jacob Stoesz were united in marriage. hen her husband was called into the ministry of the First ennonite Church of Mountain Lake and later into that of the rst Church north of Butterfield, she proved herself a true helpeet in that she was a good wife and mother. Later they transrred their membership to the Gospel Mennonite Church. Mourng her are her husband and the following children: John, Abram, Peter, and Cornelius of Darfur; and Henry, Jacob, and rs. A. During the day a search for lots for the church was made and also the possibility of buying a church building, which will be sold in the near future, was investigated. In the evening the group gathered at the home of the pastor and a blessed evening was spent together when a number of questions were discussed in regard to the organizing of the church. Much of the time we tend to long for a life se skies are always blue and sunny. And yet eems that just as the varying seasons of the r serve their purpose, so the varying seasons he spirit also serve theirs. There is the con- sion season, the season of sowing and burial.

"Yet grains of wheat before they grow,
Are buried in the earth below;
All that is old doth perish there
To form a life both new and fair;
So too are we
From self and sin made free."

There is the winter season of the spirit (the k nights of the soul) when life has receded and e is no evidence of growth. There is the spring season when the forces of God work mightily. Harvest follows. Many minor winters follow, for though there is one major surrender in life, many minor surrenders follow as growth in grace is experienced. Aside from this parallel is that of youth and old age. In the springtime of youth there is beautiful, stirring growth, but only in the autumn of old age can one pick the ripe, mellow fruit of life. The seasons of the spirit serve their purpose. Winter is no cause for despair. It is the prelude to spring. Spring must fade into harvest, and then a new winter may be necessary. The seasons of the spirit serve their purpose in maturing one for God. Skies blue and sunny are pleasant, but often a snowstorm or a hard rain precedes them, or it may even be a long winter.

From the editor's point - of - view:

THE ATTITUDE TOWARDS ALCOHOL in our day may include some cause for thanksgiving when it is considered in the light of history. It is readily evident that we are living in a drinking age, an age in which people seem to feel that drink can add zest to life. Expenditures for liquor are enormous. There are a great many drinkers. Brewers are wealthy and powerful, and their vicious propaganda is spread continuously and far and wide. The thought of prohibition is not well accepted. Alcohol itself is on a great spree. But right along with these dark facts are some bright ones. There seems to be an insight into the harmfulness of alcoholism that did not exist in the days of our forefathers. It seems that alcohol was at first considered a poison. But by the 13th Century it was being used as a medicine in the south of Europe. Many claims were made for it. Here is one of them:

"It sloweth age, it strengtheneth youth, it helpeth digestion, it abandoneth melancholie, it relisheth the heart, it lighteneth the mind, it quickeneth the spirits, it keepeth and preserveth the head from whirling, the eyes from dazzling, the tongue from lisping, the mouth from snaffling, the teeth from chattering, and the throat from rattling; it keepeth the stomach from wambling, the heart from swelling, the hands from shivering, the sinews from shrinking, the veins from crumbling, the bones from aching, and the marrow from soaking."

The Pilgrims brought beer with them on the Mayflower. In their journal it is recorded: "For we could not now take time for further search or consideration: our victuals being much spent, especially our beer." William Penn, the great Quaker, built a brewery in 1683 and sold beer at Pennsbury in Bucks County, Pennsylvania. It is reported that "Many of the leading figures of the Revolution were either brewers or financially interested in breweries and taverns." Abraham Lincoln tells of a non-drinking Quaker who had to pay an extra 10 per cent on his life insurance because ' " 'he was thin and watery and mentally cranked in that he repudiated the good things of God as found in alcoholic drink.' " ' Today many Christians and others are not so enthusiastic about alcoholic drinks. There is much light on its harmful effects. In addition to this there seems to be a growing insight into why people drink. It is becoming more and more evident that when an individual is not at peace within, he may use alcohol in the attempt to deal with his troubles. Furthermore, the work of Alcoholics Anonymous, has rescued many from drink where other methods failed. So along with the dark facts are some bright ones. One wonders whether the strength of our knowledge of alcohol isn't partly offset by the great spiritual emptiness within people today that makes them a ready to try drink. The facts are not all discouraging, and the very darkness of some seems to indicate that alcoholism is but one part of a complex of problems that we need to consider. That too is a valuable lesson.

ALCOHOLICS ANONYMOUS have been so successful in reclaiming alcoholics that their methods deserve attention. These methods are very suggestive for Christian workers. Therefore we are happy to present in this issue an article on this unique organization of former alcoholics. Groups of Alcoholics Anonymous can be found in many of the larger cities. For example, anyone wishing to get in contact with such a group in the city of Wichita, Kansas, can do so by writing to Secretary, Box 1657, Wichita. Those caught in the bonds of drink and wishing to be free may appreciate being directed to such a group, or the process may be reversed, for members of this organization are anxious to win others to freedom from drink.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT has perhaps a numbe of angles to it. There are those who believe that th prospect of such punishment will serve to keep th would-be murderer from committing the crime. Tha some crimes are not committed because of the prospec of punishment is undoubtedly true. But how far thi can be applied is another question. Warden Lawes, fo many years warden of Sing Sing Penitentiary, point out in his book, "Murderers" that the prospect of deat does not keep the murderer from his crime. When ex cited and desperate enough, he acts regardless of th consequences. In the same way nations may hesitat about going to war because of possible consequence But when excited and warped and desperate enoug they may act regardless of the possible consequence Since punishment neither wipes out the heartache cau ed, the question remains whether not more thoug should be given to the prevention of conditions out which violence may develop. The Christian faith hol that love of the right results in more good condu than fear of punishment. A clean heart is the be guarantee of right conduct.

Alcoholism and Its Cure

by R. C. Kauffman

Alcoholic consumption in the United States for the decade preceding World War II rose from 3.5 gallons per capita to about 14 gallons per capita. The evidence is that during the war years this rate of consumption took a marked further increase. Most of this increase may be accounted for by the more widespread acceptance of "controlled social drinking." At the same time, the indications are that there is also a far greater number of those who may properly be called, "alcoholics." An alcoholic is one who cannot use alcohol without doing so to decided excess. Having on any occasion taken his first drink, he is unable to stop of his own volition until reaching the point of more or less complete intoxication.

The theories in explanation of why some people become alcoholics are many and varied. So are the proposed "cures." On the physiological side there is, for example, the theory that certain individuals have an allergy to alcohol—a peculiar allergy in that it creates not an avoidance of it, but a helpless submission to it. It is the brain and spinal cord, particularly, of such individuals that is said to respond in allergic fashion to alcohol. Peculiarly sensitive to and irritated by alcohol, an excess of cerebro-spinal fluid (the fluid that normally surrounds and protects the brain and spinal cord) is produced by the body as a defensive measure. The pressure of this on the brain, in turn, produces the helpless inclination to further indulgence. The corresponding cure, claimed to have been effective in a considerable number of cases, is to drain the excessive cerebro-spinal fluid through a puncture of the spinal column.

On the psychological side, is the belief that alcoholism is the outgrowth of a deeper and more fundamental personality problem. From this point of view the cry of the social reformer, "Look at all the broken homes, broken personalities, etc. caused by alcoholism" would be changed to, "Look at the alcoholism caused by broken homes, broken personalities, etc." Alcoholism, as seen here, is but a symptom— a symptom of something else in the life of the individual that needs correction and any cure that hopes to be in any wise permanent must concern itself with this underlying conflict.

More recently, within the past ten years or so, another approach has gained considerable prominence. It is that of the "Alcoholics Anonymous." It is an interesting approach in that it resembles the old-time religious conversion more than either a distinctly psychological or physiological method of attack. "Alcoholics Anonymous" or "AA," popularly so called, is an informal fellowship of about twelve thousand formerly alcoholic men and women who are today found banded together as groups in about 325 American and Canadian communities. Each group has the same and only objective: "to help other alcoholics to recover from their illness."

The "AA" method of approach is outlined in the "12 Steps to Recovery" of their Program. These "12 Steps" are as follows:

1. We admitted we were powerless over alcohol—that our lives have become unmanageable.
2. Came to believe that a Power greater than ourselves could restore us to sanity.
3. Made a decision to turn our will and our lives over to the care of God AS WE UNDERSTOOD HIM.
4. Made a searching and fearless moral inventory of ourselves.
5. Admitted to God, to ourselves, and to another human being the exact nature of our wrongs.
6. Were entirely ready to have God remove these defects of character.
7. Humbly asked Him to remove our shortcomings.
8. Made a list of all persons we had harmed, and became willing to make amends to them all.
9. Made direct amends to such people wherever possible, except when to do so would injure them or others.
10. Continued to take personal inventory and when we were wrong promptly admitted it.
11. Sought prayer and meditation to improve our conscious contact with God as we understood Him, praying only for knowledge of His will for and the power to carry that out.
12. Having had a spiritual experience as the result of these steps, we tried to carry this message to alcoholics, and to practice these principles in all our affairs.

The elements of this "AA" procedure held in common with religious conversion are evident: the conviction of sin; an admission of utter helplessness; a complete reliance upon God; confession and rectification of past transgressions; the joining of a fellowship of believers; and a consuming missionary zeal, by means of which new members are brought into the fellowship and by means of which their own faith is kept alive. It should be recognized too, of course, that some of these elements parallel psychiatric technique, though psychiatry using its own terms speaks of "personality change," "mental catharsis," "abnormal self-concern," " a new compelling interest in life," "the expulsive power of a new affection," etc. In the final analysis, however, psychiatry says, 'Know yourself, be strong and you will be able to face life," whereas Alcoholics Anonymous say, "Know thyself, ask God for power and you become truly free."

It is this free and candid recognition of God, "a Power greater than yourself," as an essential part of the process that makes it a religious one. In fact, the only point at which the "AA" procedure may be said to differ significantly from conversion as known in religious circles is that such conversion usually insists upon the acceptance of a more or less precisely defined doctrinal content. With Alcoholics Anonymous the doctrinal element is reduced to a minimum—in fact, can hardly be said to exist at all. Catholics, Protestants, Jews—all are numbered among their members without change in religious affiliation. The only point of belief insisted upon is the acceptance of God as He is understood by the believer. And this point is really not so much insisted upon as it is recommended as the only way in which they have, by their experience, found delivery to be effective and enduring.

According to their own estimation. 50 per cent of the alcoholics taken in hand by members of the "AA" recover almost immediately; 25 per cent get well after suffering a relapse or two, and the rest remain doubtful. This rate of success is exceptionally high. Statistics on traditional medical and religious cures are lacking, but it has been informally estimated that they are no more than 2 or 3 per cent effective in the general run of cases. One factor that no doubt adds tremendously to the success of the "AA" program is that each member was at one time himself an alcoholic and is now a living witness to its effectiveness. Like Gothic cathedral windows, alcoholism must be viewed from within to be truly seen.

Although it is too early to state that Alcoholics Anonymous is the final answer to alcoholism, its brief record is impressive and its implications should be of interest not only with respect to the immediate problem of alcoholism, but also to those concerned with the therapeutic value of psychiatry and religion in general.

Towards Unity

by B. Bargen

B. Bargen, formerly instructor of commercial subjects at Bethel College and now Manager of the Mennonite Publication Office, Newton, Kansas, spent about two and one-half months this past summer centralizing the files of the Mennonite Central Committee. He wrote the following article about his work at Akron at the request of the editor of the Bundesbote, in which it first appeared.

It happens, as children grow up, that they outgrow their clothes, and father and mother look around for clothes to fit the growing children. Thus, too, with the children of the church.

As a child, the Mennonite Central Committee offices, found it adequate in the offices to handle the limited amount of correspondence in the simplest ways. But as the organization grew, as one department after another was added, simple ways had to give way to improve methods. The summer of 1946 found approximately eleven departments doing a large volume of work, involving more than just the simplest correspondence. It involved passports, visas, bills of lading, baling tickets, tags, loading records, personnel records, telegrams, and cablegrams with workers in all of the world. MCC was growing up!

In order to centralize all these records in one comprehensive system a study was made of over two hundred filing drawers to determine the nature of their contents, methods of filing, and methods whereby any particular piece of correspondence or business record might be made available to anyone in the organization at a moment's notice. This involved material for a period as far back as 1920, when the MCC was first organized, when one filing drawer was sufficient to house all records of any kind for a period of several years, to 1946, when the business of just a few weeks would completely fill a drawer.

In a new building, called the "Archives Building," one entire floor, by the new method, is devoted to centralized filing and research. By a messenger who runs her rounds four times daily, there now arrives each day from all eleven departments material to be filed in one central file. These are carefully read, coded for filing, and then girls specially trained for this work place each paper in files scientifically designed to speed up finding and filing by name or by subject as the case may demand.

When material is needed a telephone call from any department to the Central Files, immediately dispatches a file clerk to the file to locate the desired paper. The paper is charged to the person requesting it, until the paper is returned, just like a book is charged to the person taking it from the library, so that at any time we know who has that letter, that invoice, or that report.

All material is carefully indexed in a card index of approximately twenty-thousand cards. Every relief worker, every project, and all important events mentioned in letters or reports are on this cross index, so that a complete bibliography on any subject is available at a moment's notice.

This was a step toward unification, so that all seventy-five workers now stationed at MCC headquarters, at Akron, may work like ONE mind. Guesswork has been superseded by system; time formerly spent in looking for things is now spent in creatively working with information in hand; and red tape becomes BREAD tape, in a literal sense, for the entire purpose of MCC is toward efficient relief of bread-hungry and spirit-hungering hundreds and thousands in famine areas the world over. Time counts! The work of the Kingdom is urgent.

What Should a Mennonite Do with His Money?

What should a Mennonite do with his money? Should he buy more land? More new machinery? Government bonds or additional insurance? Financial experts, farm economists, and practical business men are unanimous that this is generally a poor time to buy. Our own common sense tells us it is better to sell or invest than it is to buy. Yet some people have to buy even during these times. Young people who were in CPS are among those who need to make loans now. They are among those the Mutual Aid Board is trying to help in a modest way. What should a Mennonite do with his money? For those who have more than sufficient funds on hand to meet their own immediate needs we invite you to invest funds in the General Conference Mutual Aid Board. The aim and the purope of the Board are:

1. To enable the Board to help young Mennonite people establish a home.
2. To enable the Board to help young people get a modest start at farming or in business.
3. To enable the Board to help young people complete their education.
4. To help the Board assist in Mennonite programs of colonizations and resettlement.

An investment in this Board is an investment in the next generation of the Mennonite Church. Your money is loaned to deserving young men only after careful investigation as to their character, experience, ability to carry out the project for which they want the money and on the basis of genuine need. To date $25,000.00 have been loaned and all repayments made according to schedule. Here are the ways in which churches, district conference boards, and individuals may invest money with the Board of Mutual Aid.

1. Freewill gifts to the Board.
2. Non-interest bearing loans for five years.
3. Interest-bearing loans from 2 to 5 years at 1½ per cent interest.
4. Interest-bearing loans for 10 years at 2 per cent interest.

The Board of Mutual Aid consists of: Chairman—Harry M. Detwiler, Souderton, Pa.; Vice-Chairman—Hans Regier, Whitewater, Kansas; Executive Secretary—Winfield Fretz, North Newton, Kansas; other Members—Julius A. Franz, Lind, Washington; Jacob A. Schowalter, Newton, Kansas; William Stauffer, Sugarcreek, Ohio.

EASTERN DISTRICT CONFERENCE LABOR DAY BIBLE CONFERENCE

The Laymen's Bible Conference, sponsored by the Womens' Mission Societies and the Brotherhood and held at Camp Men-O-Lan on the Labor Day week-end, was well attended throughout the three days. There were 126 registrations and many other folks who attended sessions for the day only.

The Theme "THE CHURCH AT WORK" from Acts 4:31 and 5:42 was followed generally by the leaders, Dr. Robt. R. Fritsch, Emeritus Professor of English Bible, Muhlenberg College, and our own Rev. J. R. Duerksen, on furlough from the Mission Field in India. Dr. Fritsch's messages made many of us conscious of a new sense of stewardship. Rev. Duerksen divided his messages into five divisions, namely: "The Why of Missions," "The Three-fold Task," 'My Parish," "With Persecutions and with Thanksgiving," "It Pays To Serve the Lord."

Rev. A. H. Schultz did a fine job as music director. There was much group singing interspersed with vocal and instrumental numbers.

Miss Katherine Niswander, assisted by Mrs. Norman Berky and others, arranged for special programs 'or the children during the lecture periods. Story elling, craft work and singing, etc. kept the young 'olks happy.

At the close of his last message, Dr. Fritsch suggested that a special thank-offering be received for he purpose of enlarging Camp Men-O-Lan to better accommodate future Bible conferences, retreats, etc. This offering amounted to over $520.00.

IT PAYS

We were glad to read that the Minnesota district of the Missouri Synod increased the salaries of home missionaries to a minimum level of $1,800.00, plus parsonage.

Only recently the president of a large Metropolitan New York Church told us that he personally had seen to it that his pastor was given comfortable parsonage facilities and an increase in salary and then added: "It pays! When the pastor is bothered with financial worries and home inconveniences he cannot do his best work."

May we suggest that laymen ask fellowmen from other congregations which have raised their pastor's salary and they will find that the above is not an empty statement. It is true! "It pays!"

The Growth of a Mennonite Fellowship

By Freeman H. Swartz

On Sunday, June 23, 1946, a morning service was inaugrated in the Lancaster Community. It was held in the Santee Chapel on the campus of the Reformed and Evangelical Semniary. There were eighty-five persons present. The sermon for the occasion was preached by Rev. Don Smucker. He was introduced by Rev. Freeman H. Swartz, Chairman of the Home Mission and Church Extension Committee of The Eastern District Conference, as the designated pastor to lead the work in Lancaster City.

Previous to the morning meeting, a Sunday School had been formed. There were sixty-five present. This group was divided into three classes—one for the adults, one for the girls, and one for the boys. Mr. William Snyder, MCC office, Akron, was selected as the superintendent. Mr. Orrie Baer and Mr. Elmer Wenger, had previously been selected by the Fellowship to serve as secretary and treasurer.

Fellowship Polity

The polity upon which this work was begun and continued was that there were many persons in Lancaster City and surrounding community who did not affiliate with the Mennonite Church simply because they could not find a fellowship that met all their need. The consequence was that they were uniting elsewhere, joining groups outside of the Mennonite household. Some General Conference members living in Lancaster and others who lived nearby urged our Committee to start a Fellowship.

An interesting side-light on the above situation is the fact that of the five real estate men consulted relative to the selection of a lot for future building needs, three had Mennonite names and heritage but not a single one was affiliated with a Mennonite group today.

Lancaster is an example of the value of "Mennonite Fellowship." September 24, 1944, we gathered a group of more than thirty interested persons in the Y.M.C.A. for a Sunday afternoon meeting. The meetings were continued throughout the following winter with varying attendance. During the following summer, 1945, Rev. Alfred Regier, pastor at Calvary Congregation, Mechanics Grove, made a survey of the families and friends who had shown some interest in the meetings. He found some forty families whose variant interest ranged from "very much interested" to "interested, but too late; we have begun attending elsewhere."

The meeting place was also a deterent to the growth of the work. It was quite a task for some of the elderly persons to climb the two flights of steps to the third floor auditorium. So also was the time of meeting. The services were in the afternoon. The hours were changed several times to accomodate the attendants, some of whom came from neighboring farmsteads.

Growth in the Second Year

In the second year, the Committee used several men to carry on its work. Rev. John Boehr supplied during the late fall and early winter months. Rev. Don Smucker was used occasionally from February until June. In March, 1945, the meeting place was changed to the Lancaster School of the Bible. This Chapel was on the first floor. Here the attendance increased—rising one time to the 130's! Finally, at the insistance of the local committee, a regular Sunday morning meeting was scheduled. This was announced for June 23. The attendance and interest shown then, and since, has well justified their claims.

Two landmarks which indicated the approval of the Lord on our venture, were the generous support th congregations of the Eastern District, who contributed in May, nearly enough to pay for the three thousan dollar lot which had been purchased by the Conferenc in Grandview North and the gracious release of te thousand dollars by the General Conference Home Mission Board for this work.

Thus with our faces set toward a new direction i Church extension, we look for a blessed third year o ministry. The Committee solicits the prayerful suppo of the readers of The Mennonite for Pastor Don Smucker and the small group that he has undertaken t shepherd in Lancaster—in the heart of Mennonite Country in America!

Appreciation for Assistances

Several citations are necessary to give due credit fo the beginnings of this work. The faithfulness of a number of Eastern District families who kept faith whe things seemed darkest. This number was augmented b others as the work gained momentum. Then there wa the very helpful series of meetings by Dr. Jacob Janze these served to revive some of the previous bon which had existed between Russian Mennonites wh had settled in that community. We would not over loo the encouragement of the Pastors of Eastern Distri congregations contingent to this field. The graciousne of the Lancaster School of the Bible, a truly inter-d nominational group, deserves mention. The ecumenic kindness of the Reformed and Evangelical Semina Board in granting us the privilege to use their Semina Chapel. This is indeed heart warming. And the unnam donor of a hundred Mennonite Hymnaries should not

Bluffton College Bible Lectures, November 17-22

Dr. Allen G. Wehrli To Be Speaker

Each year Bluffton College selects some outstanding minister to give a week of Bible lecturs on the campus. These are primarily for the benefit of students, but are also of great help to townspeople and out of town visitors who attend. This year Dr. Allen G. Wehrli,, Professor of Old Testament Theology, Eden Seminary, Webster Grove, Missouri, has been selected. He is an outstanding leader in the Evangelical and Reformed church and has the reputation of being a very interesting and helpful lecturer. All those who can attend are cordially invited and will be greatly benefited by the series.

The series this year will be based on the Old Testament. We, as Christians, place much of our emphasis on New Testament teachings, and perhaps do not refer as frequently as we should to the Old Testament foundation of our faith. The Sunday and the evening series of lectures will be based on the early books of the Old Testament.

By Cornelius Krahn

Swiss and Dutch Mennonite Youth Compare Notes. in De Hoeksteen, the organ of the Doopsgezinde Jongerenbond, a Dutch Mennonite student gives his impressions about the Mennonite youth conference in Switzerland which was attended by six hundred to seven hundred people. The general theme of the conference was "Christ Is My Life." The youth committee was not youthful in years. Nevertheless the Dutch student was impressed by the willingness of the young people to give testimonies after the older ministers had spoken on the topic. He says, "as far as the knowledge of the Bible is concerned contact between the Dutch and Swiss Mennonite young people would be most fruitful for us." Summarizing he says, We observed that they were more Biblical and characterized by a separation from the world. Whether the above described youth conference does justice to what we call young people is another question. We should, however, remember that the Mennonites in Switzerland are farmers, which also explains why they live in greater separation from the world. It is, for example, typical that the women and girls did not testify at the meeting." Inviting the Dutch and Swiss Mennonite young people to correspond with each other, he concludes: "Inspite of all the differences, we as Mennonites the world over have, in the name of Christ, a great task and a high calling."

Learning From Each Other

Under the heading "World Mennonitism" H. C. Yoder wrote the following significant lines published in the European Relief Notes, Vol. III, No. 1. The subheadings are ours.

Converting Others.

We often hear the hope expressed that out of our contacts with European Mennonites through our Relief activities there may arise a really unified Mennonitism. Too often I fear we approach the idea too naively. Too often we feel it is merely a matter of converting the Mennonites of Holland, France and Germany to American Mennonitism. We are all thankful that our forefathers have preserved for us in Canada and the United States an evangelical gospel and a nonresistant belief and we all hope that those groups who have felt driven to depart from these will rethink their position.

A Two Way Process:

But we dare not be so perfect in our own estimation, so selfrighteous, as to consider our relations with European Mennonites as a missionary effort or a process of reformation. The flow of ideas can not be a one way process. The European Mennonites have developed in the cradle of our faith and also treasure their heritage and have many of the original sources by which we trace our development and evaluate our genius.

What We Can Learn.

I have not had as many or as close contacts with the European Mennonites as I would like but I have seen several points which offer fields for profitable consideration. Where we of the western shore of the Atlantic are divided seventeen or eighteen ways those on the eastern shores are divided only according to language or country. They believe strongly in the Scriptural virtue of bearing with one another's infirmities. Again they may permit social practices which we justly frown upon but they have not permitted the divorcement of religion from the social and business interests in their lives. I believe their attitude towards God is more natural than that of the average Mennonite at home.

If each of us contribute what is best in our practice and each recognize what is good in the other and are willing to be taught, then I believe our Church can become a more efficient instrument in God's hand on both sides of the Atlantic. May our venture in relief work develop towards that end.

ALCOHOLISM PART OF VAST COMPLEX OF PROBLEMS

Alcoholism, I believe, has basic social roots and the most important treatment, paradoxically, is to prevent it. Social regulatory measures and social education are necessary if we are to safeguard the race from injury to its individuals and to its social structure by alcoholism. I need not go into details, but will say this, that whoever really seeks to combat alcoholism will sooner or later find himself a social reformer as he sees the problem more fully, and, if what he sees arouses his social energies he will seek to combat the evils of the economic system. He will find himself confronted with the horrors of malnutrition, bad housing, and with the terrors of the business cycle and its dread unemployment. Sooner or later he will find himself up against the sinister fact that the manufacturer and sale of alcoholic beverages is an extremely large and powerful business which does not have many scruples about false advertising and social corruption as the means to its end, which is merely profit.—Abraham Myerson, M. D., Professor of Phychiatry, Harvard University Medical School; ALCOHOL HYGIENCE, Nov.-Dec., '45.

Impressions Upon Coming to America

by Johannes Hilverda

It is not so easy for me to express my thoughts about America, the American people, and the Mennonites here, because we have been in the United States only fourteen days. Generally one has to be at least a year in a certain country, traversing the land in all directions, living and talking and working and worshipping with the people in big cities and in the country, before one can make up his mind and get the ight idea about a people, a country and the churches. We saw only a glimpse of New York and Chicago, nd saw only a few districts of the country and met nly in short conversations a few Americans, and a few Mennonites. Therefore, I can give you only my first impressions and perhaps after being longer in America my ideas will change and I'll get another point of view about the things I write about now.

(By request, Johannes Hilverda of Aalsmeer, Holland, and now a student at Bethel, has kindly consented to describe some of his first impressions of America, and the people upon arriving here to study. In a sense, it was unfair to ask for an article so soon after the arrival of the group of students. At the same time, many first impressions stand out vividly for a while, then with time lose their early sharpness. At any rate, we wish this to be a way of welcoming our Dutch friends to the States. Certainly the churches consider it a privilege to have these students with us, and we hope that they may partake to the full of our home, school, and church life throughout the coming year.—Editor.)

We arrived on Monday afternoon, September 16 at New York, and really we were very deeply impressed y the very high skyscrapers we saw when we aproached the harbor of Hoboken. I think we will never orget that. We do not have such high and large uildings in Holland. We saw many pictures and lms of New York, but still it was a great sensation to e this all in reality. When we came nearer and near-, we could see the dust hanging between the high ildings and we saw the great numbers of cars along e roads. It did not only impress me, but there was omething in it that frightened me, too. I think it was e strange feeling how one man might feel himself lost being in such great multitudes of people, beveen such enormous buildings, and in such a noisy mosphere. When you are accustomed to living in Holland at a rustic lakeside, this all frightens you for a moment. It was a more materialistic sensation to see in the shops a great number of things we had not been able to buy for six or seven years in Holland: simple things as peanuts, oranges, bananas, shoes, radios, all kind of clothing and a lot of other things. Happily we had no American money at that moment . . . . we would have spent it all at once!

There was one Mennonite friend from the M. C. C. headquarters at Akron at the harbor to meet us. Later on more Mennonite friends arrived with cars to take us to Akron. Another sensation was the first men we saw in the streets of Hoboken, when we came out of the harbor, were strikers, and we were really astonished when we talked with them because they appeared to real Dutchmen!

On Tuesday afternoon we arrived at Akron where we were very heartily welcomed by the M. C. C. headquarters. We enjoyed talking about several problems and meeting those ones whose names we had often heard and from whom we sometimes received letters. We spent a happy time at this heart of Mennonite life in America. Everyone was very friendly and helpful and interested in our problems. We were happy to talk with the president of your Young People's Union, and we found out that we had many things in common. One thing really thrilled us and that was the way you Mennonites sing in your religious meetings and services. We never heard such singing before. It was really beautiful and very much better than we do in our churches in Holland.

We had some fine days at Akron. I think one of the differences between Europeans and Americans is that Americans are much more friendly, polite and helpful than the average European is. I think a foreigner feels at home much sooner in an American family than a foreigner would feel at home in Europe. Another difference is that Americans in general talk much more than we do and we found out that the American people like very much to talk to foreigners about their own country. We found out that life in America is much more comfortable than in Europe. We were amazed about your comfortable trains and diners, your cars and houses. We have no things like that in Holland.

All things in America seem to have the purpose to make life easier. "Take it easy" is one of your common expressions. It is really a feature of the character and the life of the average American, I think. The Americans live much faster than we do. They do not trouble about unnecessary, theoretical things as we do. They live pracitically and easily. Sometimes I have the feeling that there is the danger of this hurried way of living of getting superficial and seeking your pleasure in momentary things only. But I also found out that you Mennonites are not in every case representative of the average American. You are living closer to your European background than most Americans do.

We discovered also that most Americans laugh much sooner than we do in general. As far as I ca see now I think that we Dutch Mennonite student can learn much from the American Mennonites, es pecially concerning practical Christianity. We feel tha there is more spirit of fellowship among you an perhaps that is because of your colleges, your relie work and things like that. We don't have such thing in Holland. Perhaps there is more fellowship amon you, too, because of your being more separated fro the world than we are in general in Holland. I thin we will learn much and have a fine time at Beth College where we feel now already quite at home.

Choosing a Retreat Ground

by Harry Yoder

Many things enter into making a retreat ground what it should be. Perhaps there are two primary factors to be taken into account in creating the proper atmosphere for a retreat, namely, physical surroundings and camp personnel. It is the purpose of this symposium to discuss the matter of physical surroundings.

1. The site for a retreat ground. Here is where we should make use of the beauty spots of God's Creation. The ideal place is in a wooded section along a lake or body of water. If the camp can be built on a little raise or slope facing a lake it adds to the atmosphere. Especially does this add a certain 'something' to services such as the morning watch, sunset service, Galilean services, etc. The enticements of a body of water seem to be vital in working out a young people's program. For instance, the sunset services mean much more when the location is such that the sun is setting across the lake at the actual time of the meeting.

Let me hasten to say that the location should be where are no 'public interests.' The camp or retreat itself is to be the only attraction. An evening lakeside service can easily be ruined by the noises at the public bathing beach just around the bend of the lake shore, or by the motor boats being used at that hour. If privately owned cottages are on the retreat grounds, or too close, difficulties often arise. Thus, I say the ideal sight is a beautiful lake front with no other interests interfering.

2. Should the location be near home? It is well to have the camp far enough away from home to avoid interruptions from 'Local people.' This is one phase of camp life which many well-meaning interested peop will not fully understand. However, the greatest goo comes to those who are permitted to spend a wee or more together with their leaders uninterruped. If group comes to the camp for the week-end onl they have not caught the spirit of the retreat n understand the schedule, which means a retarding the whole foreward movement. If a retreat is he within a somewhat thickly populated church are it might be well to plan a part of the retreat progra so that visitors could be welcome. The ideal is to ha it far enough away from home to avoid interruptio and educate our people to it.

This is the second of a series of articles centering around the issue of choosing a retreat site for a district conference group. Rev. Harry Yoder, of the Central District and until recently minister at Carlock, Illinois, and now connected with Bluffton College, has served a number of years as director and leader at the Camp Mack Retreat of the Middle and Central District conferences. He here discusses the question of choosing a retreat ground in the light of his experience at Camp Mack.

3. Proper equipment is indeed necessary.

a. The administration building is important. Pe haps expense can be kept low by having a number things under the same roof. In this building I sugge the office with all equipment for registering and ha dling the business affairs of a camp. A reception ro to be used for a number of purposes—meeting incomi groups, class room, faculty meetings, etc. Also t building could have at least one screened in porch classes, etc. In one corner could be a store or sna shop. Depending on the structure of the building, dinning room and kitchen could be located in the ba ment. If there is an upstairs, it could be used either the 'summer staff of workers' who care the camp or the faculty and leaders. Sometimes sleeping hours of these two groups conflict a therefore, I suggest separate sleeping houses for the This is not a serious problem however. If there not room enough for the kitchen and dining ro in the administration building I would suggest a se rate building for this and the upstairs used for working staff.

b. In addition to the administration building dining hall there must be room enough and appropri for group meetings—call it a chapel or auditori This might easily be in connection with one of other buildings. If it is only to serve retreat gro it might not need to be of a great size. If Conferer and the like are to use the retreat grounds, it w need to be larger. If the dining hall and sleeping q ters for the working staff are in a separate build then I suggest the auditorium to be at one end of administration building.

c. There must be adequate sleeping quarters for the retreaters. I suggest the 'bunk houses' for this purpose always be in small units. Cabins should house not more than twelve or fourteen. Much more satisfactory results can be gained with the entire group divided into small units. Cabins need plenty of ventilation with windows or shutters which can be operated from the inside. Girls and boys cabins should be properly located in relation to each other.

d. Adequate toilet facilities are very necessary. If "cleanliness is next to Godliness" let us make this a reality in our church camps.

e. Insist on the best drinking water possible. This tends to elminate much illness, etc. This is of primary importance.

f. Adequate space and materials should be available for a good recreation program. In choosing a site this must be kept in mind. No one wants to play ball in the midst of trees or on a rough field. The amount and type of equipment depends upon the extent of your recreation desires. A good variety of recreation should be provided so that all can participate. If the camp is located on a lake, then lake equipment must be provided—boats, swimming beach.

g. A first aid room is needed. This can be a small room with cots, etc. provided. The camp nurse will appreciate having first aid kits. Perhaps the first aid room should be in the administration building in order to be near the phone, etc.

h. Building space must be provided for times when the weather conditions are not ideal. Therefore, I suggest in the equipment to include a large sized building which might be used for various things in camp life. Especially should the ground floor room have a good sized room with a fire place. In case of rain this can be used instead of the camp fire, etc. Parts of this building could be used for class rooms or perhaps the upstairs for housing overflow crowds. Or the building might have some screened porches for various uses. In any camp, provision must be made for times when you are forced indoors.

i. Among the wishes for equipment should be musical instruments. Pianos, rent a Hammond or something of the sort, Chimes near the sunset point will be very valuable. If old familiar hymns and good music enter the retreater's minds as they gather it creates a worshipful attitude.

j. One bit of equipment needed at camp is a shower for those who do not swim. We nearly always have some among the leaders who do not participate in the swimming and who would appreciate the use of a shower room.

For the ideal camp much other equipment could be mentioned, but we must be practical. A hand crafts building would be good but can be managed in a corner of one of the larger buildings somewhere. The music can be managed in connection with one of the larger buildings. As a camp site grows, some of the added needs come, too.

4. The size of the camp grounds depends upon the size of groups it serves and the size of the constituent group. Care should be taken that a large enough plot of ground is purchased so that the camp never will feel crowded for space. If possible when purchasing a lake front ample space should be purchased so that public interests do not close in on the camp.

5. The expense of setting up a retreat ground can become enormous. This again should be according to the strength of the group it serves. Here a wise group will take into consideration its already accepted financial responsibility. These years of "much money" will not always last. This must be remembered. The other side is this—one of the greatest investments we can make is in the equipment and grounds which help develop the religious and spiritual life of our young people. Certainly this is true of our retreats. And here is a real place for growth within our church.

6. The summer program will need to be worked out according to the various activites in each local situation. In some areas of retreats there is the industrial section, while in others it is the farming area. The whole program will need to take into consideration the make-up of the people and their other conferences and activities. The program should include a wide range of our church people—all the way from junior camps to business men. The greater the number of groups we can interest the larger is our opportunity. Especially should it mean much to the leaders and potential leaders in our churches. We can do much to train and inspire our people in this way when a summer program is properly handled.

Autumn

The vigor, life, and newness of spring with its fresh greenness, fragrant blossoms and balmy days have again, as thousands of seasons past, changed to the mellow, calm days of autumn when the colors of the sunset are reflected from those once shiny green leaves of spring. There is the yellow of the cottonwood, the brown of the elm, the oranges, reds and crimsons of the oak and here and there in brilliant contrast the green of a pine.

Perhaps you, too, have said autumn is the best season of the year. Around it there seems to be the mellowed richness of having grown old beautifully. Where spring was new with its spring rains, breezes, and new green shoots sprouting from tree and meadow, autumn offers the crunch of dry leaves under the foot, the silence of a cool brisk evening with an early sunset, the tans and browns of fodder in the field blended with the green of a new wheat field just beyond. And it all seems so possessed with mature, calm age.

It is on those days of quiet beauty that a walk in the country is irresistible. A walk down a country road when the bark of a dog can be heard a mile away and the laughter of children at the neighbor's house seems to be right next to you. The smell of wood smoke in the air, or in the idle play of rabbits in the field deepen the serenity of the moment.

Perhaps you have followed a creek and have seen the cattle in a playful mood chasing each other with tails in air and heels kicking high. Stones tossed in the creek disturb the calm water and flat stones skip countless times to the other bank. Happily and lazily the water gurgles where it runs down a rapid. A roasted marshmellow and a toasted weiner over the fire have a special flavor and the heat of the fire feels good as you slowly turn absorbing the warmth. When the moon is full, it rises almost as soon as the sun sets. And it is big and red as it appears.

We all have many rich memories of the autumnal season — the evening of seasonal life. Memories of other seasons when the harvest was gathered and barns were full, granaries bulged, and rows of jars with bright colors lined the basement shelves. It is the end of a season. It is the period of dormancy, of waiting. It is the time when we can look back and look forward. It is the season when we can feel the thrill of achievement and anticipate the work to come.

Autumn is the time for thankfulness, communion, fellowship and wonder. Thankfulness and communion with the Creator God who does such marvelous works. Fellowship with kindred spirits all privileged to partake of the gifts of the Creator and wonder and awe at His handiwork.

One result of the oppression during the war in Holland was the trend toward unification of the church. The General Synod of the Netherlands Reformed Church met for the first time in three centuries in the historic Amsterdam New Church. Some of the churches which split off long ago from the old body, are ready to rejoin it.

MATERIAL AID NOTES

Due to the many inquiries coming in to the Akron ffice concerning the sending of packages to specific dividuals in Europe, we feel that it would be well clarify this matter.

The only ways open at the present time by which n individual in the United States can send a parcel r package to another individual in Europe is through gular parcel post channels and the CARE organiza- on.

CARE is an organization set up whereby people an purchase a package containing about 29 pounds concentrated foods for delivery to individuals in ustria, Belgium, Czechoslovakia, Finland, France, reece, Italy, Norway, Poland, Netherlands; French, ritish, American and Russian sectors of Berlin; and ritish, French, and American zones of Germany. hese packages may be purchased for a total cost of 10 and delivery is guaranteed or the purchase price ill be refunded.

Postal regulations now permit a person to send one even-pound parcel per week to an individual in most uropean countries except the Russian occupied zone Germany and all of Berlin. Check this with your cal post office as there may be minor changes as me passes. These parcels may contain non-perishable ods, toilet articles, clothing, and similar items of personal nature. These are the only methods of send- g food and clothing to individual persons in Europe. ny other shipments will necessarily have to go in r regular freight shipments which are consigned to r repersentative on the field for general distribution.

Last week a plan was announced whereby individ- ls and groups in this country could "adopt" a needy ennonite family in Central Europe and send them eleven-pound package by parcel post. These pack- es should be sent directly from the individuals's own st office and will not go through regular M. C. C. annels. In this manner a direct, personal contact n be made with needy families.

In checking the lists of names which we have re- ived up to this time, we find that it includes needy ennonites from a number of places in Central Europe. number were forced to leave Poland as a result of e war and are now scattered throughout Austria, e American, British, and French-occupied Zones of rmany. Other lists include names of families from ssia who are now in Germany and resident Ger- n Mennonite families who are in dire need.

This is a unique opportunity to witness to our s fortunate brethren in Europe. May our prayers with these Christmas packages that they may bring th spiritual and physical joy to their recipients.

Names of families may be secured by writing to Material Aid Section, Mennonite Central Com- ttee, Akron, Pennsylvania. (Canadians will receive mes of residents of the British Zone in Germany ly, as other zones are not open to parcel post ser- e from Canada.)

During the past two weeks shipments to Germany luded two carloads of miscellaneous foods. These loads were shipped from the Mennonite food warehouses located at Kalona, Iowa, and at Silver Springs, Pennsylvania. Also shipped to Germany was a carload of Ralston Relief Cereal. These shipments made a total of 107 tons with an evaluation of $25,750.35 and left aboard the S. S. American Traveler on September 28.

During the month of September there were thirty-eight C.P.S. men assigned to camp according to the National Service Board. Of these, fifteen were Mennonite, seven Brethren, and sixteen were assigned to Government Camps. Just how many reported to camp is not known yet, but it is believed that there were about 20. For the month of October there are only twelve assignments to Mennonite Camps.

A. Wedel and President Kaufman spoke for the Board of Directors and faculty. During the evening program that followed the fellowship meal and a concert by the College orchestra, Rev. J. M. Regier spoke on "Our Debt to the Past," and introduced a number who were present at the laying of the cornerstone on October 12, 1888. On the platform with them were also thirty foreign students, a number of whom responded to the introduction of President Kaufman with short talks and music. Other music for these programs was furnished by the Alexanderwohl and Emmaus churches, a flute quartet, Walter Jost, pianist, and Alvin Franz, bass.

Differences as a Basis for Unity

"For the body is not one member, but many.

If the foot shall say, Because I am not the hand, I am not of the body; is it therefore not of the body?

And if the ear shall say, Because I am not the eye, I am not of the body; is it therefore not of the body?

If the whole body were an eye where were the hearing? If the whole were hearing, where were the smelling?

But now hath God set the members every one of them in the body, as it hath pleased him.

And if they were all one member, where were the body?

But now are they many members, yet but one body.

And the eye cannot say unto the hand, I have no need of thee: nor again the head to the feet, I have no need of you.

That there should be no schism in the body; but that the members should have the same care one for another." (I. Cor. 12:14-21, 25)

"For I say, through the grace given unto me, to every man that is among you, not to think of himself more highly than he ought to think; but to think soberly, according as God hath dealt to every man the measure of faith.

For as we have many members in one body, and all members have not the same office:

So we, being many, are one body in Christ, and every one members one of another." (Rom. 12:3-5).

Reformation Day, October 31

"Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid which is Christ Jesus"

From the editor's point - of - view:

REFORMATION DAY, which will be commemorated October 31 in many churches, might well be used as an occasion for considering the praiseworthy uniqueness of denominations other than one's own. The Christian Church has been likened to a body. But the different Churches have not always behaved towards one another as the organs of the body behave towards each other. For example, the nose does not take the attitude that just because the eye does not have the same strong sense of smell that it (the nose) has, the eye must not be recognized as worthy of cooperation. The organs of the body seem to appreciate each other's uniqueness, and with their differing points of strength they cooperate to make the miracle of the human body. On the other hand, the Churches tend to insist upon "alikeness" as the basis of cooperation. Many a Church tends to shun another if the second does not have the same point or points of strength. The organs of the body all keep their uniqueness. But they do not make out of it an occasion for separation. Instead, they see in it a need for cooperation. It would seem that if the Churches are to approximate a body a little more, they will have to come to something a little more like this.

INNER PREPARATION must always precede outer performance. Perhaps this is overlooked in some of the preaching and religious education of today. Many moral exhortations and "challenges" are given, but a great many of these just simply don't "take." They don't take even though the hearers acknowledge them to be entirely praiseworthy. A great many statements of facts and excellent admonitions roll off the human heart like water from a duck's back. Receptiveness is lacking. Why is it lacking? What would make for greater receptivity? Is it possible that in much of modern preaching and teaching there has been no clear recognition of the necessity of having a conviction of sin? It seems that it is difficult to do the right as long as one does not clearly see how one does wrong. An expert in typing points out that before a student can thoroughly correct his mistake, he must become aware of the nature of the error. As long as there is no clear recognition of the wrongness of something, the drive which produced the original wrongness will keep on competing with the right way of doing a thing. Paint will not stick well on grease. There must be an emptying out before there can be a filling in. The man who clearly sees the error of his ways is bound to be receptive to the right way. Getting things settled within is a necessary prelude to doing the right. In America we have long gloried in many gadgets which applied science can turn out. However, today there is a new emphasis upon pure or theoretical science, science which does not have as its immediate goal the turning out of some invention. The war has taught us the necessity of pure science. It is fundamental. Because of it applied science can do wonders. So it is with the soul. We need the pure science of the soul (spiritual birth). When this is accomplished then miracles of right relationships can take place. Pure science may seem like a waste of time, but when the fullness of time comes, it makes possible undreamed of wonders. Were more attention given to righting the inner conditions of human life today, then much more of the desired outward expression would undoubtedly follow. The cultivation of the inner condition has fallen into disrepute by many because so often in the past it was disassociated from human relationships. Today there is a clearer insight into the fact that there can be no worthwhile inner peace which is not all a part of right relationships with man as well as with God. Getting right within is seen today as a vital act of getting right with fellowman as well as with God. It is becoming clearer that one cannot be right with God and wrong with man. The inner experience is as personal as ever, but it is seen in the light of the fact that no man can live unto himself. As this conception of the inner experience becomes more prevalent, more attention may be given to the necessity of this inner experience. Sin is something with which we must reckon. Jesus came preaching repentance. Repentance precedes sanctification. Painting is all to the good, but it is desirable to remove the grease first.

All One Body We?

by Roland Bartel

Suppose a person who has ignored the church most of his life begins to realize that the world has come to a pretty sad state of affairs. Suppose he loses faith in the secular approaches to the problems of society, and begins to wonder whether the Christian religion may not be the best hope for him. Suppose he begins o look around and tries to decide where he should go to discover the essential nature of the gospel of Christ.

In the course of his explorations he decides that the Protestant church comes closest to fulfilling his needs, o he investigates his choice still further. Imagine his eaction when the Protestant spokesman whom he nterviews would give him the following information:

In the first place, the spokesman would say, there s no such thing as a Protestant church. You came to me because you thought the Reformation had made Christ the only true authority, directly accessible to ach believer. Unfortunately, instead of having one Protestant church proclaiming the Lordship of Christ, we have two hundred denominations, each claiming to e the true New Testament church carrying on the work of Christ.

The questioner, being in earnest about his search, sks which one of the two hundred denominations is most closely allied with the original teachings of Jesus. The spokesman replies that each one claims that distinction and sets itself up as the authority on the correct nterpretation of Jesus and his gospel. So instead of aving one hierarchy as was the case before the Reformation, we now have two hundred hierarchies instructng their adherents in the Christian religion.

The questioner is puzzled. One gospel of Christ and wo hundred denominations! The conversation connues and additional facts are revealed that confuse im still further: The two hundred denominations resent 230,000 local congregations. Usually four or five hurches exist side by side in small villages that could ell be served by one church. As a matter of comparison he is told that the Protestant denominations in merica have 17½ times as many local churches as he Roman Catholic church, but only twice as many embers. In 1944 the Protestants contributed $700,000,00 to the work of their churches. Eighty per cent of hat amount was spent on the upkeep of the local hurch and twenty percent was spent on benevolences. In ther case, the overlapping of overhead expenses is bvious.

The point that the inquiring person finds most difficult to understand is this one: Whereas the Protestants are huddling in two hundred sectarian groups, they don't generally despise each other or even seriously disapprove of each other. In fact, most of the groups are willing to acknowledge that other groups are just as Christian as they are. However, inspite of this acknowledgment, each group persists in its separate way as if it alone were the true church of Christ.

There is an urgency about the convulsive nature of current affairs that may well drive increasing numbers of "secularists" to reconsider the Christian religion as the final solution for our perplexing problems. When such a time comes and when an outsider confronts the Protestant church, what will he find as an alternative to his disillusioned faith in material things. Is the above picture of Protestanism the best we can offer, four hundred years after the Reformation? How can we justify the wasteful and divisive nature of the Protestant effort, when in our own hearts we share the outsider's inarticulate longing for an integrated, efficient, ecumenical Protestant church that could effectively present the gospel of Christ to a very sick world?

The existence of a separate Mennonite church is usually justified on the ground that certain basic principles, such as simple peaceful living, must be preserved. What happens to this argument when confronted with the cogency of the following statement by Charles Clayton Morrison:

> The history of sectarianism clearly shows that the original tenet upon which a "church" was founded tends to become hollow, unreal and static even to its own members; and this often occurs within two generations or less. Moreover, the notion that any divergent creed or practice or polity requires that a separate "church" be created in order to propagate it, is disproved by the whole history of sectarianism. The effect is just the contrary. It tends to put that tenet out of circulation. If the tenet is true, or the practice or polity is sound, it would fare better were it maintained on its merits, with Christian consideration, within the fellowship of the ecumenical church. But once it is sectarianized in an autonomous "church," it raises barriers of prejudice and pride against its acceptance. There is no surer guarantee that its truth will not be accepted beyond its own walled-in sect than to crystallize and isolate it in the form of a separate "church."

What is the answer to the above quotation if there is an answer. Is it possible that the "fullness of time" for church unity has arrived, just as the birth of the Christian Church and the Reformation were cradled in periods described as the "fullness of time." A second look at the contemporary world scene might well suggest an affirmative answer.

While the procedure for achieving church unity is not within the scope of this article, a word of caution is in order. Let us not make the mistake of thinking that we have church unity when we are able to cooperate in a few functions that lie on the periphery of church life. Nothing less than unity in the essential matters of our Christian faith will be adequate if the Christian message is to exert the needed influence in the world. (It is perhaps needless to remind ourselves that unity does not mean uniformity.)

Consider the words of the late Dr. William Temple, former archbishop of Canterbury and a leading prophet in our generation:

> It is not what men think they have found in religion that unites them; this in fact divides them. It is what they have not found but are seeking, that unites them. There is none so intolerant as the one who thinks he holds in his possession the entire deposit of saving truth and perhaps none so far from the spirit of Jesus.

Mennonite Emphases and New India

by S. T. Moyer

For years I discerned that certain teachings of Mennonites appealed to non-Christian Indians. The conviction came that since the essential historical doctrines of Mennonites make a decided appeal to Indian thought, and since this is the year when the four hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the birth of Menno Simons is observed, it is in place to consider these emphases anew. Change the place of the numeral of 1496, and you get 1946.

The word "emphases" is used in the title because when we speak of distinctive teachings, the tendency is to think of these precious truths as the sum and substance of Mennonitism and to neglect other great truths held in common by many evangelical Christians. After all, Mennonites are in the stream of evangelical Protestant thought. To neglect these other great evangelical truths may lead to disaster.

Some years ago an outstanding leader of our church studying in Chicago was told that Mennonites are not even a denomination, can hardly be called a sect. In one of our Conference districts, the opening of new churches to shepherd Mennonite sheep, which had migrated from rural to urban areas, was frowned upon, because it was thought that after all, Mennonites are so nearly identical to some of the other "great"? denominations that the day was past when they had a distinctive contribution to make. Certain of these denominations even demanded, "What right have you to exist as a separate branch in the body of Christ?"

Concerning the needs of India, yea of the world, and of the tremendous swings both during and after World War I and II, the writer makes bold to insist that Mennonites have a truth to sustain and proclaim which is absolutely indispensable to the spiritual health of the body of Christ and to quicken its own life through a reassertion of these emphases, and through a quickened Mennonite Church to leaven the Protestant Church still further. This is no mean service.

The reference to 1496 as the birth date of Menno Simons does not infer that Mennonites trace their origin to Menno Simons. It is readily agreed that a a hundred and more years before Menno Simons' birth the Waldensian martyrs in Switzerland bore family names which were later indentified with the Mennonites, as Stucky, Treyer, Reiff, Meyer, Nukomer, Rolet and others. This is no evidence of organic descent, but supports the belief that from the time of the Waldensians there was unbroken family and racial descent

The writer therefore makes no apology for presenting this subject. He believes that these truths need not be watered down, that we need not be ashamed of them, but that on the contraray there is a desperate need to proclaim and live them especially today. To do so is the only hope for us and for others.

As he has taken a few moments to consider thi subject, these emphases come to him as outstanding

1. The Bible as rule of faith and practice. During the centuries the Mennonites read the Bible, loved it lived it. They made it their creed and wrote forma creeds only when such systematic declarations wer demanded by political rulers. One German historia called them, "Bible Christians." Another declared tha "they lived and moved in God's Word." They did no explain away its teachings, but attempting to understand them as intended by the sacred writers, accepted them at face value.

What about India today? The Indian villager ha nothing but admiration for one who reverences a Hol Book, and nothing but disgust for he who shows ir reverence, either in its outward handling, or in following its teachings. "Thus saith the Holy Word" has tremendous appeal in India.

2. Jesus Christ, is the only Foundation, not th church, nor its ordinances. To the Mennonites, Chris was truly God and truly man. Menno spoke of th denial of Christ as "a blasphemy, a curse, and a abomination."

Rev. S. T. Moyer, entered the mission work in India in 1920. He is now on furlough and is teaching at Freeman Junior College.

Hinduism has nothing comparable to this sort of a Christ. He, the peerless One in His essentialness, makes a tremendous appeal to India. For two years I sat and listened to most scholarly lectures on Hinduism, its aotars, incarnations, rites and ceremonies, philosophies, and closely quizzed the lecturers. The truth came out crystal clear. Hinduism has nothing comparable to Jesus Christ in Whom dwelt the fullness of God full of grace and truth. In India, Christianity has everything to lose, and nothing to gain by watering down Christ, Jesus Christ does not compete with the Hindu gods at their best. He outclasses them.

3. Salvation by personal faith, not by decree of state or church nor by ordinances of the church. Salvation was here and now as well as for all eternity. He who was not saved now was no true Mennonite. They lived as though their citizenship was in heaven.

I am not too sure as to how well this will be received by an Indian which is grossly materialistic. I am sure that it stands out boldly in contra-distinction to Indian beliefs, Hindu and Moslem, which declare hat salvation is by works, rites, things which men do.

4. Liberty of conscience. This is the cry of every ninority group in India today. The Sikhs, the Mosems, the minority Hindu groups want this guaranteed —that they can live their faith and their cultural ife according to their consciences.

For five hundred years, half a millennium, Mennoites have insisted that the Christian Faith cannot be orced on any one, that coercion cannot be used by State or Church, in matters of faith, To them, this id not mean a general toleration within the church, ut that the church could exercise the right to stand or definite teachings, and not be indifferent to matters f faith. There is no essential contradiction between his liberty without, and insistence within.

5. The Sermon on the Mount to be lived here and ow. This included the sacredness of the home, of mariage; of divorce as an impossibility for the true beever. It also included the affirmation as against the ath, also that a man's word was as good as his bond, nd everyday veracity and trustworthiness.

It also included not taking the sword. These very ings are crying needs for India where co-wives, polyamy, and desertion are common, and adultery is condered no worse an offence than a head cold, where ying is justifiable if it serves a good end where falseood is considered inevitable in an evil age, and where ypocrisy among Christians is not uncommon.

6. Sacredness of human life. This has received so uch emphasis of late that space will not be given its elaboration. If life is sacred, then it is of God, nd God alone is the custodian of life. Needless to say, indu friends agree to this wholeheartedly.

7. The daily walk of piety. If the enemies of Menonites and Anabaptists had any good thing to say of em it was of their pious, unassuming irreproachable alk of personal holiness. These Mennonites through e centuries denounced lewd conversation, immorali-, harsh language, intemperance, outward vain disay, worldly pleasures. Instead they emphasized humility, patience, meekness, honesty, being born again..

The lofty Hinduism of Sir Racha Khrishna in Benares, and Oxford University, and that of the Swamies taught the light-headed intelligentsia of America in New York, Chicago, San Francisco, and in the swanky suburbs may be 100 per cent true, but it is also almost 100 per cent lacking in personal holiness and the dynamic of personal holiness. You can find almost every doctrine which Christianity proclaims in Hinduism, but ethics and holiness are winked at or ignored.

It is reported that Dr. John McKay of Princeton after reading Troelsch's book on sects concluded that in a line representing the left and right wing of the Christian Church, the pietistic sects occupy the central and pivotal position, that both left and right wings would go out, become pagan, would fail, if the Pietists disappeared; that the pietistic stream of thought was the saving medium for the whole Christian movement.

If Mennonites lose this emphasis, they will lose one of their most vital contributions to the stream of evangelical Protestant thought, and will fail a certain sector of its present constituency, which yearn for this. Because of local lack of this, large deflection repeatedly occurred during the first four decades of this century, and are likely to occur in the future if this is lost sight of.

8. The outreach of the gospel to nonbelievers. One writer wrote, "The Anabaptists spread rapidly—their teaching soon covered the land." Certainly this outreach is still the life of the church.

India denounces conversion. In many native states, a jail sentence awaits anyone who changes his faith or who is the agent for such a change. Because of this, millions today are without any chance to even hear the gospel.

The hiatus lies in this, that India is a subject nation, and Christianity is the official religon of the conquerors. It is very possible that in indepent India there will be enhanced corruption, graft, deteriorating economic and political conditions, inefficiency, disrupted communications. But if the conquered dislike Christianity because it is the faith of the conquerors, it is very possible that in an independent India this hiatus will be removed. India will then look with new soul hunger to a gospel which is the power of God unto salvation, having tested to the bitter dregs that it has, within its indigenous faiths, no such power. The big days of evangelism lies ahead.

9. Relief work. This has always taken on an enlarged emphasis especially toward those of the household of faith, toward enemies, and in times of national calamity. Mennonites have been known as those who help each other, their fellows in need.

Certainly we cannot refuse to take life, and then do nothing to save life. To render material aids to life and to enemy is the necessary complement of item No. 6, to mis-called passive non-resistance, and the sacredness of human life which refuses to take life.

10. The simple life. Some call this non-conformity and then load down life with so many material encumbrances.

The essence of the simple life is living so unencumbered that one can rise in flight to the heights. He can run and not be weary. He can live, because he is unencumbered with those things which by their cares and anxieties drain life of its power. He who climbs mountain heights takes light baggage.

India, whether high or low, is a lover of the simple life. It may have its Maharajahs,and may like the glamour of Court and Nawab. But there is a delightful simplicity among 99 per cent of its people, by whatsoever name of caste they go. Who was simpler than Mr. Gandhi in the Round-Table Conference in London during the last decade, steering the destinies of an empire as he wore a loin cloth and drank merely goat's milk?

The Mennonite teaching of the simple life will enable it to journey long distances if it enfringes not upon the laws of beauty and efficiency. They called each other "brother" "sister" rather than delighting in distinctive titles.

11. Separation of church and state. If the state is Hindu, what is the Moslem or Parsee to do, if this were not a doctrine which possesses universality? If Pakistan comes into being, and we do not have separation of church and state, whence Christianity or liberty of conscience? The very nature of the universe demands this doctrine. Where social groups or political organizations demand unlimited jurisdiction, there is need for clear definition of boundaries.

In the New India. Therefore, I put it down as my humble opinion, that after the topsy turvy times of readjustment are over, if they come that every one of these eleven emphases will find hearty acceptance, except salvation by faith, and daily piety or holiness, but that these two teachings are desperately needed. Let us neither be ashamed, nor tone down, not hide our light under a bushel. "We wrestle" said St. Paul, which does not mean run away from but grapple with, by boldly taking hold of, in an effort to win in the contest.

By Cornelius Krahn

Mennonite Modesty?

The Local Press of Our Mennonite Communities. Like any other American community the Mennonite communities have local papers that serve their needs. A great variety of interests must be taken care of. Indeed, the task of the editor of a small town paper is manifold. He must be aware of all that happens in the community. He must present local, national, and international news that will be of interest to his readers. Naturally he must conform to certain rules and standards of journalism; and in addition to this he must see to it that the contributions for subscriptions come in.

In light of this it is probably not very surprising that upon investigation we find that many of our local papers are quite pale in appearance and watery in contents. But the editor does not deserve all the blame for this. Each community has the type of paper it produces. The members of a community are as much responsible for the paper they read as for any other conditions in the community.

Modesty or Indifference? For some time national papers (Life, Time, etc.) and other papers with large circulations (the Farmer's Journal, with an article on Corn, Oklahoma; and the Midland Cooperator, on Mountain Lake, Minnesota; Intelligencer Journal on relief work of the MCC etc.) have been featuring the efforts of our small communities during and after the war in serving Uncle Sam in "work of national importance" and helping to relieve suffering on a world wide scale. Careful perusal of the front pages of our local community papers during the past years reveals very little of this. The front pages display the boys in uniform but hardly mention those who served as conscientious objectors. Drives for war loans were much in evidence but drives for relief were obscured Is this due to a genuine Christian modesty because we follow the injunction "let not thy left hand know what thy right hand doeth"? Or are we simply indifferent?

We do not advocate that our local papers should shout from the house tops about all contributions and achievements made, but they should promote and serv the principles and spirit of the community they represent in an unbiased manner. Let us remember ou local press will hardly be better than we make it.

RELIEF WORK IN THE PAST

A Report on the Mennonite World Relief Conference which was held in Danzig in 1930 has been translated and mimeographed by the Mennonite Centra Committee. The first World Conference was held i Switzerland in 1925 commemorating the founding o the Mennonite Church, and the third one was held i Holland commemorating the conversion of Menn Simons. The second one had relief as its motto. At tha time several thousand Mennonites had escaped fro Russia and it was hoped that many others would fo low. This explains the setting, spirit and subjects o the conference which could be summarized: Mutua aid and relief work during the past and presen Representatives of the various conferences lectured an reported on topics pertaining to these subjects. Th booklet, which can be obtained from the MCC, Akro Pa., for the writing, should prove to be an indispens ble source of information and guide, not only for reli workers and pastors, but for all who are interested finding an answer to the question of how brother love found expression among Mennonites the wor over in the years gone by.

IN MEMORIAM

FERDINAND JACOB ISAAC

Ferdinand Jacob Isaac was born at Lehigh, Kansas, August 9, 1888, and passed from this life October 12, 1946, at Champa, India, at the age of fifty-eight years. He received his elementary and high school education in the Moundridge schools, and in 1912 was graduated from Bethel College, a member of the first class to receive the Bachelor of Arts degree.

Through baptism by Rev. Wm. Galle, he became a member of the West Zion Mennonite Church of Moundridge, in the spring of 1903. At the age of six- een he spent a year pioneering in Oklahoma with his Uncle, Rev. P. R. Voth, and family. Upon his gradua- ion from College he taught, first in an Indian school n Colorado, then in the Rosthern, Saskatchewan Academy. Later he was active in home mission work n California.

On October 14, 1914, he was married to Anna E. Penner of Mountain Lake, Minnesota. To this union our children were born. Eleanor, their first child, ied at birth. Esther lived to be nearly two years old, nd died shortly before her parents went to India he first time. Paul, at the age of three, died in Italy when they were on their way home from India for heir first furlough. Donald, the older son is at pres- nt a student at Bethel College.

In the fall of 1921 Ferdinand and Anna accepted he call by our Foreign Mission Board to enter the ndia mission field. In this work which they loved, hey were privileged to serve together twenty-five ears. The duties of a missionary are varied and some- mes numerous. Ferdinand was active in evangelistic ork, but also as a carpenter, supervising the erection many mission buildings. Upon their return from merica in 1944, he served temporarily as a famine- lief worker in the Calcutta area.

In recent years they have been in charge of the auhadih station. Late in August of this year they ere called to Champa, to help with the work which had accumulated during the illness of Rev. P. W. Penner. It was here that he suffered a heart attack. For several days he seemed to be improving, but he had a relapse and his condition became critical. Several air mail messages were received here during his illness. The latest information now at hand was written by Anna to their son Donald, and was dated September 30. In this message she wrote, "Father is hovering between life and death. This morning he said, ' I think my end is near. I shall be very glad to go. It will be glory.' Also he keeps saying, and I join him in it, 'We follow Thee all the way, no matter where thou leadest.' " Naturally we are waiting for more recent mail from India to hear about the last twelve days of his life.

Besides his wife Anna and their son Donald, Ferdinand leaves his aged parents, Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Isaac of Moundridge, his sister, Mrs. John F. Moyer of North Newton, and his brother, Dr. Arnold G. Isaac of Newton, also a foster-sister, Mrs. Peter A. Dyck of Moundridge.

Through his passing our mission field in India loses one of her experienced workers. May the Lord bless the life he has lived and the work he has done, and may his going be a challenge to other young people to take up the work he has laid down.

Mrs. Emma Roth, daughter of Elias and Elizabeth Stauffer Zetty, was born September 21, 1860. In 1880 she was baptized and received into the West Swamp Mennonite Church. Her marriage to Frank Roth took place in 1879. With him she shared life for a little more than sixty-seven years. She was called to eternity on October 5. Surviving are: her aged life-companion Mrs. Harvey Benner; and the following sisters and brothers: Charles Althouse, Mrs. Warren Mease, Mrs. Mary Bright Annie Zetty, Elias and Chrys.

David M. George, son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles George, was born March 7, 1870, and died October 14, 1946. He was baptized and received into the West Swamp Church, Quakertown, Pa., in 1906. In 1920 he and Mrs. Catherine Clemmer were united in marriage. He is survived by his wife and one brother Zacharias in Philadelphia.

Home Mission Workers Move and New Girl's School Opened

For many years, Rev. and Mrs. J. B. Wiens and ildren, Vancouver, British Columbia, lived in the orkers Home at 6460 St. George Street. At the me time this was the Girls Home, and the working rls in that city would gather for Bible study and lowship under the direction of Brother and Sister iens. Naturally the room available for girls was mited. For some time the Board had considered ng the Conference property as a home for girls, t during the time when Vancouver, as well as every her city was overcrowded, it was not considered se to consider the change.

About a year ago Rev. and Mrs. Wiens proposed t they move into their own home when it would be available in the summer of 1946. They now live at 595 East 46th Avenue, about two blocks from the church.

"Mary-Martha" — Girls Home Opened in September

With September 1 Miss Tina Lehn assumed the responsibility as matron of the "Mary-Martha" girls' home, 6460 St. George Street. Girls, who have had private rooms in Vancouver, have been invited to change to the home, and some have already done so. Since it is adjacent to the church, it serves most admirably as a headquarters for young women's activities as they are connected with the church. Rev. Wiens will conduct the weekly Bible studies. Already a meeting to do relief work has been held. Pray for this new undertaking.—A. J. Neueuschwander, Sec.

"Who's Crazy?" -- A Phantasy

by George Stoneback

Parson Jones went to the official board meeting of his church. The membership and work of the church were growing so rapidly that help was needed. A "sweet young thing" was decided upon for director of religious education and parish visitor. After the salary was agreed upon, it was decided that a car and running expenses must be added to the salary. "Quite right," thought Parson Jones, "that's the only fair way to do it." Then he got up the courage, a little later in the meeting to suggest the possibility that he be granted expense allowance for the use of his car in the work of the church. It was turned down so cold that the ink in the secretary's pen froze solid.

That night Parson Jones had a nightmare (the night after board meeting is occasionally the hardest night the preacher has all month.) He saw himself applying for admittance at the Calm and Cozy Rest Home. "But you're not crazy! Crazy people never admit it. What makes you think you're crazy?", asked the superintendent.

"Listen!", replied Parson Jones. "This morning I met our head usher. He drives a coal truck for deacon Smith. I noticed that Jake was driving a fine new red truck. So, I stroked the shining hood and said to Jake, 'Swell truck you got there—presume it set you back a pertty penny.' "

"Jake looked at me as though he thought I had lost my reason and said, 'Do you mean to say you think for a minute I'd haul Deacon Smith's coal for $30 a week and buy the truck out of the pay? No sir! Smith buys the truck, pays the gas, oil, tires, repairs, batteries, even the fine for stopping too long in a "No parking" zone. If he didn't, I wouldn't be hauling his dirty coal. Do you think I'm crazy?'

"As I walked on down the street, I thought, 'Of course, Deacon Smith would not be so unreasonable in his dealings with his employees.' At the post office I talked with one of the trustees (he's the postmaster in Podunk). 'Is your salary large enough that you can afford to keep up this swell office and run the mail trucks?'

" 'I thought it was too early in the morning for you to be awake, now I know you're still asleep. Uncle Sam takes care of all that, do you think I'm crazy?'

"As I was leaving the post office I met Galen Gab, another of the trustees — he's a salesman. 'I'll not be seeing you for a couple of weeks, Parson — going out after business for Mr. Goldbrick.' (He's president of the Screwy Nut & Bolt Co. and also president of the official board of the church.)

"Where are you going this time?', I asked.

" 'To good old Texas — home of the biggest and best of everything.'

"My! How can you afford to take such long trips all the time? It would seem that it would eat up all your salary', I said innocently.

'Galen was never thrown off his guard, but that almost left him speechless; he soon recovered however,

" 'Haven't I always said preachers should stay clear of politics and economics? This proves that you know nothing about the world of finance. My dear man, don't you know that salesmen receive either straight percentage or salary and percentage plus expenses? If I run my car I get 6 cents a mile. If I go by train, my fare is paid — so are hotel bills, meals, etc. Do you think I'd drum up business for Goldbrick at my expense? Do you think I' m crazy? Well, so long — I must run or I'll miss my train — sorry I can't be at the meeting tonight.'

"As I walked back toward the parsonage, I began to wonder who really was crazy. As I neared home, I met Bill Stirrer, a labor organizer and superintendent of our Sunday School. Why the tycoons allowed him in that position as long as they did is beyond me — unless they thought he was safer there than teaching the class of young people he formerly had. Bill, I thought is an idealist — working not only for the money, but also for the love of the cause. I'll ask him about this proposition. 'Bill, do you mind telling me whether you get expenses paid when you travel from one factory to another in the course of your work, or must you pay it out of your salary?'

" 'Not at all', Bill replied, "the union pays me salary plus expenses, that's the only proper way to do it, don't you think? If they didn't, I'd quit — I'm not that crazy — much as I'm interested in the uplift and improvement of the standard of living among laborers.'

"All day, like Paul, I buffetted my body — trying to pound myself to the place where I'd have the courage to ask the board for an expense account to pay for office expenses and especially the cost of running my car in the work of the church. It was a weak copy of the voice that fills the church every Sunday with which I asked my question 'Would the board see fit to grant me an expense account for the use of my car and for office expenses incurred in doing the work of the church?'

"They all with one consent began to tell me why that was impractical; why servants of God should not be so much interested in worldly reward; how it would seem that the church and the pastor were trying to beat the government out of income tax, ad infinitum.

"When they got finished with me, I did not resign to ask Deacon Jones for a job hauling coal, or to ask chairman Goldbrick for a job selling nuts and bolts, or to ask Bill whether he could get me in as a labor organi-

The History of Men-o-Lan

by Norman A. Geisinger

Continuing the series of retreat grounds, Norman Geisinger of Zionsville, Pa., describes some experiences the Eastern District has had in constructing their grounds, Men-O-Lan. He presents some of the points to remember and the experiences of the District in setting up and operating this camp. For districts interested in establishing their own site, consideration of the experiences of others is important.

Since 1928, a group of young people from the Mennonite churches of our conference have come together for a retreat. Starting with fifty-four, the retreat has grown from year to year until this year we had five different retreats with a total of 515 retreaters. Naturally as the number of retreaters increased annually, so the amount of money, which the Conference paid to the University Camp at Green Lane where the Retreats were held, increased. Observing this with the thought of using such money within our own group, some of the leading men of the Conference began to talk and hope for our own retreat ground. Rev. Olin A. Krehbiel, then a new man in our Conference, was leader of this movement. They were much encouraged in September, 1937, when, at the Eastern District Sunday School Union Convention held in the East Swamp Mennonite Church, Mr. J. Walter Landis offered to donate a part of his property to the Conference for this purpose, if it was found suitable.

In the fall of 1937 four ministers of the Conference went to spy out the land." Their report was favorable. So on March 22, 1938, twenty-three acres of Mr. Landis' property was surveyed and designed—Retreat Grounds. On April 30, 1938, the Conference in regular session accepted this tract of land as offered by Mr. Landis and delegated the working out of advance plans for the Retreat Grounds to the Presidents of the Sunday School Union, Young People's Union, Retreat Chairman, and the Field Secretary of the Sunday School Union. The Conference also promised financial support not to exceed one hundred dollars for the year.

During the year, the committee in charge sponsored two meetings of volunteers at the Retreat Grounds for the purpose of clearing it and cutting a driveway and paths. They also had Mr. Willard Shelly of the Allentown Church, an engineering student, prepare a layout of the grounds with tentative locations of the proposed buildings.

On May 6, 1939, the Conference passed a resolution to create a Retreat Committee of six members whose task it should be to: 1. Study and determine the general nature of the camp and to adopt a plan of development. 2. Organize and receive and expend monies for said development. 3. Enlist such volunteer helpers as opportunities present themselves. 4. Draw up a constitution for the development and management of this project and present same to the Conference next year. During the year, more clearing was done, building sites selected, driveway improved, a well drilled, and the dining hall foundation (30'x50') was made.

At the 1940 Conference the MEN-O-LAN constitution was adpoted and a board of managers, six members, elected. At a meeting on December 30, 1940, the board promised the Retreat Chairman to have the grounds ready for the 1941 retreats. By July, 1941, the dining hall and two latrines were built mostly by volunteers from the conference churches. These were the only buildings on the grounds when the historic first retreats were held at MEN-O-LAN July, 18-20 and 25-27 with 190 attendants. Everyone slept in tents with wooden floors.

In the spring of 1942 the Sunday School of the First Mennonite Church of Philadelphia built the first cabin at MEN-O-LAN (a complete donation). Their example inspired others to action and within two months four more cabins (16'x32') were built by various church groups (East Swamp brotherhood, Lansdale Sunday School, Allentown Sunday School and Souderton Sunday School). Two of these cabins were donated in full and two in part. In 1943 the Swamp Charge brotherhood built the leaders' cabin (20'x40'), also a complete donation. The next year the Deep Run Church built the cooks' cabin and the West Swamp Sunday School built a boys' cabin (both donated). Recently the Schwenksville Sunday School started work on building a girls cabin.

Besides the donated buildings which cost about two thousand dollars, the cost of the development to date is about six thousand dollars. Receipts from all sources to date total nine thousand dollars. Of this amount almost three thousand dollars was raised through the Conference budget; three thousand dollars was earned from serving meals at retreats, and the remainder came from the Sunday School and Young People's Unions and individuals and groups donations.

From our experiences we offer the following suggestions to other districts interested in a retreat ground: A retreat ground should be located near the center of the Conference for the convenience of most of the members. It should be not more than five miles from a public transporation system but out of hearing distance from a highway and an airport.

A natural beauty spot with a lake or stream may be desirable but is not a necessity. Any plot of ground ten acres or more with good natural drainage can be used and can be made beautiful by planting trees and shrubs. A small farm, including the buildings, can be used to good advantage.

Buildings should be of sufficient number and size to lodge and feed 150 people at one time. However, an auditorium large enough to hold three hundred people is desirable so that larger conference meetings can be held at the retreat grounds. About 100 attendants per retreat is a good standard.

Besides retreats for all age groups, the grounds can be used for conference meetings, conventions, Bible conferences, outdoor worship services, Sunday school picnics, family reunions, etc.

Additional information will be given upon request.

Review of Work in Saskatchewan

by Henry Friesen

At the beginning and middle of July we had our retreats — one at Rosthern and one at Elim Gospel Beach. The Lord really had sent us some wonderful workers in Rev. J. Esau, Rev. Paul Shelly, Missionary Marvin Dirks and Dr. J. D. Unruh. We felt that God was present. A number of young people accepted Christ and a larger number dedicated their lives for full time Christian service. It certainly was wonderful to see so many young people accepting Christ and willing to serve Him in full time. Our thanks go to the Heavenly Father and to you in the States for sending the workers up here. At present we are planning to have a Conference with these young people just before Bible School opening so as to keep in touch with them and inspire them more and more for God's work.

Daily Vacation Bible School

After the retreat our Daily Vacation Bible School work began. Forty-seven workers from the North (Rosthern) and about fifteen workers from the South (Swift Current) went out teaching. There were not many churches that were without D.V.B.S. Our workers served in many districts where there seldom is a Sunday School. The Lord really blessed us in this very important mission work among the children. Quite a few children accepted Christ during this time and our prayer is that these children may remain steadfast in what they've professed. Forty-two schools in the north and about eight schools in the south were served. At the beginning we didn't have many workers and not much money, but during the retreat at Rosthern one worker after the other came with a zeal to work for the Lord. It was wonderful how the retreat inspired the young people that the material things should be left behind spiritual things.

Our D.V.B.S. work entails quite a bit of travelling expense. The schools are spread over all Saskatchewan. Some are 250 miles from Rosthern. The workers get $2.50 for each school they teach and about $2.00 or $3.00 for religious literature for the children. The money to cover all these expenses came from Christian Endeavor Societies, closing programs of the D.V.B.S., indviduals, and a retreat collection.

All our expenses could be met for which we are very thankful to the Lord and all supporters. Our expenses from January 1 to September for mission was $1,109.12. The missions of the D. V. B. S. and and the colporteur work has grown from year to year. In 1937, we had one teacher and one school and this year there were sixty-two workers serving fifty schools. We hope and pray and trust our Lord that our mission work will keep on growing. This year Ernst Harder, representing the young people from the States, was with us. For this we are very thankful. In the future we hope that the plan will materialize that other young people will come and help us in the D.V.B.S. work and other missions.

Youth Rallies

As I have mentioned, Ernst Harder from Paraguay, representing the young people from here and the States, was with us. We certainly appreciated his visit. In order that he might get in touch with many young people, we arranged youth rallies at different places. It was the first time we tried youth rallies and they worked just fine. I am quite certain not only we Canadians enjoyed it, but our guest Ernst felt quite at home among us. Since we had two youth rallies the same Sunday in different parts of Saskatchewan, we had Prof. W. Hohmann at one place and Ernst at the other. At the Sunday School Convention on August 5 both met and both did their best. Prof. Hohmann has always been a welcome guest in our beloved Saskatchewan.

Ernst Harder's trip through Canada was two-fold. First, it was to bind the youth from different countries more closely together for Christ and our Lord and raise interest in a foreign student fund, a fund that helped him through school.

Projects at Rosthern

We have quite a large program at home this year again. Here at Rosthern we are enlarging the Invalid Home for thirty more patients. Besides this we are at the same time building an Orphan Home. The money for this purpose has been donated by one person.

We will have to do quite hard work in collecting for the Invalid Home and, at the same time, we have to make our last payment on the farm and the third payment for Elim Gospel Beach, So our aim this fall is to raise about ten thousand dollars to meet all the obligations. We trust in the Lord and in the support of our people so that we will be able to meet all these obligations and be able to start building on the Invalid Home again in spring.

We have had quite a substanital income from the farm this year. The farm consists of one section of land. About 270 acres is in crops, 130 acres in summer fallow and the rest in hay and pasture and yard.

Our dairy consists of twenty-four cows. The milk is sold in the town of Rosthern which is one mile from the farm. About three hundred chickens are kept, and the eggs are sold to the hatchery in the hatching season. We keep one hundred twenty sheep and the same number of lambs and forty-three pigs. The farm is already a good assest to our work. It supplies the mission projects with the produce of the farm, such as vegetables, milk, eggs and meat, and after the farm will be paid for, it will help us financially.

The farm is especially adapted for the Children's Home where the children may learn not only to play but to work as well. At present we have already two children both fourteen years of age. The girl helps with little jobs in the Invalid Home and the boy helps with milk delivery in town. As soon as the Children's Home is completed we will be ready to take more children.

This Fair Earth

We thank Thee, Lord, for this fair earth,
The glittering sky, the silver sea;
For all their beauty, all their worth,
Their light and glory, come from Thee.
Thine are the flowers that clothe the ground,
The trees that wave their arms above,
The hills that gird our dwellings round,
As Thou dost gird Thine own with love.

Why Are Ye Fearful?

The harrowing experience of the recent war for not just the participants, but for all people, makes the fact of fear something which we all keenly feel. The emotional excess of V-J day was partly an expression of profound relief because the fears that beset each one of us could be forgotten. But, fear is not gone — other fears are besetting many of us where once the uncertainties of war was our fear.

Our society has a basic competitiveness in its make-up. There is competition in business, in rating in social circles, in getting good grades in school, in dressing attractively. If we cannot compete successfully we feel insecure and become fearful. We lose self respect and thus become more insecure and fearful. Few if any are there who do not for one reason or another have fears. For, not only is our society so constructed that it besets us with fear, but, as well, the uncertainties of life itself can cause us to be insecure and thus fearful.

One feature of fear is the feeling of utter isolation from everyone else that it gives. Where there once was fellowship, fear has as its fruit the wide chasm between the fearful one and others. This loneliness then results in greater fear and the vicious circle goes around.

When the disciples rode on the boat and the waves rose high, such a fear gripped their hearts. They were in stark loneliness in a world of dread and fear. Panic gripped them and it was only when the waves were calmed by the Master that the panic and dreadful fear left them.

Most of us today are like the disciples in one way or another. We all know profoundly the fear that gripped them — it has gripped us, too. When our security is removed from us, we reach out frantically in fear for help.

How, then, can we be saved from fear? How can we face the countless uncertainities of life and face them victoriously? Our security cannot come from the outside — that must be said first. The rich man who built many barns did not save himself from insecurity — it still stalked him for his physical body was only relatively more secure — nothing more than that. The man who, in desperation, makes countless friends and scrupulously avoids offending anyone for the sake of assuring his feeling of security also builds on sand. And the man who makes a name for himself and drives himself to be venerated and respected for the sake of the feeling of security it gives, also builds on sand. He merely competes for superiority, and when he is bested his whole world tumbles.

Rather than overcoming fear by gaining wealth, becoming popular with others, being superior, or the countless other ways men today seek to combat their fears, the solution lies in the age-old counsel of Jesus. The mysteries of faith and self-giving and the reassurances it gives are priceless treasures for men today as they were for the disciples on the boat. "Fear not for I am with thee," "Why are ye fearful, o ye of little faith," those and other statements in the same vein take on new and rich meaning.

And what are the elements of fearlessness? The assurance that God cares and loves his people. The childlike faith in our finiteness and God's infiniteness with the assurance that He has an infinite purpose for us in which we can completely identify ourselves — in which we can lose ourselves and give ourselves. It was such faith and self-giving which gave the early Christians such amazing power. Roman rulers marveled at those martyrs, remarking that they died so well.

To this day, the answer to fear Jesus gave remains insoluble — it is faith and the submerging of ourselves in our God's will.

Items of Interest

In an era destitute of love and rampant with the fruits of hate and fear, cynicism and despair consumes, for many sufferers, the conviction that a Father God who cares for His people exists. The quiet, realistic testimony of love as brought to these suffering people by the relief worker can, indeed, give back faith and with it life. A Czech Jewish child, who at fourteen was disillusioned and cynical is a testimony of this fact. He was near death in a concentration camp at the war's end. After receiving loving care and recovering from his physical and spiritual suffering, he drew a picture. It showed the blackness of a concentration camp. Shining into the misery was a white light, and up this struggled a human figure—himself. Below he had written in Czech: "To those who gave me back my faith."

The Christian Youth Fellowship of the Christian church at Rock Island, Illinois, made a 2,040 mile bus trip last summer visiting points of interest at the East Coast. The Fellowship, of high school age young people, raised the money for the trip by sponsoring numerous projects, hired a bus and made the tour. Standards were set for eligibility for the trip. These were: (1) Each member was required to be a regular attendant at the evening meetings of the youth group and the church. (2) He was expected to make a contribution of ten cents a week as a consecration offering. (3) He had to be willing to use his talents in the furthering of each session and in special activies. (4)He aided in the promotion of all projects to secure financial assistance. Each day's traveling and sightseeing was climaxed with a friendship circle of prayer and consecration. Well-known songs of conference and hymns were sung while traveling. It was an experience of deepening ties of Christian fellowship.

The Christian Endeavor headquarters are being moved during October from Bostom, Massachusetts, to Columbus, Ohio. The new headquarters of the International Society of Christian Endeavor and of the World's Christian Endeavor Union will be located at 1203 East Broad Street, Columbus. Dr. Daniel Poling, president, stated "By this re-location we bring our headquarters near the population-center of the United States and to the heart of our Christian Endeavor constituency.

"This step, long considered, has been taken unanimously.

"Throughout the world, Christian Endeavor faces unparalleled new opportunities in all fields of service: missionary, evangelistic, citizenship and world peace. Columbus becomes now a world-youth capital."

The International Society of Christian Endeavor unites the societies of the U. S. and Canada. The World's Union of Christian Endeavor consists of three million members in fifty-two countries.

In 1945-46, there were 10,000 foreign students enrolled in American colleges and universities. In the years just ahead this is expected to increase to 70,000.

In Germany, church agencies are sharing responsibilitiy for finding homes for fourteen million refugees from the east. From church members, often nearly starving themselves, the organization gathered twenty thousand tons of food and clothing and thirty million marks in the Western zones. The relief is distributed without question of creed or politics.

A letter from Robert Pannabecker, relief worker in China, to his parents, Dr. and Mrs. S. F. Pannabecker, tells of present conditions in China. The letter's postage cost $2100. Breakfast cost $1800, dinner was $4000 and tea cost $400. From Tuesday to Sunday he had spent $90,000 although he was frugal. Rather than going to Honan Province, they will go to Hunan to set up tractor operation units. This change is due to the rebellion and strife in China.

An Indian Christian from India recently reported in Chicago on the state of affairs in India. She stressed the far-reaching effects of the present independence movement in India. White dominance is deeply resented by the general population resulting in a general attitude of desiring the white population to leave. There is existent a deep resentment toward the British in particular. This flowering of the spirit of independence has effects upon the missionary program in India of considerably significance, according to the Indian Christian. Since Christendom is brought in by Western missionaries and is thus attached to the whites, there will be greater resistance to missionary efforts. Because some missionaries have quite openly and enthusiastically partaken of Britain's imperialism and added resistance can be expected. E. Stanley Jones, however, is both revered and respected by the Indians.

Die Vereinsglocke" is a mimeographed youth paper published by the Ontario young people. This settlement is quite new having been composed in the main of refugees of twenty years ago. At present the paper is bi-lingual with the young people tending more to favor the use of English and the older people preferring German. In an article in the September issue "Lokale Plauderei," the story of the first settler's problems is presented.

MENNONITE AID NOTES

Bro. P. C. Hiebert, Chairman of the Mennonite Central Committee, who recently returned from Europe reports that the plight of the displaced persons in Europe of which there are an estimated 25 million, is a very sad and tragic picture and a most powerful and convincing argument against war. He says, "Our hearts would like to help all, but limited means necessarily reduce our sphere of ability to serve a scant 100,000 towards whose support we directly or indirectly contribute and the still smaller number perhaps 10,000 plus for whom we would find a place and circumstances which will enable them to live a normal life, earn their daily bread, and make their just contribution to the interest of mankind. These smaller numbers are the ones of our household of faith for whom we have a special obligation."

Many of the displaced Mennonites are confined to camps distributed throughout Germany and Denmark. Bro. Peter Dyck and wife Freda are continuing to care for several hundred in the city of Berlin. Others are scattered throughout the British, American, and French Zones. A small number are in Austria and a remnant in Holland. A large percentage have become homeless and helpless and will not be able to return to their former homes. Refugees living in camps are over-crowded and will be desperately lacking in clothing and food supplies during the approaching winter. Brother Hiebert says that all the displaced Mennonites are in need of assistance both for subsistance and also in their desire to find a new home.

RELIEF

Esther Detweiler and Bertha Fast who have been working in Italy in UNRRA refugee camps were ready to proceed home when it became necessary for Esther to have an appendectomy in Paris. The operation was performed on October 9 in an American hospital. Reports indicate that she is recovering rapidly.

John R. Schmidt M. D. and wife Clara returned to the states after at term of service in Paraguay.

Brother and Sister P. C. Hiebert returned from heir six-months assignment as special commissioner o Europe on October 14.

George L. Potter, Moses A. Beachy, and Eldo Neueld left Newark, New Jersey on October 18 for La Plata, Puerto Rico.

If plans carried Lewis Martin and Howard C. Yoder flew from Holland to Poland on October 16, to nvestigate relief needs and report on ways and means f helping.

A cable from Shanghai, China, states that Glen D. Graber, Dallas C. Voran, Robert Waltner, Kyle T. Reed, David Karber, and Mrs. J. Lawrence Burkholder rrived safely on October 17.

MATERIAL AIDE NOTES

Contact has been made with Washington officials n an effort to determine whether or not there were egulations which would restrict the slaughtering and rocessing of meats for overseas relief. We have been informed that all restrictions and controls imposed by the Office of Price Administration have been lifted. This means there is nothing to prevent anyone from butchering livestock for relief purposes.

Meat inspection regulations must be observed, however, in order to meet OPA requirements. These regulations allow farmers to slaughter their own livestock on the farm without inspection. Each can of meat or meat products must be plainly marked with the name and address of the farmer on whose premises the animal was slaughtered if it is to be sent across state boundaries or overseas. This will eleminate the need for federal inspection.

Inductions Halted

Because of the extraordinary spurt in the rate of enlistments in the army, the War Department has suspended the induction of draftees under the Selective Service System for the two and one-half month period beginning October 15. We may expect that inductions to CPS will also be halted during this period.

Selective Service has indicated, however, that those C. P. S. men assigned for induction on October 24 and November 7 may or may not be inducted depending upon the local situation. Selective Service reasons that ordinary procedures for induction of 4-E men are slower than 1-A's. Therefore a C. P. S. man under a given draft board will be inducted even after October 15 if a 1-A man called simultaneously by the same board has already reported to the army. In other words, cases of 4-E men will be parallel to 1-A men of the same board.

Picture Slides

Several sets of colored slides describing C. P. S and related projects have been collected and prepared by the mutual help and cooperation of campers and camp staff members. A script and explanatory notes have also been prepared to accompany each set. These sets of 35mm slides are available to such groups as may be interested in viewing them and may be obtained by directing your request to the Publicity Office, M. C. C. Akron, Pennsylvania. Sets available now are: Terry, Montana; Denison, Iowa; Belton, Montana; Fort Collins, Colorado; La Plata, Puerto Rico; Gulport, Mississippi; Ypsilanti, Michigan; Cleveland, Ohio; and Tiffin, Ohio. Two other sets, Mennonite Heritage, and Crafts and Leatherwork in C. P. S. are also available.

A TRAGEDY AND DENIAL OF FAITH

"It would be a colossal tragedy and a denial of our faith if through extravangance, waste, or sheer selfishness we should permit others to go by way of starvation to their graves. If we are to fulfil our duty as Christian families, and especially if we are to teach the Christian way of life to our children by action as well as by words, we must go far beyond mere token help to those who are starving. We must cut deeply into our resources at a time like this lest the acid of selfishness cut into our souls."

My Task

"I do not ask for mighty words
To leave the crowd impressed,
But grant my life may ring so true
My neighbor shall be blessed.

"I do not ask for influence
To sway the multitude;
Give me a 'word in season' for
The soul in solitude.

"I do not ask to win the great—
God grant they may be saved!—
Give me the broken sinner, Lord,
By Satan long enslaved.

"Though words of wisdom and of power
Rise easily to some,
Give me a simple message, Lord,
That bids the sinner come.

"A group of boys and girls may be
My God-appointed task;
Help me to lead each one to Thee—
What greater could I ask?

"I ask no place of prominence
Where all the world can see,
But in some needy corner, Lord,
There let me work for Thee.

"No task too great, no task too small,
Sufficient is Thy grace;
The darkened heart, my mission field,
My light, the Saviour's face."

—Barbara Cornet Ryberg

zer — I walked home quietly — thinking about next Sunday's sermon. I'm crazy — do you have a room or don't you?"

"Frankly, we are filled up, but there are several people here who need the rest less than you do — we will arrange a place for you."

The writer of this article was not moved out of his own experience to write this phantasy. The editor asked him to write on the subject. The writer receives a salary that is adequate for his living expenses and upkeep of his car, in addition to a parsonage and an expense account for office supplies of all kinds. He has received substantial salary increases in keeping with the rising cost of living. He speaks not for himself, but for the many pastors serving, for example three churches — miles apart — receiving $1500 and no expense allowance for office or car. Only in behalf of these diligent silent "inflation sufferers" has the writer consented to write on this delicate subject.

THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH IN JAPAN

Free discussion of current progress of the Japanese people toward a stable order and the responsibility of the Christian Church there and here to stimulate that progress marked a two-day retreat at Yonkers, New York, late in September of mission executives and former Japan missionaries, called by the Japan Committee of the Foreign Mission Conference. Churchmen recently returned from extended visits to Japan struck an encouraging note in pointing out that individuals and families are making pathetic efforts to re-establsh some of their former pattern of existence, that Church doors stand open and that congregations gather faithfully and regularly, some in home or improvised structures where buildings have been shattered, that school enrollments are greater than ever before in spite of lack of equipment and facilities. It was pointed out that General Douglas MacArthur and the Supreme Command of the Allied Powers give Christian missionaries top priority among non-military personnel to be admitted to the Pacific areas now under occupation. To date some seventy-five Protestant missionaries, members of various denominations, have received both passports and military permits for their return to strengthen the Christian forces in Japan.

FREE SERVICE

Japanese labor unions have developed a new strike technique which may spread to other countries in those trades suitable for this type of approach. The method is for the worker to stay on the job and give the public free service! Street car, bus, railroad, telephone and telegraph services have experienced this new method with amused satisfaction on the part of the public and consternation on the part of management.

FREEMAN JUNIOR COLLEGE

After careful consideration of the needs of the school and the community the Board and the Administration have decided to launch out to the task of getting a new auditorium-gymnasium on the campus. They feel that this new building is necessary in order: to make the old gym available for the shop building, to provide more adequate seating for larger community gatherings, to provide more space for the dining hall, to provide a recreation center for students, and to provide adequate facilities for a good physical education program. Present plans are for a building which will be large enough to seat approximately two thousand people. It will have a full basement for dining hall, kitchen, dressing rooms, recreation center, and small gymnastics room. On the main floor will be ample space for regulation size basketball court and a spacious stage. The cost cannot now be ascertained definitely, nor are materials available for construction. One thing will be carefully kept in mind—not to go into debt again. The aim is to begin to raise money for a building fund now and hold it in reserve for the time when construction can go forward. The work will be carried on through the churches in the community. Each church will arrange its own method of raising its contributions toward the goal. Appeals will be made to give according as the Lord has prospered us, remembering that the Lord loveth a cheerful giver.

BETHEL COLLEGE

Harry E. Martens, who has been on a leave of absence four years as a CPS director in various parts of the country and most recently in Puerto Rico, has returned with his family to their campus home and will serve as an assistant to the business manager. Nine members of the Bethel staff attended the regional conference of the North Central Association of Colleges and Universities in Salina on October 19. Rehearsals are in progress under the direction of Mr. Eldon Graber for the all-school play, "Icebound," a Pulitzer prize winner by Owen Davis, which will be presented Thursday, November 7, in Memorial Hall, with Gordan Kaufman and Rosella Reimer in the leading roles. Also supervised by Mr. Graber is the Bethel Collegian, affiliated with the Associated Collegiate Press, which is being published every week this year by an enlarged staff headed by Hildegard Peters.

BLUFFTON COLLEGE

The student Y's sponsored a World Student Service Fund drive during the week of October 14. Part of the money received is to be kept on the campus to aid in the support of foreign students. Pres. Ramseyer attended a meeting of the Board of Trustees of Mennonite Biblical Seminary in Chicago October 16. The college will gain immediate possession of a dwelling house adjacent to the campus, which was purchased a short time ago. The house will be used to house men students. Education classes are planning a trip to Columbus to visit the University school. John Ramseyer, a Bluffton alumnus, is the head of this school. The most modern methods are to be observed in that nstitution. The faculty and faculty wives met for a discussion meeting Friday evening, October 12. After eating supper together the backgrounds of foreign and Puerto Rican students was discussed. Rev. Shelly discussed Canadian backgrounds, Dean Byers told of European backgrounds, and Carl Lehman spoke on Puerto Rico. In this way an effort was made to better understand students coming from these countries.

The church has purchased a parsonage in town which the Kings are now occupying. The address is 345 Thirteenth Street, Paso Robles, California. Sunday, October 13, witnessed the ordination of Rev. Lubin W. Jantzen, a member of our church, and his wife, Matilda, as missionaries to India. However, this service was held in the Immanuel Church, Los Angeles, so that the Rev. D. J. Unruh, who represented the Foreign Mission Board on that occasion, might also take part in the ordination of Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Wiebe on the afternoon of the same day in Upland. On Monday evening, Brother Unruh brought us "echoes" of the services in our own church and presented a strong challenge to missionary service to our people. Mrs. A. J. Richert, District Advisor of the Women's Missionary Societies of the General Conference, spent the afternoon of October 15 with the ladies of our local society, during which time she acquainted us with aims and plans of the larger group and showed us how we could help further those plans. —Mrs. W. The Christ of the Andes

On the border line between Chile and Argentine stands this statue with the inscription: "Sooner shall these mountains crumble into dust than Argentine and Chile shall violate the peace they have pledged at the feet of Christ, The Saviour."

The famous statue was erected in 1904 to commemorate the peaceful settling of a boundry dispute that had brought Argentine and Chile to the very verge of war. War had seemed quite certain; special taxes had been levied to support it; battleships had been built; and armies had been raised.

But a few people on both sides of the border had refused to accept the necessity for war. Believing in peace, they kept their faith in peaceful means of settling differences, and they worked for peace. Finally these people got the governments of the two countries to submit their disputes to arbitration, and at last not only was the boundary dispute settled, but such a spirit of friendship was aroused that the two countries sold their warships and reduced their armies.

Friends of peace in the two countries, seeking to symbolize concretely this triumph of peace, decided to erect this statue. Old cannons were melted to provide the metal for it. A twenty-six foot bronze figure of the Prince of Peace was mounted on a granite base, on which are depicted in bronze the continents of the Western Hemisphere. Three miles above sea level in the heart of the Andes mountains it stands, on the boundary line of Chile and Argentina. For a half a century there has been peace between the two countries that it overlooks.

"Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid which is Christ Jesus"

From the editor's point - of - view:

WORLD ORDER roots in the spirit of man. A statement on "The Churches and World Order" declares: "Unless there is a normal transformation in the hearts of individuals and in society, the seeds of pride and selfishness will surely produce the bitter fruit of a new and more terrible war. Our churches have stated this truth repeatedly. The passage of time has only made more clear its validity. If there is to be sufficient world order to prevent chaos, international relations must be changed at their source—in the spirit of man. There is no substitute for a fundamental conversion of attitudes." Let there be order in an individual's mind and emotions and he will emanate orderliness to those around him. He will be as salt and light. It is at once evident that the quality or depth of this orderliness is of extreme importance. Just what kind of an attitude in an individual makes for world order is an important matter to consider.

MOTHERS may have much to do with world order. It is mother who exerts the profoundest influence upon the young child in his most impressionable years, for she takes care of him most and is most with him. Karl Menninger in his book "Love Against Hate" seems to propound the thesis that it is the sons of frustrated mothers who tend to be so warped by their mother's possessive and dominating attitude that they, the sons, will have a destructive and aggressive attitude. In an article entitled "What's Wrong with American Mothers" in the October 26 issue of the "Saturday Evening Post", Dr. Edward A. Strecker seems to deal with the same kind of mother. However, he points out that such "moms" produce sons who are so handicapped by their emotional immaturity that they can't fight. Dr. Strecker refers to the nearly two million men who were rejected from military service because of psychiatric disorders and to the more than half a million who were discharged from the Army alone for similar reasons. He points out that they were products of mothers who failed to wean their sons emotionally and therefore kept them from growing up psychologically. From his point of view it was the emotionally mature who were capable of fighting and did so. Do these two psychiatrists contradict each other? Or is it possible that sons of frustrated mothers (moms) may feel like fighting but have already been rendered incapable of fighting by the long intense fighting that has gone on (under the guise of love) between them and their mothers in the babying process? On the other hand, the sons who have been helped to stand on their own feet, who have suffered least from fightings within and without their mothers, are most capable of strenuous battle. All of this may go to show that the highest possibilities of life may be used for good or evil. Mothers ought to facilitate emotional maturity in their sons, but they also ought to help them to use that emotional maturity in the very difficult task of peacemaking.

VOTERS need to be informed in order to vote intelligently. A source of information that is very valuable for forming opinion about congressional candidates for re-election is the newsletter entitled "Memorandum On National Legislation Of Interest To Religious Groups" issued by the Friends Committee on National Legislation, 2111 Florida Avenue, N.W., Washington 8, D. C. In its issue of October 21 it, for example points out that "In opposing conscription the best state delegation was Indiana's. Under "Special Mention" it commends, "Jerry Voorhis for his stand on liquor and his hard work in the best causes at all times, Christian Herter for being one of the most sensitive men in Congress, along with Dr. Judd of Minnesota." In the same issue it suggests that voters inquire of candidates as to their stand on peacetime military training and universal disarmament. A previous issue listed how all the senators and representatives had voted on certain measures of great importance to the Christian. Not only is this newsletter valuable for making decisions in election time, but it is a valuable source of information for the Christian citizen at all times. This newsletter seeks to analyze congressional legislation from a Christian viewpoint and therefore is unique and valuable. The cost is two dollars a year.

Towards Understanding:

(If Christians who feel that war must sometimes be resorted to and Christians who feel that all war is wrong are to come to a better understanding of each other, then they must come to the point where they can state each other's position in an acceptable manner. Perhaps, non-resistant Christians have sometimes lacked in influence because they have not had a clear enough insight into the position of him who hates war but regards it necessary. It seems that it would be well if the non-resistant Christian could state the position of the militaristic Christian as well as the latter himself could state it and vice versa. With these thoughts in mind we have solicited the following statements. Two of them are analyses of the position of the militaristic Christian, and two of the statements state the position of the non-resistant Christian. May this treatment be but a small part of a growing understanding.—Editor)

From the Militarist's Point-of-View

by Albert M. Gaeddert

With men in the national Selective Service office, as well as others in governmental positions one has had occasion to talk frankly regarding the reason for our position as conscientious objectors. From their point of view war is something nobody wants, and they themselves see the evil in it, but how else will we preserve our country, our freedom, our demorcracy? Frequently they would add: "We are fighting in order that freedom of conscience will be preserved, and that the liberties you now enjoy will be protected." And then would frequently come that stock question: "What would you do if the Nazis or the Japs would overrun this country? What would you do if they were to come into your home, rape your mother and sisters, kill your father? Would you stand idly by? Would you refuse to fight then too?"

Obviously, more then a yes or no answer is required. One thing one cannot overlook is the matter of principle or principles upon which one bases his decisions and his conduct. The approach of the militarist is from the point of view of what is necessary and what is the expedient thing to do. This point of view often does not take into consideration the question of right and wrong, neither does it look deeply into the causes of war nor the resultant consequences. It is based upon the immediate situation, and it concerns itself with how we can get out of it, how we can preserve our liberty, and how we can protect our freedom. Indeed, how else can we preserve our freedom, our liberty, our country?

How else, unless we operate on quite another principle. What if we would act in national and international affairs, as well as in personal matters solely on the basis of trust and confidence in the principle of righteousness! To build upon this principle would call us all to repentance first of all; then it would stimulate us to doing good rather than to resisting evil. If in the immediate situation we were to act on the basis of a simple righteousness and spend all our efforts in feeding starving people, clothing the naked, rebuilding homes, churches, villages, cities and country sites—and spending an equal amount of energy to build and rebuild the moral and spiritual life of the people who have been ravaged by the war—then we would not be the object of mistrust and suspicion as we are now. Following World War I the leader of our country was looked to as the saviour of the unfortunates; today the picture is quite different. Today we wield the big stick, and we promise not so much to be a savior as a potential threat.

The question becomes one of where we want to place our trust. If we put our trust in our own strength and the power of our armies rather than in the fact that this universe operates on the basis of moral and spiritual rightness, then we better arm to the teeth and let no force or combination of forces exceed our strength. However, regarding this most vital choice no one needs to grope in darkness neither individuals, nor nations, nor rulers or principalities—God's Word is a clear and concise guide at this point.

Why, as a Non-resistant Christian, I Can Not Take Part in War

by Albert M. Gaeddert

I am a follower of Jesus Christ. I believe in Him and in His way. One says this in all humility, knowing how weak one is, and how often one fails to witness for Him. He, however, is able to turn our weakness into strength, and in Him I am staking all that I am.

His teachings are clear regarding two things: (1) Where to put one's trust; (2) What one's conduct ought to be. "Believe in God," "Believe in me," "Follow thou me," and other like expressions are personal calls to me. "Seek ye first the kingdom and His righteousness" is a call that one ought to repeat every morning in these days where so many things seek our loyality. There is one loyalty higher than all other loyalties, and that is the loyalty to God; this becomes the guiding principle for life, and when that happens then one of the greatest decisions in life has been made.

I love my country; I strongly desire the highest and best for it; I consider it a great privilege to be its citizen. There is, however, still a higher loyalty and a higher citizenship, namely, loyalty to the kingdom of God, where lies one's abiding and eternal citizenship. When loyalty to God and to His Kingdom conflict with the loyalty to my own country then I need to be faithful, by the grace of God, to His Kingdom. Always I will continue to pray for my country that it may see and do the will of God.

Regarding participation in war the New Testament is clear. "Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good" is the principle of non-resistance positively stated. "Love your enemies" is a command from our Lord; can one kill an enemy in love? I see no basis for it in the New Testament. "He (Jesus) when He was reviled, reviled not again; when He suffered, threatened not; but committed Himself to Him that judgeth righteously." These and many other passages that one could quote state clearly the way for His followers. The whole tenor of the spirit of Jesus was free from retaliation, free from anger, from hate and from murder. To the contrary, we are exhorted to exercise love, to deeds of mercy, to minister to the sick and afflicted, and to the reclaiming of lost souls for the Kingdom.

What one would do in case of an attack upon the family is not quite the same question as participation in war. One needs humbly to confess that one is very human and subject to reactions that are so much a part of us all. In such personal assaults restraints might be employed, in which one would try to protect one's family withouth injury or destruction to the one assaulting. In this respect the comparison of a personal assault to an attack upon a country breaks down completely, especially with our modern, merchanized and atomized warfare.

The approach of the militarist and that of the nonresistant Christian are from two entirely different points of view. The militarist approach is based upon what is expedient and does not consider first and primary the question of right and wrong. The approach of the nonresistant Christian is this; is it right according to the highest standards we know, namely the standard of Jesus Christ? That is his first and highest loyalty to which he must be true, and when he is called to action that conflicts with this highest loyalty, he will have to say "no" and be ready to take whatever consequences follow.

The Position of the Militaristic Christian

by Carl M. Lehman

By "militaristic" Christian we mean militaristic only in sense that some Christians justify taking part in war on the grounds that is does not conflict with their understanding of Christianity. Obviously their understanding of Christianity is not the same as that of the non-resistant Christian.

The position of the average militaristic Christian can be assumed to be based on very simple logic. Since the Third Century A.D. the overwhelming majority of Christians have been militaristic, and it would be presumptious to say that there have not been many devout and sincere among them. For the average Christian this is justification enough to take part in war. It hardly occurs to him to even so much as question the matter.

For those whose conscience may be disturbed, or who have found it necessary to justify their position because of friends who take another position, such simple reasoning may not go far enough. They find further support in one of two ways, either in more logic or in scriptural interpretation. The logic usually centers around the "we must defend ourselves and the good" concept. This is taken as an axiom and supported by the fact that it is an inborn trait for man to protect not only himself but that also which he holds dear. Assuming the validity of this it follows logically that what is right for the individual is just as much or more right for the group, and imperative for the nation. A man would not let a stranger attack his wife. A nation cannot stand idly by while a Hitler attacks. A nation is made up of individuals, therefore the individuals must fight. Those who do not fight are either slackers or unrealistic.

A good many militaristic Christians do not stop with reasoned assumptions, but turn to the Bible for further substantiation of their position. The Old Testament with its record of Hebrew warfare condoned and commanded by God is especially adapted to such usage. The close fellowship with God which such Hebrew warriors as David enjoyed is evidence to the point. Such specific endorsement in fact is nowhere matched by an equally specific counter-endorsement of nonresistance in the New Testament, hence assuming an unchanging God the New Testament's seeming endorsement of non-resistance must be interpreted in the light of what is so clear in the Old Testament. Further substantiation is found in the New Testament itself in such incidents as the cleansing of the temple, the conversion of Cornelius, a soldier, and in Pauline epistles which commend subjection to the "higher powers." Finally the Revelation of John speaks of final warfare with Christ Himself as Captain of the Mighty Hosts of God. Thus the militaristic Christian establishes his postion.

Why I Am a Non-resistant Christian

by Carl M. Lehman

I am a non-resistant Christian first of all because I believe that the Biblical non-resistant way of life is the most dynamic, influential and effective way of living. Christian non-resistance is not a passive, indifferent, unrealistic approach to life any more than Jesus' death on the cross was passive, unrealistic or indifferent. It might seem like passive submission, as the crucifixion seemed like passive submission, but actually with the cross it has the potential power to revolutionize the world.

I am a non-resistant Christian because it seems to me that non-resistance is a very part of being a follower of Christ. God so loved sinful man that He gave His Son for our atonement, and as we are born again into a new life in Christ it must be a life that conforms with the way Jesus taught men to live. If it does not it is not a new life at all. Jesus taught men to live with one all-inclusive guiding principle—to love God with all the heart, soul, mind and strength, and to love our neighbor as ourselves. If in this new life in Christ every bit of our relationship with our fellow man is not based on the principle that we love him as we love ourselves, we are not living up to the standards of the new life. We can not hate or kill a man we love as ourselves. Once we fully grasp all of this we come to realize that to live the Christian life as He lived and taught it we must live a non-resistant life.

The fact that since the Third Century A.D. most Christians have been militaristic proves nothing. There is considerable evidence to show that before that time most Christians refused to take part in war, and that the change came only after the church otherwise became corrupted. Majority opinion has never proved anything right, and when majority opinion is that of a corrupted church it is especially subject to question.

God never commanded us to defend ourselves from attack. If He had Jesus Himself would have been one of the worst offenders, for He allowed Himself to be put to death on the cross. Rather we must love as He loved, for in that love put into action there is overcoming power greater and mightier than any sword. A truly non-resistant Christian is not a slacker at all, but the first line of strength and moral integrity of any nation.

God condoned and commanded war in the Old Testament. He condones and commands warfare for a great many Christians today for the same reason—they have not adopted the standard of the born again life, they are not governed by the law of love. It is not a question of sincerity but a question of living as He lived and taught. There are many militaristic Christians more sincere and devout than some non-resistant Christians, but I verily believe that the potentialities and possibilities of a truly non-resistant Christian life are far greater than those of a militaristic Christian. That is why I am a non-resistant Christian.

How Is the Mennonite Church Contributing to World Order?

by J. D. Unruh

The editor of our local paper in Freeman insists that anything written these days for popular consumption must be concise. I shall endeavor to follow his counsel.

In spite of chaotic conditions in many sections of the world one must assume, as the title suggests, that there is such a thing as world order. The surface of the sea on occasion is rough, but underneath is calmness and stability. So too in society there are certain underlying basic elements which make for dependability and order. When on occasion ninnies foment the surface waters the great majority of the people, guided by qualities of good will, neighborliness, courage, patience, tolerance, faith, and charity, serve as a stabilizing factor. The deep underlying calmness permits the world to move on. When one criminal runs amuck that is not the signal for every man to turn on his neighbor with murderous intent. When one country declares war on another country that is not the signal for everybody to begin shooting everybody else indiscriminately.

The point I want to make then is that the Mennonite Church is contributing very definitely to world order because it fosters in its own membership the qualities of character, above mentioned, which form the basic elements toward stability in society. Remove the influence of the Christian Church from society and these qualities soon vanish and society disintegrates. This contribution may not always seem very significiant but it is fundamental. Each church body, no matter how small, if it is a part of the Body of Christ, therefore makes its contribution to world order.

Aside from this community emphasis with its concomitant stabilizing influence the mission and relief program of the church are of real significance. In either instance, the ultimate effect is to bring a new hope engendered by the foundation of all hope, Jesus Christ, to people in distress and in darkness. Nor can one lightly pass by the CPS relationship to world order. In all of these, insignificant as they may seem in view of the immensity of the task and the smallness of our group, the necessity is for a light to keep shining around which clusters the hope, which will not down, that there must be in God's divine plan a way to prevent the surface waters from being ruffled periodically. The mere bearing of the light is in itself a contribution to world order.

IN MEMORIAM

Mrs. Mary S. Ruth, daughter of Michael and Anna Pletscher, was born on a farm near Trenton, Illinois, on September 3, 1870. She passed away very suddenly on October 17 when struck with a heart attack. On October 28, 1884, she was baptized and received into the First Mennonite Church of Summerfield, of which she remained a faithful member to the end. In 1891 she was united in marriage to Jacob H. Ruth, with whom she shared life until he passed away in 1914. She leaves to mourn her departure five sons: Walter S. and Henry J. of Mascoutah township; Albert J. and Clarence W. of St. Louis, Missouri; and David M. of the home.

Mrs. Anna B. Ruth, wife of Gustav W. Ruth, was born near Troy, Illinois, on December 16, 1883. She was the daughter of the late John and Katherine Hirstein. Several weeks ago her health failed. After undergoing a serious major operation she passed away on October 20. On September 26, 1897, she was baptized and received into the First Mennonite Church, Summerfield, in which she always took a deep interest. In 1907 she was united in marriage with Gustav W. Ruth. Together they farmed until 1942 when they moved to Summerfield. She is mourned by her bereaved husband; two sons, LeRoy of Summerfield and Ralph of Tulsa, Oklahoma; and one daughter, Mrs. Lucille Fielder of Freeburg, Illinois.

By Cornelius Krahn

Meeting Relatives in Danzig. Arthur Penner, Whitewater, Kansas, returned recently from a trip to Europe on which he accompanied a ship load of horses to Danzig. Although thousands have made similar trips this one was unique. In the brief time alloted to them Arthur Penner and some of his friends managed to rent a car in Danzig and drive to his home village, Tiege, where he located two of his sisters. When the Russians had invaded that region his sisters fled westward but being overtaken they returned to their home village. They are now working for Polish farmers in their home community, receiving meals, lodging and five 'zlotys' per day. (Free labor in the harbor is paid for at twenty zlotys per hour.) Their home farm was burned down. Arthur Penner did not meet any other Mennonites in that vicinity. The German people, in general, had either fled or been sent away by Russians or Poles. Argriculture was on a very low level. Much land was not being tilled. The Penner brothers of Whitewater have been able to help their sisters by sending them food and clothing.

Reformation Day. Protestant churches, including the Mennonite, trace their origin back to the time of the Reformation more than four hundred years ago. For this reason some churches set aside one Sunday for the commemoration of this event, usually the last Sunday in October. We may ask why choose a specific Sunday. It was on October 31, 1517, that a monk in central Germany nailed ninety-five statements on the door of a church. These statements contained dynamite that blasted the walls of the Catholic church that had withstood the storms and floods of many centuries. This changed, not only the religious life, but all phases of life up to the present day. Who was that monk and what was the dynamite he used?

The Hero of Faith. The monk was Martin Luther. He had tried all prescribed ways and means offered by the Catholic church to find salvation. But suffering under the burden of sin, he still saw in God the strict, revengeful, coming judge before whom he trembled. In the Bible, the "book with seven seals" in his day, he finally discovered that God is love who revealed himself through his Son, Jesus Christ, and that faith alone could remove the burden of sin. These words may seem to us so tried and true that we wonder how they could have contained the dynamite that blasted the church of that day. Attendance at a Catholic service would give us a glimpse of the significance and an appreciation of Luther's experience even in our day. He based Christianity once more on its true foundation, Jesus Christ, as revealed in the Bible, which became the sole authority for a follower of Christ. Before and after Luther many a person has had a similar experience, but few, if any, were as far-reaching. Luther was not without mistakes. Some people today delight in magnifying them. But let them remember only little people make little mistakes. A great man of great faith, great courage, and great decisions is usually not a perfect saint. Luther was such a man. If we look for mistakes we will find them. If we look of an example of faith, courage and great decisions for the cause of the kingdom of God we will find them overwhelmingly predominant. Luther was, is, and will remain the hero.

Rev. F. J. Isaac, an Appreciation

by S. T. Moyer

When the news of the home-going of Brother Ferdinand J. Isaac came to me, it came as a grievous shock. For it was only a matter of weeks that I had left him in committee meetings in Champa C. P. India, during July, remembering him with all his presuasive guidance in such committee work.

The Cause has lost a Christian gentleman of high degree. Mission work in India has lost heavily in an area of work that is hard to duplicate. The Church in India has lost a most sympathetic and helpful brother. None of us can measure the loss that his home-loving wife, Sister Anna P. Isaac sustains,—for none of us can put ourselves in her place, as she herself is.

He was not a great organizer—but he did excellent organizational work. In conference and committees he made most acceptable contributions. He possessed piercing gentle insight into vital issues, and stayed by them. He was not easily shaken in his own position, although he readily yielded to majority opinions. He served for years on the Executive Committee of the Mission. He served as Mission Secretary-Treasurer. He served as Mission Conference Chairman, repeatedly, and held this office at the time of his passing from us. As such, he handled the items of agenda in a way that commanded the approval of nearly all, though all did not see eye to eye.

When the news first came over the wires, I felt stabbed. I felt as though I had lost a true friend. I am sure that hundreds of others of his own race, and thousands in India felt likewise—that they too have lost a very true friend. He had a gracious gentleness that gave no offence.

I remember one occasion when an Indian co-worker, headmaster of a mission primary school was judged guilty by the community of grave trespasses and sins, and dismissal was inevitable. Brother Isaac went to him, laid all the facts before the guilty one, who did not admit any guilt. He told him things were so and so, and finally said, "Under the circumstances you can readily see that it is difficult for us to work together. If I leave and you stay, every one will declare that the name of Christ has been besmirched, and upholders of His Cause have proven unfaithful of their stewardship in these holy services. If you leave, and I stay, though no definite proof can be produced, and you admit nothing, then our Saviour whom we both profess to love will be honoured in the sight of all. Under such circumstances, do you not think that you should resign? Certainly we both cannot continue in service." The man resigned, left with the best of feelings for Brother Isaac, found work elsewhere, but today is jobless, because sin possessed his life.

Brother Isaac's outstanding contributions to the work as a missionary included evangelistic work and building work, He built the doctor's bungalow at Jagdeeshpur; the Champa Medical Station with two bungalows, the hospital plant, Indian Nurses Home; in later years a number of the buildings in the Bethesda Leper Home, including a memorial home for tainted girls, a compound for untainted children. At the time of his death he was in charge of the Mauhadi Mission Station, on which the greatest immediate need was nurturing hundreds of recently bapitized babes in Christ with all the taxing demands that this entails. He also did evangelistic work on Janjgir and Champa mission stations. His advice and services were greatly sought after as consulting engineer on building projects in other missions, including a large tubercular sanatorium under Mission auspices at Pendra Road and Leper Home at Allahabad, where he served with Mrs. Isaac for a year.

The Church in India has had few more staunch friends. He stood by it, following his own way of looking at issues, unperturbed by what others did or thought.

He was no great letter writer, but what he wrote was pithy and to the point. Our mission Conference will miss him very very much. Conferences are a time of great fellowship, with God the Father, the Son, and in the Holy Spirit, and with each other. Music plays a big part. Brother Ferd. was leader in all our special music, in working out chorus numbers, in male quartet selections. He was usually very quiet, minded his own business; yet he enjoyed a joke, a trick or a good story. I repeat, he had a gracious gentleness that gave no offence.

The Mission Board and Relief Committee did the work a great favor by sending him and Mrs. Isaac to India in the height of the war years when workers were so badly needed. He served as the first Director of Mennonite Relief in India.

During this term he had repeated heart attacks, which soon passed away. On Wednesday, August 28, Brother Orlando Waltner went by jeep in the midst of the Monsoon rainy season through twenty-five miles of mud to bring Brother and Sister Isaac to Champa. Brother Isaac's help was needed with the books of Mission Treasury Brother P. W. Penner, who at the time was quite sick. After they arrived, and started working, the heart attack came on. Brother Penner was very sick, placed in the missionary nurses' home, with Mrs. Penner at his bedside. Brother Isaac was in Dr. Bauman's home, with Mrs. Isaac at her husband's bedside. Sister Eva Pauls was nurse in charge of both. Both Dr. Harvey and Ella Bauman were in attendance. Both Brothers Penner and Isaac got better, but Brother Isaac, seemingly, only temporarily so. Last Saturday, October 12, was set for the marriage of Sister Alida Schrag to Rev. Abe Cummings. The guests were to arrive by train Saturday at 9:30 a. m. The ceremony was to occur in the large Bethesda Leper Home church, so all could attend. Following the ceremony a wedding supper was to be served. Miss Schrag considered Rev. Isaac as sort of a spiritual father, and had asked him to perform the ceremony. They had come out to India together via Air to South America, then via South Africa by boat to India. As far as I can reckon, the going-home of Brother Isaac almost coincided with the arrival of the wedding guests, and quite preceded the time fixed for the wedding by only a few hours. We all can imagine the great tension and grief and gloom which must have come over that mission family, and that Christian brotherhood, thousands of brothers and sisters in Christ, with their young people and children, when one of their number was so suddenly called away, on such an occasion.

Our loss is Brother Isaac's gain, and he has passed into the presence of the King, awaiting the great Marriage Supper of the Lamb.

College and Seminary News

BETHEL COLLEGE

The Student Volunteers sponsored a mission rally Sunday evening, October 27, in Memorial Hall, which was well attended. After devotionals, conducted by Henry Epp, Hermie Preheim, president, introduced the missionaries in the audience and also five of the SV missionary candidates — Helen Kornelson, Robert Unruh, Glenn Habegger, Ernest Boehr, and Herbert Dalke — who gave short testimonials. As the main address, Dr. C. F. Pannabecker, Dean of the Mennonite Biblical Seminary, brought a fine message on "The Christian in Two Worlds." SV students furnished special music and arranged a missionary exhibit. A special offering for missions was taken. Mrs. Eva Harshbarger, who attended a meeting of the Kansas Deans of Women on October 18-19 in Topeka, was elected president for the coming year. In the state organization of academic Deans, Dr. P. S. Goertz has been president for the past year and will preside at a meeting of the Deans Association in Lindsborg on November 9.

FREEMAN JUNIOR COLLEGE

Our chapel schedule this year is about the same as it was last year. Outside speakers or faculty members have charge of chapel services on Mondays and Wednesdays. Tuesdays students are divided into two groups and the YW and YMCA are in charge of these meetings. Sometimes the groups join for special programs. Thursday's activities are directed by the Music Department. Here students with musical talents are given the opportunity to develop them further and to share them with the rest of the students. Friday is known as "Student Chapel." Students have charge of a devotional service after which announcements are made and time is given for business meetings, or any other group meetings that are necessary. As far as possible the announcements are kept at a minimum on other days and all after-chapel meetings are scheduled for Fridays.

BLUFFTON COLLEGE

Faculty prayer meetings are held each Monday morning at eight o'clock. We request that you, as one interested in Christian education, remember the college in your prayers. Directing the lives and study of young people is a heavy responsibility, and cannot be done as it should without God's guidance. In addition to the prayer services, one evening meeting each week is set aside for the discussion of religious problems on the campus. Plans are maturing for the Homecoming activities during the week end of November 9. Indications are that a large group of alumni, friends, and parents of students will attend. The second number on the College Music Series will be given on the evening of November 5. The Guardsmen Quartet will be here for that occasion.

THE MENNONITE BIBLICAL SEMINARY AND BIBLE SCHOOL

October 16 was a great day for our institution. In the morning the Seminary Board met, in the afternoon the dedicatory services for our new headquarters were held, and in the evening a special inspirational program was given.

Inspiring and challenging addresses were given by Rev. P. E. Whitmer, dean of the former Witmarsum Theological Seminary; Rev. J. N. Smucker, Secretary of the Board; and Dr. Rufus Bowman, President of Bethany Biblical Seminary. Dr. J. H. Langenwalter, first dean of the Mennonite Seminary, sent in his address which was read by Dr. Ed. G. Kaufman, Bethel College. Rev. H. T. Unruh spoke as representative of the Alumni; Dr. George Schultz, senior Mennonite pastor in Chicago, stressed the importance and the challenge of the school, and Dr. John C. Wenger, Professor of Goshen Biblical Seminary, spoke encouraging words as representative of our sister institution.

Several numbers of the Seminary Quartet and some solos by Rev. Marvin Dirks and Burt Russell contributed greatly to the program.

Most important to the audience, however, was the deep conviction and the feeling that the Lord was near. This is the Lord's house, and our sincere prayer is that His unseen presence will be felt by all who go in and out of this home.

Letters from Europe

(These letters, in response to shipments of relief goods from America, give us a more intimate insight in the meaning of giving aid to those whose circumstances have been less fortunate than ours. Ed.)

The wonderful flour sent to Europe has been a welcome visitor in this ancient and war weary city on the coast of France. (Calais) There's not much left of the town. All around the harbor, the homes, industries, and great sheds have been reduced to rubble . . .

"Two of us called on the mayor to see what would be the best method for use of flour here in Calais, with its 50,000 citizens. We learned that one of the most neglected of all the groups are the old people over 70. There are some 2500 of them, so it was decided to give one kilo to each old person over 70.

"Here is one small note which has come to us: —'It is with very great pleasure that I received your gift. I am 73 years old, and am one of those whose home was completely destroyed, and am without any resources. This kindness to us old people has deeply touched me. I thank you and ask you to believe in my gratitude . . . .

"The largest part of the flour went to the Protestant churches, French Reformed, Pentecost, and Salvation Army. Its arrival was a real event. Its distribution was announced one Sunday; one half sack to each member or married couple, one sack for families of two or three children, and a sack and a half for the large families. Our parish council decided that it would be fine to present this as an opportunity for various members of the parish to make a voluntary offering towards the help of members of churches in the missioin fields, so that each person receiving the flour would in turn pass along the sharing in this flour form to fellow Christians. The response was splendid.

"There was enough flour left to prepare some delicious biscuits for the farewell party for the pastor, Monsieur DuBois. It is difficult to imagine for any of us from the States, but when one has a social event, it is out of the question to have cookies or cakes or sandwiches, for each person receives a very small ration of bread each day, and crackers are to be bought only with bread tickets. Hence it was a special treat to have biscuits, and each member of the parish was allowed two! Monsieur DuBois is a young and devoted pastor. He has had three Parishes all during the war years, Dunkirk, Saint Omer, and here at Calais . . . I am happy to have a chance of sharing with you how much your contribution has meant to everyone here.

"Sincerely,
(signed) Helen Morton

"And the flour sacks are very useful indeed. Some fifteen women have already taken them to transform them into children's dresses, aprons, bags, collars, and dish towels, and they are all delighted to have them. It is impossible to buy reasonable goods by the yard in any store in the city!"

"Today our father brought home a package, sent to us by you.

"We are four, Pim, aged 12; Han, 9; Herman, 5; and Roland, 2½ years old. Each of us got some presents. It's very kind of you that you gave this to us. You don't know us and we don't know you.

"Our father has told us that you and we are children of One Father, namely our Father which is in heaven, and that we all together belong to the great family of God's children.

"We think that the teachers of your Sunday school have told you the same. You have understood this and you have been willing to help us. Many thanks for that.

"We promise, to help other children also when this might be necessary."

"Eight thousand church Christmas packages arrived the other day and over five hundred cases of powdered milk. I sat with the Central Committee as they planned their distribution. A package was opened to give an idea of the contents—their eyes filled with tears, and they couldn't speak their appreciation for a moment. These gifts for the children meant so much. A cake of soap was passed around and each smelled it as though it were rare perfume—no soap in Rome in three years. And milk is rationed to children under 8 (raised from 3 only this week) and to invalids over 65 at the rate of one hundred grams daily. So you see what the powdered milk means."

"The situation in Germany must be terrible. It is not a question who has made the war in Europe, but how to help the children of our Lord, bad or not bad."

"We got clothing for our children and fortunately some swaddling clothes for the baby. Therewith you take off a large care from our shoulders, for we can buy nearly nothing."

"It is with great gratitude that the Inter Church Office of the Hague once more informs you of the arrival of about 184 cases and bags, containing clothes, shoes, etc., articles still so much needed.

"When war victims, wearing clothes all lent to them by more fortunate people, receive clothes which they can call their own again, their self-confidence seems to be restored. They are grateful that in another country there still are so many men and women wanting to help other people who lost often everything, family and possessions.

"We wish to thank you and your countrymen most warmly for all the help given to our people."

I received for me and my family some of the clothes, which you sent to Netherland, and which our church government has distributed. By this letter we say to you and your people heartiest thanks, and we pray that the Lord will bless your people, your country, and your church."

(Reporting on a special gift of money through CWS)

"It came as from Heaven: I had a very needy pastor, whom I could not easily help from other funds, a brave man who disguised as a farm worker (not to be captured by the Nazis) did a splendid work for youth during the occupation, but now because of circumstances (wife sick) was bad off. He got the sum today. God will have to listen to many thanksgiving prayers from this husband, this wife, and children in days coming.

"You will share my happiness."

"I received your package at the children's camp and the joy of my five orphans cannot be described (four girls and a boy). They have none in this world to protect them, except God. That is why I was so happy to receive your gifts.

"We wish with all our heart that God may give you health and power to help the orphans and the weak."

"My house was bombed out in 1943, and after that I could not buy anything. I got a baby in the end of this summer, and as I couldn't buy any clothes for the baby I went to my church to ask some help. They were so glad to tell me that your people sent us so many nice baby clothes. And you can understand I am overjoyed now and thank you from the bottom of my heart. It is a pity I can do nothing for you, only say Thank You. But if it is possible I can do something for you, please let me know. It is not only the clothes I am so glad, but also the friendship you give us. I shall never forget it and hope so it will be forever. I have to close with my wish—God bless you all."

Near Chicago, 150 Japanese American young people gathered for a Nisei Christian Youth Conference. All these young people had been through the Relocation Center experience together and desired to come together again after being freed. The next largest group is the very young children which would indicate that the children of the young adults also are not getting religious instruction.

A diet which cost seventy-four cents was sufficient for Dr. George Swann pastor of Edenside Christian church in Louisville, Kentucky to gain one and one half pounds. The purope of the low-cost seventy-four cents a week diet was to show how money could be saved to be donated to famine relief. Dr. Swann's diet consisted of a menu such as the following:

Breakfast: three ounces of soybean meal and wheat flour cakes, peanut butter in Karo syrup. Total cost, one and one-half cents.

Lunch: One-half pint buttermilk, fried potatoes. Cost, four cents.

Supper: Pea soup, fried potatoes, bread, syrup, peanut butter. Cost, nine and one-half cents.

The menu was varied a bit, but the most costly day was fifteen cents.

What the Retreat Grounds Should Be

by a Retreater

The purpose of a retreat is to get away from the commotion of everyday living and draw closer to God. This can only be done if the group is somewhere where disturbances such as a nearby city, visitors coming and going, radios, cars, etc., are at a minimum. To get away from such disturbances a retreat ground should be located in a rather isolated spot but also where all those desiring to use the grounds will have access to it. In our day transportation is becoming less and less of a problem. Distances are shrinking. As we consider a site for retreat grounds, we should remember that it is not at all improbable that future retreaters will be flying or at least going by train to the retreats. Thus we should not let the factor of distance hamper us in our choice too much.

The grounds should be located in a place where the climate permits a long enough season for the grounds to pay for themselves and not be a losing proposition. The climate should also be stimulating for physical as well as mental labor. The site should definitely be large enough to supply the retreats with milk, meat, vegetables in summer, and plenty of land for recreation. Horses add a lot to the recreation program. A lake or excellent possiblities for one is very necessary for a satisfactory retreat program. Naturally a good supply of good drinking water is vital.

The grounds should be available to all conference groups young or old. If the young people themselves own the grounds, why shouldn't they rent them to ministers or other conference groups? To be a paying proposition the grounds must have enough business to run the whole season.

It takes years to build a good retreat grounds, but a few main buildings and recreational facilities are necessary to start. A chapel, kitchen, dining hall are almost indispensable. Cabins or indoor sleeping quarters of some kind must be had if the retreats are to be held more than a day or so. Sanitary facilities such as a bath and toilet house and running water are vital.

Naturally it is not necessary for a grounds of this sort to have the latest in modern conviences, for one gets the feel of God's greatness and nearness easier when living close to nature.

RELIEF

China Notes

Brother Clayton Beyler of the China Unit writes: "We have passed the crisis it seems and everybody is back at work again. We were cut off from the outside world for almost a month but today papers and letters have come through from Shanghai so we think communication lines have been established again. Our relief program will go ahead about as planned though slowed down considerably. Medical work is a very needy field and one in which we plan to make on of our biggest contributions."

There are now twenty-seven workers in China, and of that number ten are medical workers, either nurses or technicians. The unit is planning to open a medical clinic at Chu-hsien-chen and is negotiating for the rehabilitation of a small hospital. Dr. Paul Hu, a Chinese doctor, has assisted in the M. C. C. rehabilitation project, and it is hoped that a Mennonite doctor from America will be available to head up the China medical project in the near future.

Material Aid

From reliable sources we have received the names of sixty Jewish-Christian families living in Hungary. These families are known to be in great need. Anyone desiring to send an eleven-pound gift parcel by mail to one of these families should write to the Material Aid Section, Mennonite Central Committee, Akron, Pennsylvania. Along with the name and address of one of these families you will receive a copy of postal regulations covering the mailing of these parcels and suggested list of items to be sent.

He also represented the Grace Bible Institute. The brethren Mouttet and Shilder gave words of exhortation at the ministers' prayer meeting held at the home of Rev. David Hooge at Munich. WESTERN DISTRICT CONFERENCE

Convened October 23, 24

The Fifty-fifth annual session of the Western District Conference convened in the Municipal Auditorium, Beatrice, Nebraska, October 23 and 24. Fifty-six of the sixty-two churches in the Conference were represented, with a total of 282 delegates. The two Mennonite churches at Beatrice were hosts to the many delegates and visitors. Arrangements had been made with a local restaurateur to serve meals in the commodious auditorium and the entertainment of delegates and visitors went off very smoothly.

Chairman of the conference was Rev. David C. Wedel of North Newton, Kansas. Inspiring addresses were given by Dr. E. G. Kaufman and Dr. R. C. Kauffman. The former spoke on "The Mennonite Church in Europe" and "Education and War," and the latter spoke on "Relief As an Aspect of Missionary Work." Rev. William Stauffer represented the Mutual Aid Board in an address and S. F. Pannabecker the Mennonite Biblical Seminary in a short message.

The main addresses at the evening meeting, sponsored by the Women's Missionary Society, were given by Miss Elsa Grantland and Mrs. J. R. Duerksen. At the business meeting in the afternoon Mrs. A. M. Lohrentz reported on her visit to Canada and Mrs. Sam Goering on European Relief.

Rev. and Mrs. Dan Schirmer and children of Hotevilla, Arizona, also attended the conference sessions. Because of car trouble Rev. and Mrs Aron Jantzen of California arrived just as the conference closed.

The Power of Love

"Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid which is Christ Jesus"

From the editor's point - of - view:

HATE is a terrible power in human beings, a power which manifests itself in various ways but is seldom recognized for what it is. Very probably there are a great many people who hate when they think they don't. Our standards are pretty much against hating. Some allowance is made for it in time of war, but even then some Christian teaching says, you can kill the enemy but you must do it without hate. Most of the teaching that people are subjected to today emphasizes that it is "bad" to hate. And it is. But the trouble is that people hate without recognizing that they do so. People like to live up to their ideals. Having the ideal not to hate, it is hard to recognize the hatred within. And so hate works unrecognized, producing feelings of guilt, shame, confusion, conflict, depression, irritability, etc. The reason that it is so important that hate be more clearly recognized is that such recognition is the first and most important step in becoming free from it and therefore ready to replace it with love. Hate is the opposite of love. Love cannot come in until hate leaves. To experience the power of love, it is necessary that the power of hate be broken.

SURPRISE at the unfamiliar comes much more readily than surprise at the familiar, but the latter can be very helpful. We tend to consider the familiar as the natural and right order of things. The unfamiliar we question, and we should. But perhaps we should not leave undone the questioning of the familiar, for any change for the better depends upon it. When once we feel the inadequacy of the things as they are, then we are ready for the blessings of the unknown. Abraham must have been surprised at things as they were when others were not. A healthy surprise at the familiar in one and in one's surroundings seems to be a necessary prelude to new and greater blessings.

HALLOWEEN, with its pranks against property and persons—perhaps persons most of all—seems to be an American institution. Perhaps there is a reason for its continued existence. It seems to constitute an outlet for some of the aggressiveness which is usually held under control. Adults may not like some of the effects, but some of the same adults chuckle as they recount what they did when they were young. Halloween provides a unique insight into the feelings of growing boys and girls who usually must control themselves. Perhaps, the feelings expressed in Halloween pranks could be expressed in more sociably acceptable forms, but the fact that these feelings do exist is rather suggestive in regard to the nature of a developing human being. At this point Halloween raises an important religious question.

MASS PURCHASING POWER may turn out to be an economic matter of vital concern to the Christian Church if we hold that the Christian Church has a responsibility towards a man who is unemployed and lacking in food, clothing, shelter, and medical care. In such a case the task of the Church is seen to be preventive as well as curative. From this point-of-view it is important to note what Stuart Chase, an economist, has recently said in "For This We Fought." As a foundation for his recommendations as to the kind of economic system America should have, he says: "Most people are now pretty well committed—at least in public—to the idea that the masses must buy a lot of goods if factories are to keep going, and business is to prosper. How can this be done most effectively? Discussion often brings out the 'trickle-down' idea of progress, versus the mass purchasing power idea. Shall we encourage the rich . . . or shall we put purchasing power directly into the hands of the people?" Mr. Chase reasons, "If the mass of the people are prosperous everyone is prosperous, including the upper brackets . . . If, however, the upper brackets are surfeited with funds while the lower brackets have none, there will be little demand for investment and plant expansion. Idle money will presently choke the whole economy, ruining rich along with poor." The poor are a cause for Christian concern. What may make them poor is also reason for concern.

FOR THE FRONT PAGE of our paper this week we have taken the cover page of the new book "The Power of Love" which is to come off the press by December 1. We are using this design not primarily for calling attention to the book but rather for the purpose of emphasizing the theme of love. Thus the front page is suggestive of the importance of this week's symposium on "What It Means To Love."

What It Means To Love

a symposium

BEN J. NICKEL, formerly pastor of the Butterfield, Minnesota, church:

The story is told of a young man who returned to his home town after he had been away a number of years. This young man had run away from his home and did not know whether or not his parents were angry with him. He hurriedly wrote a card with this message, "Dear Mother, I'll be going by your house on the train tomorrow, and if you still love me and want me to come home, hang a white sheet on the clothes line." The next day the young man was anxiously looking out of the train window to watch for the white sheet on the clothes line.There it was and with it his mother had placed all the white sheets that she could find in her house. The young man called the conductor and said, "Let me off at the next stop; I'm going home."

This is but an illustration of "What it Means to Love." It is an illustration from human life which pictures to us the love of God for mankind. We, too, have run away, for in Isaiah 53:6, we have these words, "All we like sheep have gone astray, we have turned everyone to his own way and the Lord hath laid on Him the iniquity of us all." Does God love us? "But God commendeth His love toward us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us." Romans 5:8. The Lord Jesus loved those who despised and hated Him.

Then I see another phase of "What it Means to Love," in a story told of a mother, who, when she knew that her child was in a burning building, rushed into the flames and rescued her child. In so doing she burned her face and hands severely. This truly was a sacrificial love. I also see our blessed Lord Jesus who saw us condemned, lost, and bound for eternal destruction in Hell. He not only saw us; He came to lay down His life that we might have Life Eternal. His was a true example of "What it Means to Love" but it is also more than an example. He died for us on the cross "that whosoever believeth on Him should not perish but have everlasting life."

B. BARGEN Manager of the Mennonite Publication Office, Newton, Kansas:

Love is a vital concern for the welfare of another personality. Every word in that definition is necessary. Is" suggests the on-going, never-tiring, current-preent tense. "Vital" refers to a living, throbbing activity. Concern" gives the thrust of objectivity without sugesting self-annihilation. "For" is the link of inter-relatedness between the self and other selves. "Welfare" demands discrimination and choosing of values. "Another" widens the circle to ever-increasing inclusiveness. "Personality" lifts it beyond physical or mere social considerations.

Love and intelligence are twins. Intelligence is the ability to draw increasingly fine distinctions. The intelligent mechanic makes accurate measurements; the poor workman makes rough estimates. The intelligent scientist makes precise distinctions; the intelligent artist has the ability to distinguish shades of color which escape the ordinary person. And the musician can distinguish tones and times with uncanny precision.

Love, its twin, is the WILL to make increasingly fine distinctions. It not only can, it DOES. It sees differences between situations and circumstances, and makes corresponding allowances. Intelligence can; there is no guarantee that it will. The scientist can see what atomic energy might do; there is no guarantee that he will. He may go on giving his intelligence to the ultimate destruction of the very intelligence he uses to perceive it. But Love does see it.

Because love always sees increasingly fine distinctions it perceives that there are no two things alike, and therefore there is no basis for comparison. You don't compare unlike things! Therefore, love does not judge; it can't! It has no basis for comparison. It withholds judgment.

Love takes responsibility; intelligence may and it may not. Because love DOES make distinctions, it never "lumps things all together," as supposedly intelligent minds often do. Therefore love makes no laws—especially not for others. It is far above the law. It is much too much concerned with its own responsibility to be able to take time out to set responsibilities for others.

We say 8=4x2; or can we say 4x2=8. We can say, "God is Love," or say, "Love is God." If we say "Love is God," then we mean that Love is the highest thing there is. Then Love never appeals to anything higher than itself. It is final. It never says, "We'll have to consult the Government," or "We'll have to see the Pope," or "we'll have to ask the Boss." It takes responsibility upon itself and says, "I'll do it this way." It can do that, because it is concerned only with the welfare of another personality, and it is the will to risk consequences.

Love is God; time is nothing to Love. Therefore, Love is patient—can wait indefinitely for results. Is long-suffering. Knows nothing of the past (is forgiving), and the future ("hopeth all things") is not predetermined in blind judgment. Because it makes no judgment, Love is ever so tender—because it doesn't know what is going to happen; and because it has such a keen sense of responsibility; and, therefore, takes great care!

To put this into actual life situations we have something like this: The loving person chooses words which will not hurt a person present nor a person absent. He is concerned about the reputation of that other person. He does not easily criticize motives in other people, because his WILL is set to see the truth, and he knows how hard it is to know the unseen motives of other people. He is creative, because he wants the other person to prosper and progress and improve. He takes other people at their face value; he believes what they say. Since he is concerned primarily for other personalities, he need spend very little energy in rationalizing his own conduct. His conduct is transparent. He has only one motive in life, instead of many: "Behold the Lord thy God is ONE God"! LOVE is God! Because his chief burden in life is the welfare of another personality, he "beareth all things," yea, he beareth them well!

In still more specific situations we have it this way: The loving person in business sees to it that the customer is well served. That the boss is well served. That the goods are made right. In the school the personality of the children, the personality of the parents, the personality of the superintendent—all loom large in the thinking of the teacher. The husband in the home deals tenderly with children. The wife is concerned about the TOTAL welfare of her brood. The politician is concerned about the welfare of people in general, and not his own people in particular. He is tender. He indulges in no "tough talk," because he "hopeth all things," "believeth all things," "endureth all things." Neither does he "curry favor"; he is no respecter of persons—he has nothing to gain for himself, because his primary concern is for others!

That is also why a loving man is a fearless man. He knows that in all the world—in all the universe—there is no higher court to which he can or need appeal. The Conscientious Objector who told the court that he based his opinions on the Kingdom of God was told that that was foolish; that you couldn't do that until the Kingdom had come. He replied, "Sir, but for me the Kingdom HAS come."

The fruits of the Spirit in terms of love are:

"Joy is love exulting.
Peace is love in repose.
Longsuffering is love untiring.
Gentleness is love enduring.
Goodness is love in action.
Faith is love on the battlefield.
Meekness is love under discipline.
Temperance is love in training."

H. N. HARDER, Pastor of the First Mennonite Church, Aberdeen, Idaho:

"Love is strong as death." Song of Solomon 8:6.

Love is the greatest power ever known and revealed by God. He alone could reveal this, because "God is love." "God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life." John 3:16. The love of God, as manifested in Christ Jesus our Lord and Saviour, has fascinated and touched the hearts of the greatest sinners.

It is said that the great prison evangelist, doctor Badeker of Germany, who visited the Russian penitentiaries in the Czarist days, one day was taken to the cell of a hardened criminal. When doctor Badeker was brought face to face with this individual, he spoke these words to him: "God loves you." These three words caused him to listen and to look up. To hear that there was one who loved even the greatest of sinners brought him comfort and hope and led to an acceptance of Christ as his personal Saviour.

This love of God is shed abroad into our hearts and lives by faith. God is the giver of all good and perfect gifts. No mortal can produce this love. Love is the fruit of the Spirit. The Christian who lives and walks as God desires, releases the strongest power the world has ever seen. Love is the distinctive mark of a Christian disciple—a mark by which he is recognized.

A four-year-old boy said to his mother these words when she, upon her second marriage, refused to take him along to her home: "Mother, if you love me, as you said this afternoon you did, then why can't I go along with you?" To love means more than mere words. It means action. In this case it meant giving the boy a home. In another instance it may mean to bring a sacrifice or to witness for Christ. To love means not to seek one's own welfare, and comfort, and vindication, but that which will honor God and His Son or bring the peace of God into the hearts and lives of others. It may mean to forsake all as in the case of John Bunyan in Pilgrim's Progress. To the apostle Peter it was put very definitely by the Lord Himself when He said, "Lovest thou me more than these?"

To love, then, means to sacrifice, to give up or to forsake those things that will prevent Christ from receiving pre-eminence. To love as a follower of Christ means to be faithful even unto death, Faithful in our devotion to Him in the presence of adversity as well as in prosperity. It means unreserved and unconditional discipleship to Him who gave His life and shed His blood for the remission of our sins. "Love so amazing, so divine, demands by life, my soul, my all."

JOHN LOEWEN, Canadian ministerial student at Bethel College:

To love is not only to have a tender feeling, or a weak sentimental emotion. It is not only the expression of sympathy, or pity, a half warm smile, or a courteous hand-shake. Love is a strong and heroic principle, which always constrains one to give, to be obedient, to have compassion, and to cover sins.

God Himself commendeth His love toward us in that He gave His only begotten son into this world, "That whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life." Christ, "laid down His life for us: and we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren." Love means more than giving some of our substance, time, or talents. It means the giving of our very life, our all to Christ for the service of humanity.

To love means obedience. Jesus said, "If a man love me, he will keep my word." King Saul had to learn, to his sorrow, that obedience was better than sacrifice. It is said of Noah that he, "did . . . according to all that God commanded him, so did he." Paul too, rejoiced that he had been obedient to the heavenly vision. Some of the words that Christ commanded us to keep are: "Love your enemies," "Love one another," "Love not the world." Seemingly our modern interpretation is to love our enemies, who are a long way off, but hold a prejudice against our brother. "If a man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar for he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen? And this commandment have we from him, that he who loveth God love his brother also." I wonder if it might imply to love sister Christian institutions also?

To love means to have compassion (Literally, suffering with another and moving forward to relieve the suffering of others, at your own cost). Christ was constantly moved with compassion. "I have compassion on the multitude . . . I will not send them away fasting." He had compassion on the bereaved, the blind, the sick, and the demon-possessed. The father of the sick child, said to Jesus, "If thou cans't do any thing have compassion on us, and help us." Oh, that Christian men and women of today would be moved with compassion toward a helpless world. Then our Bible schools, Christian colleges, and seminaries would be filled with such people that would give their whole life and service to Christ. We would have more doctors, nurses, missionaries and other workers in the mission fields and many more in the home field. Christian teachers, preachers, and Christian workers in every vocation of life would be more plentiful then they are today. Has the love of God so filled your heart that you have a compassion for others?

To love means to cover sins, not to cover up our sins, but not to uncover the sins of others constantly. But remember, "Above all things have fervent charity (Love) among yourselves; for charity shall cover a multitude of sins."

J. H. FRETZ, Pastor of the Deep Run Mennonite Church, Bedminster, Pa.:

Among the most profound utterances of the Scriptures is the simple statement "God is love." (1 John 4:8b) The common Hebrew word for love and its best Greek equivalent view love as an earnest desire for the well-being of, or fellowship with a person or thing. In reality this is the "act" of loving. But scripture tells us that God Almighty in his very being is pure, unbounded love. He is the very source and embodiment of love.

Nevertheless this God of love is intensely active. Scripture informs us that there is one great event in history which most perfectly exhibits the love of God. It is not the creation of the world nor its providential care. It is not God's creation of human loves in society, nor even his enumerable blessings upon all men. Rather this supreme act of love is found in the words of the beloved Apostle, "In this is love ("The Love"-Greek and German) not that we loved God, but that he loved us and sent his Son to be the satisfaction for our sins." (I John 4:10)

When a person accepts the Son as his Redeemer from sin his whole being should be flooded with Divine Love. He cannot help but love the loving Lord. "We love him because he first loved us." (I John 4:19) If we love God with all our heart and soul and mind we will obey his Word. For the Apostle adds, "For this is the love of God, that we keep his commandments." (I John 5:3) Now if we love God we cannot hate our brother, for we read, "If a man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar: for he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen?" (I John 4:20) Or if we keep his commandments we are reminded that "This commandment have we from him, that he who loveth God love his brother also." (I John 4:21)

A seeming contradiction faces us as we see Christian brotherly love revealed in Scripture. On the one hand Christian love is portrayed in its condescending humility. "Love suffereth long . . . beareth all things . . . endureth all things." (I Cor. 13:4, 7) Thus we are called without reserve or selfpity to follow after our Lord. And suffer for his sake because we love him. The world will scorn us for such" foolish weakness." Yet we joyfully read "He that dwelleth in love, dwelleth in God and God in him." (I John 4:16b) What assurance! With Almighty God in us and with us we will overcome the world! No wonder the inspired Apostle tells us that "Perfect love casteth out fear." Christian love cannot be passive and weak. Non-resistant love does not violate the moral justice of the universe nor "suffer defeat for Christ's sake" as some would have us believe. For though final justice belongs to the Lord God, yet even we may today "overcome evil with good." (Rom. 12:21)

Strictly speaking love is the identifying of one's self with the object loved. Thus we are to love the world not by participating in its sin, but by participating in its daily life—teaching, feeding, clothing, helping, all in the name of Christ. Being one in Christ, we are to love dearly the brethren and become so united in soul one with another that the words of the old hymn might be true:

". . . When each can feel his brother's sigh
And with him bear a part,
When sorrow flows from eye to eye,
And joy from heart to heart."

THE POWER OF LOVE

The above words form the title of a new 160-page book that is to come off the press in the near future. The book is edited and compiled by the Peace Committee of the General Conference and is designed especially for use by Sunday School and other study groups. For this purpose it is arranged in four chapters or divisions, with three sections to each division thus making it suitable for use as a substitute for one quarter of Sunday School lessons. However, it will be suitable also for any study group of high school age and older. In fact, retreat committees have asked for the book and others wish to use it in evening classes and mid-week meetings.

The Power of Love

The usefulness and opportuneness of the book will be realized when consideration is given to the chapter headings which are as follows.

I. The Scriptural Basis of Our Faith------------ Walter H. Dyck
II. The Historical Background ---- C. Henry Smith
III. Our Peace Witness during World War II------ J. Winfield Fretz
IV. Living the Peace Testimony in Everyday Life ----------------------Russell Mast

It should be noted that the Peace Committee made a very good choice of editors. All of the four men are held in high esteem throughout our conference and are well qualified to write the part assigned to them.

Another important feature of the book is the appendix which includes a brief bibliography on peace materials from both Mennonite and non-Mennonite sources; also included are reprints of the Statement of Position adopted by the General Conference at Souderton, and of the Bases of Principles agreed upon at a meeting of Brethren, Friends, and Mennonites held prior to the establishment of the alternative service program.

The exact date when the book will be ready for delivery cannot be given at this time. The printers had promised to have it ready by November 10, but due to shortage of labor this date had to be postponed. However, copies should be available in time for winter study classes. The book will be pocket size, and the price around 50c per copy, with reasonable reduction when purchased in quantities of ten or more. The distributing agencies will be the Conference book stores:

By Cornelius Krahn

Preparing for Christmas

Isn't Christmas still too far away to be speaking and writing about it? Not if our gifts are to reach distant lands and joy is to come to the lonely hearts of displaced persons. How can we do this?

A Good Example. Rev. Walter Gering and Miss Elma Esau who are now working among the displaced Prussian Mennonites in Denmark have invited the Eden Church of Moundridge and the Emmaus Church of Whitewater to send Christmas packages of food and clothing to these unfortunate brethren behind barbed-wire. The churches have responded unanimously and are preparing many hundreds of parcel post packages. Both the packing of these boxes in the church basements and their opening in the camps will be most joyful occasions. Are there other churches or individuals that would like to have a share in the this Christmas joy?

Four Hundred Homeless Mennonite Families. Some time ago it was mentioned in this column that Elder Bruno Ewert, formerly Heubuden near Danzig, now Denmark, had sent in a list of more than four hundred families that were once upon a time prosperous citizens of the Danzig area and are now without shelter, food, and clothing scattered in the British and American zones. Brother Ewert suggests the following. In order to help these people and encourage them morally and spiritually an American Mennonite family could "adopt" one of these families for the purpose of corresponding with it and sending an occasional package. This would indeed create Christmas joy and new hope in depressed and lonely hearts. Naturally C.A.R.E. packages would be welcome. For addresses write to Miss Katie Andres, 414 East 4th Street, Newton, Kansas.

From a Ministers' Conference. The writer recently received the following letter from the Weierhof, South Germany, dated October 15, 1946. (Sent through Robert Kreider.) "Today we are meeting here for the Ministers' Conference where your letter of September 14 was read. It brought each of us much joy. Thank you for your brotherly remembrance . . . . You write, Brother Krahn, that by this time we will have received food packages from you, which is not the case. To date no package directly from America has reached us. A few packages have reached us through the Ecumenical Council of Churches, Geneva. We are very happy that the American Mennonites are helping on such a large scale in so many German cities with food and clothing, but we cannot help wondering why our Mennonite families are not being helped. The need is great, especially in the cities. You will be doing 'Gotteswerk' if you will help to remedy this situation. (Signed) E. Haendiges, A. Braun, Gerhard and Lydia Hein, H. C. Schaeffler, Chr. Neff, John Foth, Paul and Trudel Schowalter.

P. S. Perhaps it would be best if the packages would be sent to my address at the Weierhof. I will take care of proper distribution.

Chr. Neff"

(If you would like to send to these and other ministers a package Miss Katie Andres (414 East 4th Street, Newton, Kansas,) will be glad to send you an address).

BLUFFTON COLLEGE

Rev. Andrew Shelly spoke to students expecting to go into full time Christian service, on Monday evening, October 27. He also spoke in chapel on the following morning. He is an alumnus of Bluffton and is pastor of the Sterling Avenue Church, Kitchener, Ontario. I. W. Bauman and Harry Yoder attended a meeting of the MCC in Chicago October 31. Dr. Ramseyer spoke on "Visual Aids in the Church School" at a meeting of Sunday School workers of the Evangelical and Reformed churches, the meeting being held in Wapakoneta, Sunday afternoon, November 3. Homecoming is scheduled for November 9. The features of the day will include a meeting of alumni who are teaching, at 9:00 a.m.; the crowning of the queen at 10:30; the football game at 2:15; homecoming dinner at 6:15; and one act plays after the dinner. Gerald Stahly will speak at the morning education meeting and Clifton H. Sprunger at the dinner. Sunday, November 10, is Parents' Day. Rev. Russel Mast will be the Vesper speaker for that day. A half day will be set aside for "cleanup day" during the week before homecoming, faculty and students participating.

FREEMAN JUNIOR COLLEGE

The past week was enriched by quite a number of welcome campus visitors. Gerhard Friesen of Newton, Kansas, was the chapel speaker on Monday. He told of his experiences in caring for horses being shipped to Europe. Ruth Hege spoke during the Wednesday chapel period. She has served one term as missionary to Africa and since has just finished her second term in South America. Mrs. A. F. Tieszen of Washington D. C. lectured to the students and faculty on her work and experience as a translator at the Nuernberg trials. She is a graduate of the academy and also a former instructor. Tuesday, the last period, Edwin Rawland, an noted autograph collector, discussed "The Value of a Hobby." His talk was the second number in an entertainment series presented to the students. Friday evening the community enjoyed a special treat in the excellent concert given by John Gurney, an outstanding American Bass Baritone.

BETHEL COLLEGE

After a four-year intermission, the eighteenth Homecoming celebration was held November 2, with a large attendance, an excellent spirit, a good game, and enjoyable banquet. By popular vote of students and faculty Elsie Neufeld (Medford, Oklahoma) was elected Queen of the Wheat Bowl festivities, with Faire Stucky and Katherine Linscheid, runners-up, as her attendants. The Queen's car, followed by many others, was escorted through Newton to Athletic Park, where Vardin Loganbill, football captain for the day, crowned the queen preceding the game, in which McPherson College defeated Bethel 7-6. Six hundred alumni and friends attended the evening banquet, served under the supervision of Helen W. Penner. The program, centering around "Gleanings from Bethel," presented Hazel Senner Buhler as Reaper and as chief gleaners—Walter Graber (Pretty Prairie), John Buller (Larned), Morris Hogan and Hattie Pettis Buhler (Newton). On the preceding day more than sixty attended the Bethel reunion luncheon in Wichita held in connection with the state teachers' meeting. P. R. Linscheid (Arlington) served as toastmaster and Dr. A. J. Regier was in charge of arrangements.

RELIEF

The Rotary Club of Asuncion, Paraguay, recently presented a gift of $952.07 to the M.C.C. Unit in Paraguay for use in furnishing the hookworm control project now being carried on by our workers in Itacurubi del Rosario. Our work in Itacurubi began two years ago with a child feeding project for school children in cooperation with the public school. The supplementary rations consisted of milk, cocoa, and sugar. Since hookworm infestation was very prevalent it was felt advisable to start a control project in connection with the feeding program, and in May of 1946 the hookworm control project was begun.

The sanitation and control project consists of examining both adults and children in giving medical treatments and constructing sanitary units for those desiring such service. The cooperation of the Itacurubi community has been commendable and the interest and help received from the Department of Health has meant much in carrying out the project.

Tools Distributed in Holland

Tools and utensils were distributed to farmers on the Island of Walcheren during the month of September according to a report received from Bro. Irvin Horst. He writes: "Supplementing a project which was begun in August, it was our intention to provide one average-sized tool or cooking utensil for every farmer on the Island. Our workers were present and regulated the giving—combining several small tools or asking several farmers to go together to receive a larger implement such as a cultivator. All tools were labeled with markers bearing the motto 'In the Name of Christ'."

Christenpflicht

Christenpflicht, a native relief society headed by Michael Horsch in Bavaria, is now licensed to receive relief shipments direct from M. C. C. through the CRALOG organization in Germany. Previous to this they received such relief goods as was allocated to them from other indigenous relief agencies. According to Robert S. Kreider, MCC worker, the Christenpflicht program is three-fold: aid to Mennonite refugees, aid to several hundred cases in Ingolstadt, and aid to 500 general relief cases in Regensberg. This agency is prepared to handle a distribution program of about 20 tons per month including assistance to 4,000 relief cases in Munich.

Brother and Sister Leo Swartzendruber arrived in La Plata, Puerto Rico, on October 27.

F. H. Wenger and John Penner who for the past several months were on a relief commissioner assignment to Europe for the Church of God in Christ Mennonite group returned via New York on October 29. They spoke briefly of their trip and experiences to the Akron Headquarters group on October 30.

Roy Smucker and Ivan Moon arrived in the Philippines on October 29.

MATERIAL AID NOTES

Recently we have been receiving inquiries as to the present need for blankets for relief purposes. The need for blankets and other bedding remains a critical one in many areas. Especially during the coming winter months will the need for warm bedding be acute. Preparations have been made to receive blankets at each of the Clothing Centers. All shipments should be well labeled and addressed. For those contributions coming by Express, labels and tags should be obtained from your local express office. Be sure to include the complete address of the center of which the shipment is directed. Also include full name and address of the sender. This will enable the receiving center to acknowledge your gift. The correct address of each center is as follows:

Mennonite Central Committee, Akron, Pennsylvania.

Mennonite Clothing Center, 220 Main Street, Newton, Kansas.

Mennonite Clothing Center, Reedley, California.

The Akron Office has been able to purchase a number of good quality blankets at a reasonable price. If you should desire to have your blankets purchased in this manner, cash contributions may be sent directly to the Akron Headquarters.

SEEK RELATIVES

Mr. J. E. Wiebe of Route 3, Newton, Kansas, writes that he has been asked to aid in locating relatives of Mennonite refugees now in Denmark. Mr. Wiebe's statement is as follows:

Mrs. Cornelius Jansson, nee Johanna Froese, is trying to locate her cousins, Peter, Otto, and Heinrich Schroeder, sons of Heinrich and Katharine Schroeder, nee Penner, formerly of Marienau, Kreis Marienberg, West Prussia.Her present address is: Kobenhavn—Klovermarken, Bezirk 9, Baracke 818, Denmark. Also her husband, Mr. Cornelius Jansson is trying to locate his cousin, Mr. Emil Wiebe, formerly of Ladekopp.

Writings by J. H. Janzen

Writing in the service of Church and Conference for the edification, education, and even wholesome entertainment of the young and old members of our churches has been assigned to me in part by the Home Mission Board of the General Conference of the Mennonite Church of North America, and, to do my duty, I have recently written and published a new Book of Sermons, in German, brief instructions on Biblical knowledge, also in German, but translated later into the English, and Tales from Mennonite History, both in German and in English.

The English booklet on Biblical knowledge waits at present patiently for its publisher, but before it can be published its grammer and spelling will have to be corrected by someone who knows the English better than I do.

My Tales from Mennonite History I have translated and courageously published by mimeograph myself, and the English of the booklet is what it is, and that means it is not so good, hardly up to par. But students of Mennonite history have assured me that they have read the stories with a great deal of pleasure, and have learned thereby easily, as if just playing, such things which they otherwise would have had to ram into their heads by hard labor at their handbooks in school.

The second issue of the Tales may soon become due.

The German version of the same was sold out long ago, and if I do not go broke altogether by the unfavorable turn which things, beyond control of myself or the Conference, have taken in regard to my recent Book of Sermons, and if I can get around to it, I shall publish the second issue of the same shortly. Yours in the Service of Jesus Christ, Jacob H. Janzen, 164 Erb Street, Waterloo, Ontario.

These World Events

Headlines in newspapers these days are drumming on the dangerous, grasping Russian bear. A news analyst and columnist has predicted that there would be war with Russia within a year. President Truman in his United Nations address uttered the cry that we talk peace and not war and that the United Nations should guide its thought in the direction of peace. This being his subject indicates that more war is in the minds of men. All around there continue to be nervous tremors giving voice to the fear of another cataclysmic atomic war be it within the year, five years hence or within thirty years.

Whether such will be the case cannot be said. The seeds of war are being stock-piled and readied for sowing — or they are already being sown! Such can be said of the fact that giant forces are locking horns because of mutual disagreement. Domestically the power and control of industry over against labor; the race tensions such as anti-negro and anti-Jew attitudes are warp and woof of the spirit of war. Internationally the continued tension between Russia and the U. S. gives reason for concern about the direction in which we go.

Americans are fearful of Russia largely because of her past record and because they don't know much about this mysterious bear. We of the Mennonite faith have more personal fears because we know people, have relatives, or have ourselves gone through the revolution and the extreme trials placed upon the Russian Mennonite community during the last thirty years. For some of us it is hard to be forgiving because of the extremities to which our persecutors went.

Yet, as Christians it behooves us today to try to see the present conflict between Russia and the U. S. from both sides rather than yield ourselves to unthinking fear of the Russian Bogie played up in the papers. Part of the trouble today seems to lie on the U. S. side of the fence. Mr. Clyde Eagleton, professor of international law at New York University who worked two years on the United Nations Charter and has been technical advisor to the State Department states that the U. S. is trying to eat her cake and have it, too. She wants a world organization to help establish world peace and security, yet she made the United Nations charter as weak as possible, refused an international police force, retained the veto power of the major nations, turned down compulsory jurisdiction for the International Court of Justice. The U. S. blames Russia of building a sphere of influence in the Near East yet continues to build one in the Western Hemisphere. The U. S. wants to keep the islands of the Pacific taken by her armies "because our boys fought and died for them" which, says Mr. Eagleton is bald imperialism.

Along with this statement comes one from Scott Nearman who urges that Americans try to look at themselves through Russian eyes and evaluate American behavior in the light of what they see. The significance of the atom bomb experiment at Bikini, the continued production of atom bombs at Oak Ridge, the multi-billion dollar expenditure in the U. S. budget for armaments and the war department, the fact that the U. S. is relatively unscathed by the recent war, all in the eyes of the Russian gives reason for genuine fear as to American intents and purposes.

Yet, many a Christian, gripped in fear, will be found to approve of present American action. Not realizing that war is the result basically of the heart of man — when it is selfish and fearful even war will be resorted to; when it is self-giving and loving even its enemies are blessed.

What is the way out of the present world dilemma? Certainly there is none other than the salvation so simply given us by Jesus in his life and death which was self-giving both to enemy and friend. It was forgiveness even to the agony of the cross. There is no easy, cheap way out, but there is the costly and victorious path of love and self-giving before us — that is the way out of the dilemma.

TO WHOM THE PORTALS OPEN

By Hazel M. Kerr

Blessed is that crucial hour
Wherin the waking heart is stirred
To prayer; for only those who ask
May hear the mystic word.

Blessed is the steep ascent
That forces us upon the quest,
For only those who climb may stand
Upon the mountain crest.

Even sorrow may be blest
That in the end becomes our guide
To truth; for they must knock to whom
The portals open wide.

A Social at Home

Days are getting ever shorter and nights are longer. The long summer evenings when the outdoors was the compelling attraction are no longer available for us. Instead, we have the chilly long autumn evenings which soon will be the deep winter evenings of darkness.

Our activity is dictated by the weather by a considerable degree. Also, the climate and season has much to do with what we do. Autumn and winter are the time for socials and other indoor activity. It is then that pop corn, apples, a game of checkers, a puzzle or indoor games are genuine fun.

In our cities, it is apparent that we adults provide pretty much for our own needs. The provision of wholesome, satisfying activity for young people is limited, however. There is the cramped playground around the school, the tiny yards — or none at all — around the houses, the small apartment without playroom facilities. It all seems to be designed for adults — not for children and young people.

Fortunately, the countryside still offers homes of sufficient size for parties, there are fields in which to play, there often is the friendly atmosphere in which young people can grow in the most desirable way.

The challenge to the folks in the country is to use the resources at hand to make social life for the young people as wholesome as possible. First there must be the desire to provide facilities and activity for young people. Homes need to be made available for parties, games need to be at hand, a friendly spirit, some refreshments, a group of young people to give the affair spirit. Someone in each community needs to make the social life of the young people their special concern so that a creative, dynamic program of activity is carried out. Those communities having all this are indeed blessed.

Mechanics and Dynamics

When one reads early church history, he is deeply impressed with the dynamic and zeal the early Christians had. Dynamic best describes the flowering of the new hope and faith, for the word dynamic has the same root origin as dynamite. It was such a power as that of dynamite that inspired the new fellowship of believers to such warm zeal and enthusiasm drawing a great number of new believers into the church.

Later in church history one sees that the early dynamic no longer has so much power. Rather one observes a rather crushing ecclesiastical organization and a doctrinaire control which seemed almost to take the heart out of the warmth and hope and love that was central in the earlier period of the church fellowship. Historians attribute this to various factors, among them being the influx of heretical and false ideas such as those held by gnostics, the mystery religions, the zealous Essene group—all of whom had their own quaint ideas about Christ, his mission and his message. One result of all this was a rather mechanical organization of the church. It has to this day caused a conflict to exist between the mechanics of organization and dynamics of belief. In different areas this conflict has had different forms, but conflict there has been.

Today there is an upsurge of interest in greater and more thorough organization by the church. There is much criticism of the existing machinery and there is the feeling that with the appointment of secretaries and the right personnel, the work of the church can be more efficiently effected.

At the same time, today there is a new cry for thorough consecration and willingness to give of self to the uttermost in faith and deed to Christ. There is a cry for the dynamic which has in the past wrought great things and must in the present and the future do likewise.

It becomes obvious that there need not be and should not be a conflict between the organized church and the belief and faith of the church member. Only through a harmonious relationship between the mechanics of organization and the dynamics of faith can effective work bring to pass great things. Only when the organized church is aware that its purpose and existence depends on a God glorified in the lives and hearts of men and when individual members of the church see in the intimate and free fellowship of the brotherhood the working out of their faith can a true dynamic church be attained.

One Man's Influence

David Brainerd was a man of great spiritual power. The work which he accomplished by prayer was simply marvellous. Dr. A. J. Gordon, in giving a sketch of Brainerd's experience, says:

"In the depths of those forests alone, he was unable to speak the language of the Indians, but he spent whole days literally in prayer. He spent whole days in prayer simply that the power of the Holy Ghost might come upon him so unmistakably that these people should not be able to stand before him. What was his answer?

"William Carey read his life, and he was so moved by it that he went to India. Henry Martyn read his life, and by its impulse he went to India. Payson read it as a young man of twenty years, and he said he had never been so impressed by anything in his life as by the story. Murray McCheyne read it, and was powerfully impressed by it.

"The hidden life, a life whose days are spent in communion with God in trying to reach the Source of power, is the life that moves the world. There may be no one to speak a eulogy over them when they are dead; the great world may take no account of them; but, by-and-by, the great moving current of these lives will begin to tell, as in the case of this young man."

Make Up Your Mind

If we were writing to girls alone we would be tempted to say: "It is more important to make up your mind than to make up your face." But we're also thinking about boys and about a different kind of make-up.

Do you ever have awkward moments when you are halfway across the street and you turn back suddenly because you remember you were to meet Mary, only to twist around again because it was tomorrow rather than today that Mary would be downtown. A careful driver just missed bumping you and you couldn't accuse him of being asleep. If you must debate with yourself, don't do it at busy crossings.

But there are worse casualties when you have two boy friends (or girl friends) on the string and you can't decide which one to let go. You make and break dates and waver from one to the other and finally they both drop you. It pays to make up your mind.

Of course there are serious decisions to be made now and as you grow older. And you will want to look at both sides of a question, to weigh values, to discover dangers, in order that you may choose the best. But our troubles in making up our minds come not so much from looking squarely at all sides. They come rather because we are hesitant to take the responsibility of making a choice and abiding by it. We like to be neutral, not so much because we can't decide, but rather because we don't want to shoulder the load of being responsible for our choices.

If you agree to work with your church's youth program for the next year, you can add your ideas and help plan the best activities your group has ever enjoyed. But you can't do it and miss three Sunday nights out of four. And you'll have to give up your seat on the back row. Making up your mind to accept a job and carry it through means sacrifice and work. But it's the only way by which you make your contribution. And, as a veteran camp leader used to remark, "We grow by accepting responsibilities that are greater than we are."

There were a number of men who wanted to follow Jesus but they couldn't start until they attended to some other matters. To them and to others he spoke against trying to follow him without counting the cost. He wants disciples who have counted the cost and have still made up their minds to follow him. Have you made that decision in your heart?—"Our Young People."

WESTERN DISTRICT PLEASE NOTE

Communications to the Western District C. E. Convention secretary should be addressed, henceforth, to Edwin R. Stucky, R.F.D. 2, Moundridge, Kansas. Mrs. Helen Hiebert Mueller, former secretary, resigned from the position at the last annual meeting.

Thoughts about Leadership

A minister recently stated that he felt the strongest church leadership is needed right in the churches rather than in positions administering church work or carrying on church projects. Another minister stated that he felt the most effective work that can be done in the church is with the young people. Since young people congregate at the schools, work in the church schools would be most vital in his judgement.

These are excellent subjects for debate and much discussion. There is reason for controversy and difference in the statements. We do not propose to debate the point about which service is best or where our leadership is needed the most. Kierkegaard in his book, Purity of Heart, says we should not fall prey to the sin of comparison. When we compare ourselves with others and compare one work with another, we lose sight of the whole purpose of our work and God's purpose for us. So, we will not compare!

It must be said, however, that there is keen need for the devout efforts and work of leaders with vision in the local church. The effectiveness of any church is revealed in the vitality of the local congregations not only in the vitality of the organization. But, not only are local leaders with power needed. Local congregations with great purpose, vision, and the power of the spirit, are needed. The Apostle Paul was not concerned so much about the strength of the church organization in his day for there was none as we know it. Rather his letters were directed to the small outlying churches — Corinth, Rome, Ephesus, Colossae. We are not living in the first century and conditions are different, but Paul's concern for the spiritual welfare of those outlying churches needs also to be our concern.

Let the small local congregations wax strong in spirit and be the power which leavens the whole lump!

Caesar And God

Man must worship something, and he becomes like the object of his worship; these two principles are imbedded in human nature. We have seen it in state worship. In Japan under Shintoism the state was considered divine. There Caesar was God. Much the same was seen in Germany and Italy, where the state was made supreme above all rivals, and the people were assimilated, as far as possible, to the image of Hilter and Mussolini. If we do not worship God the Father Almighty through Jesus Christ His Son and surrender our lives to him, then it is "Heil Hitler" or someone or something else which claims and receives our supreme regard.

Worship is a recognition of worth, as its root implies, devotion to that which is supremely worthy. The state has its claims and functions which we must acknowledge, but loyalty to the state must be secondary to loyalty to God, the flag of empire subordinate to the Cross of Christ. Even in America there are tendencies to yield to the supremacy of the state, and to bow to evils which it recognizes rather than lift up a standard against them. Too many accept the liquor traffic, for instance, with complacency because goverments have thrown their weight in its favour. Commercialism is a Caesar to which many bow—"How much money is there in it?" is often the supreme question. Ask many people of today what is their foremost object in life, and too many cases it is some kind of a Caesar in the form of worldly success. Conscience and Christian character stand foremost.

Sets of slides on C.P.S. are now being made available to interested groups and churches wishing to see a visual record in color of the work and activity of a program that is slowly becoming a matter of history. Slides are available on loan from the M.C.C., Akron, Pa., on the following: Puerto Rico, Gulfport, Terry, Mennonite Heritage, Denison, Belton, Fort Collins, Ypsilanti, Cleveland, and Tiffin. A set on crafts and leatherwork is also available. In the making are sets on Smoke Jumper, China Mennonite Relief, Soil Conservation, The Story of Material Aid, the M.C.C. Headquarters.

Word from Honan Province, China, tells of the tractor unit there. Men went to China to train Chinese in the operation of these strange machines. The Chinese students, it is reported, were apt pupils, but completely unfamiliar with internal combustion engines. Thus, it was no surprise when one of them ran into the cook's quarters, demolishing the brick stove but missing the cook! It is further reported that a city of tents sprang up around of the tractor projects in the Yellow River valley when actual plowing got underway. Attesting to the results of the project was acre upon acre of beans growing in a raduis of over a mile from the camp on land which otherwise would have produced nothing.

The recent suspension of the drafting of men into the army means a suspension, likewise, of the drafting of men into C.P.S. Of greater significance is that the draft act, passed last June, is seemingly a superfluous piece of legislation to date. Its actual period of operation during 1946 will have been only a month. Since it expires as law in March, at best it will function only a bare four months. This fact arouses questions about the reason the military and various industrial interests clamored so urgently and loudly for draft machinery. The gravity of such legislation existing in a country cannot be under-emphasized. To Christians it may be viewed with even greater gravity than do Christian people view the consumption of liquor by the American people. Conscription carries with it the evil of war.

Japanese gold is being claimed by the U. S. for the purpose of paying occupation costs. One commentator states that the gold, $200,000,000 worth, will be lowered carefully into the hole at Fort Knox where it will very effectively do nobody any good!

An interesting development in educational circles in the Overseas Schools Committee whose purpose it is to try to bring closer together American and European schools. The method used is to establish close ties between individual American and European schools. By establishing a close relationship, the schools can share with each other common problems and exchange faculty and students thus becoming more acquainted and more understanding of the problems each faces.

A report states that Protestantism has lost ground in France during the last seventy-five years. In the Reformed church there is an estimated membership of 237,000 members at present. In 1872, the official census of this body stood at 480,000. Only 180,000 of the present membership actively practices its faith.

The recent development of FM (frequency modulation) in radio broadcasting is expected to outmode present broadcasting methods. The reason is that FM is static clear and reproduces sound with considerably more accuracy. Two religious organizations have applied for permission to construct FM broadcasting stations. These are the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago and the Board of Missions and Church Extension of the Methodist Church. The one station is to be established in Chicago, the other in New York.

The Lord willing we will hold revival meetings November 12—24, with Homer Leisy, Vice-president of the General Conference, as main speaker. Please remember this event in your prayers. The coming marriage of Viola Krehbiel to Walter J. J. Graber has been announced.—Ralph L. Krehbiel, Corr.

—Bethel Church, Inman, Kansas: We had our annual Mission Festival Sunday, October 27. Home missions was the topic of the forenoon. Rev. Walter Dyck, of Newton, Kansas, was the speaker. Rev. Sawatzky, of Newton, made the opening for the afternoon session. The missionary children John and Katherine Enns, and Eleanore Thiessen were introduced to the audience. They are attending Bethel College this year. The Enns children are from Africa and Miss Thiessen from India. Rev. and Mrs. J. R. Duerksen, missionaries of India, talked, and so did Dr. S. F. Pannabecker, formerly missionary to China. The thoughts were about foreign missions and how they had been affected by the war. In the evening Rev. Sam Goering, who has recently returned from several years of relief work for the M.C.C. in Europe, told of his experiences and the need that is prevalent. The choir sang at each session. A lunch for everyone was served at noon in the church basement. The forenoon collection was $238.12 for home missions. The afternoon collection amounted to $405.60 and was for foreign missions. The evening offering went for relief. Each session was well attended, and everyone should have been blessed by the messages heard.—Corr.

—Bethany Mennonite Church, Freeman, South Dakota: During the summer months, worship services and Sunday School were conducted in the college gymnasium, but since the days are becoming cooler, we have again transferred to the College chapel, where we hope to remain until warm weather in spring. At a congregational meeting some time ago, the old church ground was selected as the site of the new church building. The Salem South Church men's choir, under the direction of Willard Waltner, gave a musical program at the college gymnasium. The offering which amounted to $320 was left as a donation to the reconstruction fund of the new Bethany Church building. Two new teachers have been added to the Sunday School teaching force, namely, professors Benno Toews and Ernest Lichti, both instructors at Freeman Junior College. Communion Sunday was observed October 6. The congregation again collected food for the needy in Europe. On November 10, Dr. A. Warkentin of the Mennonite Biblical Seminary in Chicago, is to be the guest speaker at the morning and evening services at Bethany's Harvest Festival.—J. M. Hofer Corr.

—Wayland Mennonite Church, Wayland, Iowa: On Sunday, October 13, Rev. and Mrs. Albert L. Jantzen of Chicago were with us and gave inspiring messages to us at the morning worship services. The following week Rev. I. W. Bauman of Bluffton, gave us a series of messages on the theme, "Facing Life with Christ." On Sunday, October 20, we observed Harvest Home Festival. In the morning Rev. Bauman brought the message; in the afternoon Rev. Paul Shelly, of Bluffton, delivered a sermon on "Being Thankful," and in the evening the Bluffton College Gospel Team gave the program to a crowded house. During the day an offering was taken for our Mennonite Biblical Seminary amounting to $177.66.—Anna Mullett, Corr.

—First Mennonite Church, Aberdeen, Idaho: Our church was privileged to have Rev. Homer Leisy of Dallas, Oregon, stop in Aberdeen and give us a message on Tuesday evening, October 29. A large group came out even after a hard day during this busy harvest season. Rev. Leisy's message was based on Ezekiel 38.—Arnold E. Bartel, Corr.

ASSOCIATED PRESS STORY FEATURES MOUNTAIN LAKE WATCHMAKER

An Associated Press story which appeared in the Kansas City Times and in the Chicago Tribune (and undoubtedly in others) on October 30 featured fifty-four-year-old Gerhard Nickel, a watch-maker, of Mountain Lake, Minnesota, as playing Santa Claus to the needy of Bremen, Germany. The story sent from Bremen, Germany, and dated October 29 told how Nickel traveled over four thousand miles on his Santa Claus trip. When he arrived in Bremen, not in a sleigh, but on the S. S. Cedar Rapids Victory, he walked down the gangplank with two huge packages. Proceeding to the midst of the city, he stopped, and a crowd gathered around him. He beckoned a poorly dressed girl and handed her a sweater and a pair of woolen socks. A bar of soap went to a grimy-faced youngster, etc. The packages empty, he went back to the ship for more. Then he mounted street cars and walking up and down the aisles handed out candy and bars of soap.

Interested Americans got his story. Nickel had wanted to see the world before he was too old. So he had packed away his watches and announced his decision to his family. His wife was opposed at first. But when he told her the purpose of the trip, she agreed, and fellow townspeople entered into the plan with enthusiasm.

Nickel found a way to get over. He shipped as a seaman on the Cedar Rapids Victory, and it was a rough voyage, but at the end of it he had the fun of playing Santa Claus.

His packages exhausted and having seen the world. Nickel declared that he was willing to return to his country and his family.

North Star Church, Drake, Saskatchewan: On October 13, in the forenoon this congregation held a dedication service for the newly added annex at the country church, four miles west of the town of Drake, Saskatchewan. It will serve as the choir loft. In the afternoon of the same day the fourtieth anniversary of the church was celebrated. On February 12, 1906, this church was organized. Its first Elder was Rev. John J. Gerbrandt. Rev. J. J. Thiessen, Saskatoon, brought the main message at both services. October 14, was set aside for our annual harvest and mission-festival for this year. The offerings on that day totaled $1100.00. On October 18, Rev. and Mrs. P. Balzer were in our midst. Rev. Balzer told in a very interesting way of his experiences in the work with the M.C.C. in the past two years. Thirteen of the young people of our church are attending Bible schools, colleges, and high schools.—P. Schroeder, Corr.

The Universal Week of Prayer is to be observed from January 5 to 12. We are not intending to publish the outline for the days of prayer in this paper, for it is very difficult to give more than a very condensed outline and the booklets available for this week have been reasonable in cost. Churches wishing to observe the week may get their copies by writing to the Department of Evangelism 297 Fourth Avenue, New York 10, N. Y.

—Rev. Howard G. Nyce, Secretary of the Foreign Mission Board, wrote from Allentown, Pa., on October 30, "We are having an ideal autumn. I can't recall when we had such mild weather for such a long period. . . I plan to stop off (at Newton) the early part of December on my way back from the Mission Festival at Aberdeen, Idaho."

Dr. Cornelius Krahn of Bethel College gave a series of lectures at the Zion Mennonite Church, Souderton, Pa., from November 3 to 8. His theme was "The Story of Our Faith." Subjects he used were: "The Beginning of Our Faith" (Switzerland); "The Spread of Our Faith" (Holland); "Pioneers of Faith" (Danzig); "Achievements of Faith" (Russia); "New Frontiers of Faith" (America); and "The Challenge of Our Faith." Dr. Krahn used slides in connection with the lectures.

—On October 31 various Mennonite representatives, called together by the Mennonite Central Committee, met at the Mennonite Home Mission in Chicago to discuss the matter of bringing some of the present Mennonite refugees in Europe to South America. General Conference representatives and visitors who were present were: H. J. Andres, I. W. Bauman, Walter Dyck, Elmer Ediger, H. A. Fast, J. Winfield Fretz, Ronald von Riesen, Elvin Souder, J. N. Smucker, J. J. Thiessen, A. Warkentin and Harry Yoder.

—The Saucon Mennonite Church at Coopersburg, Pa., celebrated its two hundred eleventh anniversary on Sunday, November 3. Rev. George Greger, a former pastor, gave the anniversary sermon in the morning, and Rev. John J. Plenert of Lansdale gave the address of the afternoon. Rev. Ward W. Shelly is the present pastor of the Saucon Church.

—Grace Church, Dallas Oregon: Our pastor and Mrs. Leisy plan, the Lord willing, to leave for a month of evangelistic meetings in the east. They plan to be in Caldwell, Idaho, the night of October 28, at Aberdeen the night of October 29, at Henderson, Nebraska, on November 3, and at the Grace Bible Institute, Omaha, as Bible Conference speaker twice daily November 4-8, then November 9 to Moundridge, Kansas, for four meetings at the old home church Sunday and Monday, then to the large Pretty Prairie church for two messages daily November 12-24 with a Youth for Christ message at Hutchinson on November 16 and another at Wichita on November 23. The Leisys plan to start home on November 25.

—Hoffnungsau Church, Inman, Kansas: On November 24 Rev. A. M. Gaeddert is to be ordained as Elder of our church. In connection with this two other sessions will be held. A mission festival has been planned for the forenoon. Then the ordination is to take place in the afternoon. A relief program for the evening. Music will be rendered by Inman, Buhler, Hebron and our church. On October 29 approximately fifty members turned out for a general church cleaning and refinishing of floors.—Mrs. J. V. Regier, Corr.

—First Church, Beatrice, Nebraska: The ministerial and district conferences which the two churches at Beatrice had been planning for, for some time, are a thing of the past. It was a busy, but pleasant and enjoyable week. Favorable weather accounted for a good attendance. Missionary and Mrs. Daniel Schirmer and daughters also attended the Conference. On October 27 the Schirmers presented some of the problems and difficulties in their work, and also told us of their experiences. Missionary Aron Jantzens home on furlough from India, showed pictures and reported on their work October 27 in the evening. The Ladies Mission Societies met at the church, so that Mrs. Jantzen could report on her work in the foreign field. The committees from the various circles met to pack new and used clothing. Fifteen boxes were packed at this time.—Margaret Albrecht, Corr.

—Rev. Ronald von Riesen, Executive Secretary of the Board of Education, returned to Newton on November 4 after attending a meeting of the Council of Church Boards, held at Cincinnati, Ohio, October 29: a meeting of the Executive Committee of the Young People's Union, held at the Mennonite Biblical Seminary, Chicago, October 30 and 31; and after a visit to Berne, Indiana, over the week-end. At Berne Rev. von Riesen participated in a survey of a possible retreat grounds for the 1947 Ministers' Retreat and also brought a missionary message in the Berne Church on Sunday afternon.

—Gospel Mennonite Church, Mountain Lake, Minnesota: On November 3, at 2 o'clock p. m., the Emmanuel Mennonite Church of Delft, Minnesota, and our church united in a welcome service for Missionary Anna Quiring who recently returned from Africa. The service was held at the Gospel Mennonite Church in Mountain Lake. Rev. H. H. Quiring, father to Missionary Anna Quiring, led the service while Rev. Victor Graber of Delft, Rev. H. H. Dick, member of the Congo Inland Mission Board, Missionary Anna Quiring, and Rev. J. J. Esau gave short messages. A fellowship lunch was served after the service.—Rudy Janzen, Corr.

—Salem Mennonite Church, Wisner, Nebraska: Rev.

and Mrs. Aron Jantzen and daughter, missionaries from India, were with us Friday evening, November 1. They showed slides of interest concerning their work among the people of India, which were appreciated. Our Sunday School recently held its annual business meeting. The necessary business was transacted and officers elected to carry on our work for another year. — Corr.

—Friedensberg, Church, Avon, South Dakota: This church held its annual Harvest and Mission Festival October 27, with Rev. H. J. Brown and Rev. Benno Toews from Freeman as guest speakers. The offerings on this day for relief and missions were $914.73. Also guests here on this day were Rev. and Mrs. H. U. Schmidt, Meno, Oklahoma. Rev. Schmidt brought us messages on two following evenings. I wish to correct an error in my last report. It should read $186.00 instead of only $86.00, the sum the Mission Society contributed to the Good Will Christmas Bundles.—Corr.

—General Conference Mennonite Fellowship, Lancaster, Pa., Rev. Vergil M. Gerig, of Smithville, Ohio, occupied the pulpit on November 3 while the pastor, Don Smucker, took a much needed rest. Rev. Gerig is finishing his ministerial training at Princeton Theological School. At the church council meeting on October 26 it was decided that we should organize a church. January 6 was set as the tentative date. A list of charter members is now being prepared. A constitution for the church was discussed at a business meeting on November 9. Constitutions of various churches in the Eastern District served as a basis for the study. The Wednesday evening prayer meetings are well attended.

—Rev. Don E. Smucker writes from Princeton, New Jersey: "Today I heard a powerful sermon by Emil Brunner. In fact, it was the most courageous sermon I have ever heard preached to a university audience with its convictions about the foolishness of the Gospel."

Saying, Feeling, and Doing

by Mrs. Willis Rich

"Say "thank you" to the lady." "What do you say now, Junior?" With these words many mothers and fathers have reminded their children to respond to kindnésses or to gifts in an acceptable way. Before a child can pronounce or understand the words correctly, "thank you" is a familiar and oft repeated sound. What prompts parents to feel so keenly that to say "thank you" is an important part of their child's training? Most parents would probably admit that it was partly done for purposes of respectability, and that such reminders are frequently used in the presence of guests and strangers. Do we feel a sense of shame and guilt when we realize that this is true? If we do, it is probably because we are aware that we are stressing the letter of the law, and forgetting the spirit.

All Christian parents will agree that the important thing is to help our children to feel grateful. To achieve this will take more than to teach and require them to say "thank you." It is important that they learn the art of appreciation "I," "me," and "mine" are among a child's favorite words, and we all know that it is a spoiled youngster indeed who never learns 'thou" "thee," and "thine." The earlier a child learns really to appreciate those on whom he depends for care and fellowship, the easier it will be for him to feel thankful for favors and privileges. The best way to bring this about, it seems to me, is for the parents themselves to feel and express appreciation for each other and for their children. This can not be done by constant scolding, nagging and criticising to the exclusion of love and praise. If father and mother often say "thank you" to each other and show in many ways their love and appreciation for each other, and also show the same spirit toward their children, the children will respond in like manner.

A feeling of gratitude does not come in its own separate compartment. It goes along with sympathy, unselfishness, esteeming others better than oneself (humility), compassion, love, cooperation and all the other Christian virtues. You cannot teach and acquire one virtue, without acquiring something of the others.

To feel thankful to God is of course the ultimate goal. When we have learned to be grateful to those who enrich our lives in material ways or through friendship, in our homes and in our community, it will follow quite naturally to think of God as the giver of all that is good. The apostle Paul found the secret of true humility and gratitude. In I Corinthians 4:7 he admonishes against arrogance and boastfulness. The King James version uses the expression "being puffed up." Then he says "what hast thou that thou didst not receive?" Exactly. If we could really feel the truth of that and somehow help our children to feel it—what have we that we have not received?—our hearts would be constantly full of praise and thanksgiving. The splendor of the autumn landscape fills our hearts with an indescribable feeling. Isn't it gratitude to God? The children come home with their hands full of beautifully colored leaves. Their hearts are full of admiration. For the leaves? Or is it an acknowledgment of the glory of God? "Boy, this apple is delicious" is an unconscious prayer of thanksgiving to God, and it can become a conscious expression under a wise parents' guidance. How many golden opportunities we have in our homes to help our children to be conscious of God and His many gifts, and our dependence upon Him.

A small boy was watching the sky through the open window before he fell asleep. Then he prayed his bedtime prayer in the same sing-song way in which he had spoken it ever since he could remember. "Now I lay me down to sleep, I pray the Lord my soul to keep. If I should die before I wake, I pray the Lord my soul to take. Amen." And then he added in a whisper, "Gee, God but you are wonderful!" Whether we approve of his choice of words or not, this was a spontaneous expression of the deep feeling of his heart and may have been the first real prayer he ever uttered.

To remind our children to say "thank you" frequently is important and will help them to form a good habit. To let them hear expressions of gratitude and appreciation by others, in addition, is excellent. Reading the Psalms that are full of praise and thanksgiving and singing our great hymns of praise is a very good, worthwhile and satisfying experience, because it gives expression to the feelings that swell up within us. But another important opportunity we have is to let our "works show forth our praise." Then our children will understand that we really mean it, and the meaning of "Thanksgiving" will become clear.

"Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid which is Christ Jesus"

From the editor's point - of - view:

THANKSGIVING on the part of those who are hard pressed and then receive help is nearly always much more meaningful than the thanksgiving of those who live in abundance. The following messages from Germany point to this: A pastor, writing in behalf of an Evangelical Kindergarten, states, ". . . we thank you, that you have remembered so lovely the children in Germany. The need is very great, but the charity of the Christ overcome the greatest need. May God bless all brethren in Christ of America." (The foregoing and following are expressions of thanks for flour received from the Hillsboro, Kansas, community.) Another pastor writes, "We have distributed the flour to our old people about 75 years, the refugees from East and our reparting soldiers, who are ill. We thank you very much in their name. You have made great joy and softened many need. We greet you with many thanks your brother in Christ." From Baronesse Loeffelholz, headmistress of a Protestant boarding school for girls, "We thank you very much for your gift. It will do very good to our children, because most of them are so weak that they are not up to the necessities of daily school-life." From a pastor at Wehrheim, "Many thanks for your welcome gift, by which we were able to help 150 families. We send our hearty regards to you in connection of faith." A pastor writes, "We like to communicate you that the kindergarten of the Protestant Lutheran parish of Wendelstein at Nuremberg got flour, sugar and milk. In this way we are able to dine 180 children of our kindergarten. Mothers and children are very glad of these gifts. Enclosed you will find fotos of the dinings. They shall be a sign of our heartly and deepest thanks. Will you please extend our sincerest thanks to all in the U. S. A., who gave the gifts of charity." A refugee pastor who personally distributed baked goods to a local Kindergarten writes, "It can hardly be expressed by words, how much we appreciated your generous present. You should see once the sparkling and thankful eyes of the children when they receive the white cake. Then you could recognize what your presents meant to them and how much your help is appreciated in this time of distress." Here is thankfulness out of the heart. These people readily perceive how dependent they are upon the love of God as manifested through the helping hands of friends across the ocean.

GIVING FOR RELIEF is a very real way of saying thanks. Throughout the past year the churches of our conference have sent flour, canned milk, processed meats, canned vegetables, dried and canned fruits, clothes, tools, blankets, Christmas Goodwill Bundles, and other items for relief, besides giving money. Undoubtedly, in comparison with larger denominations, the Mennonite Church has given very substantially for the relief of those in dire need. This giving is an indication of Christian stewardship. It is suggestive of the fact that what we have is not our own. Thankfully realizing the "gift" nature of what we usually call ours, we share from our abundance with those in need. Feeling something of the great need that exists, the "gift" nature of what we have stands out even more sharply, and we share the good and great gifts of a Heavenly Father. As our churches give for relief they speak a prayer of deep thanksgiving to God, the Father.

AMERICAN CULTURE is at least in one way not too conducive to a spirit of thanksgiving despite the fact that Thanksgiving Day was born early in American history. America is the land of "the self made man." Americans like to read success stories. The introduction to one of the most popular books on winning friends and influencing people tells in "inspiring" terms how the author of the book "once picked strawberries and cut cockleburs for five cents an hour" and how the same man now gets one dollar a minute for teaching business men self-expression. There is, undoubtedly, something quite wholesome about this ideal of making the most of yourself—though, we might give a little more thought to a Christian definition of this "most." The individual needs to use his God-given capacities, but he at the same time needs to be clearly aware of how others have contributed to his life. When one realizes that everything one is and possesses has been made possible by others, then it is just a little easier to be thankful.

Flour, Cause for Thanksgiving

(Explanatory Note) This report is from the Evangeliches Hilfswerk, an indigenous evangelical relief organization in Germany, and is one of the several distributing organizations which received relief supplies from CRALOG. (Council of Relief Agencies Liscensed for Operation in Germany)

Distribution of flour in a parish. The Minister's wife (wearing a white apron) distributes the gifts for the needy. The decisive factor being utter distress without consideration of faith, race or political opinion.

During the last days of May glad tidings reached our city of Bremen that was so heavily ravaged during the war. The announcement that Relief-packages were to be shipped from America to Bremen, at once roused the population out of their lethargy and despair. All the distressed, deprived of almost all necessities they need to live, could hardly believe in the joyful news. Was it a dream or was it true that American Christians were about to send flour and bread as a first aid against starvation and misery?

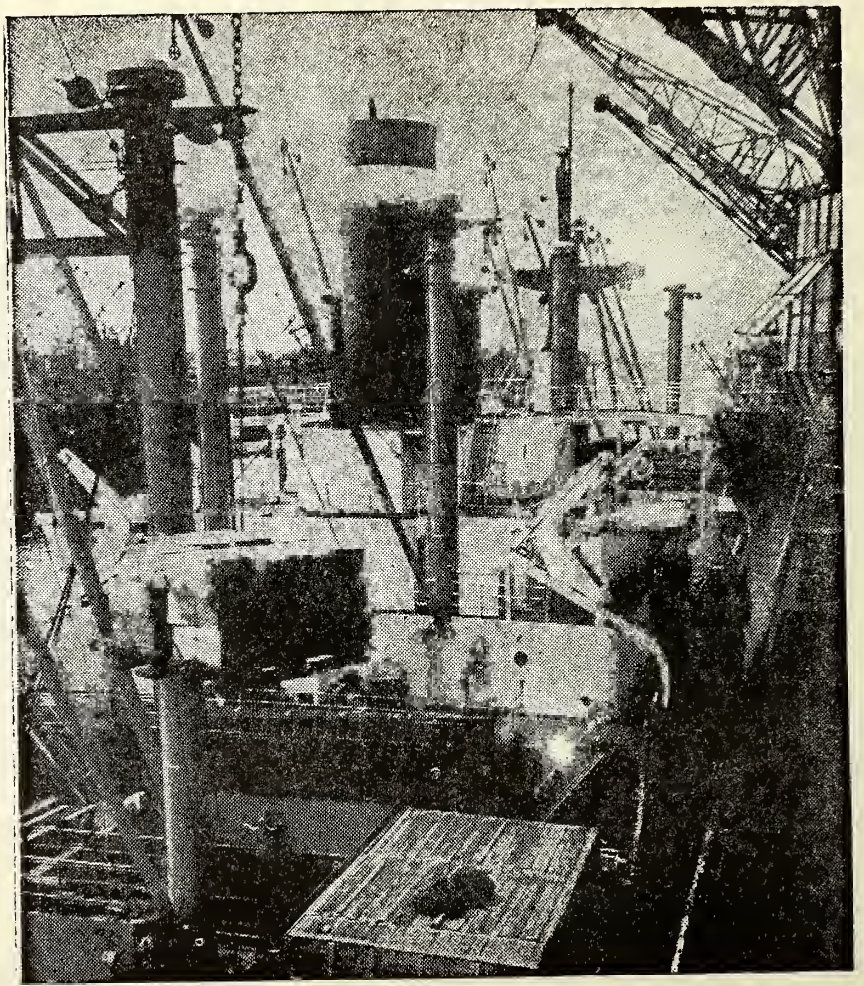
Yes,, it is true and here are the facts: 40,000 kg of flour had been collected by the Mennonite Central Committee, a Christian Relief and Welfare Organization in the USA, and had been shipped as "CRALOG" consignments to the Evangelical Reconstruction Work in Bremen. The goods were to be given to the needy population of this town and arrived just in time to ensure its distribution before Whitsuntide and, what was even more important, it arrived, when the last food reserves, even such as potatoes, had been consumed many weeks ago and signs of famine and malnutrition were observed and became obvious.

In view of rooms available, the goods were either distributed in the Vicarage or the parish-halls. To prevent the people from lining up in queues, they were asked to wait their turn in a room adjoining the place of distribution. There they are: Many old people, sick, fugitives and homeless folk, all of them very frail looking, thin and weary, wearing patched up clothes and worn-out footwear,—then careworn mothers with young children of all years of age, hollow-eyed, dejected and pitiable their outward appearance that tells a vivid story of bitter misery.

And yet a certain mysterious feeling of expectation seemed to pervade the room. All these people were to have a gift, they had never expected to get and that meant to them more than a mere material value. Was it not a proof that Brethren in Faith—somewhere far away—were trying to alleviate this misery? Was it to stand for a promising omen, the beginning of a better mutual understanding filling them with a new hope for a better life? Such and similar thoughts were running through their minds.

And then, as the names were being called up, the men and the women filed out into the distribution room, where their names were checked off the list. The gifts averaging about 750 gr of flour or 1,000 gr of bread for each individual, were handed out to them in coupons to be exchanged at the shops indicated thereon.

The older people were hardly able to keep themselves upright, accepting their coupons by uttering awkward and sometimes touching words of thanks. They all were fully aware of the holiness of a piece of bread. Some were obviously too excited wanting to mutter some words of thanks, but being unable to do so, they just shook hands with tears streaming over their cheeks.



Here an American steamer has arrived in Bremen with large parcels containing fruit and vegetables preserved in glasses: relief-gifts of the Mennonite Central Committee.

From hundreds belonging to one parish let us describe only the following examples: There is a married couple of about 65 years; they had three sons, who were to support them on their age, all three have been killed in action. Their home was destroyed by bombs. They are now living in a small and damp stable-room located behind their former house. The wife is suffering from dropsy due to malnutrition. Her husband has kidney trouble and is to live on a diet. When the coupons were given to them, only tears expressed the wife's joy, when realizing that she would now be able to prepare a light meal for her husband.

And here is another woman, who an hour ago had collapsed from sheer exhaustion. She had to stand in a queue for a long time that day in order to get some food for her hungry children. Her eldest son had been killed in an air-raid, after having been evacuated to some place in the country. Her oldest daughter gets one meal a day at school; but this woman never has enough food for the two younger children, 3 and 5 years old. She hardly eats herself, giving all the food she has to her children. The small public relief she gets is not even sufficient to buy food with. Her husband was reported missing in Russia. Physical pain and long lasting misery have left visible traces.

Not only individuals got donations. Also the hospitals and the aged people's homes are in need of additional food as the ordinary rations on the basis of hardly 1,000 calories a day are wholly inadequate to strengthen a weakened body. Further there are the kindergartens, where the children were to be given

A TRAVELER'S PALM

by Harry E. Martens

The house of worship at La Plata, completed March 17, 1946. Ground for it was broken one year ago this Thanksgiving Day. In this little chapel English Sunday School and worship services are held regularly every Sunday morning. Every Sunday evening there are services in Spanish for members of the community and members of the Unit. Frequently there is an attendance of over one hundred at these evening meetings. The building is also used Sunday afternoon when several Sunday School classes are conducted in Spanish for the children and young people of the community.

As I am writing these lines I am sitting next to the little cottage where Cynthia Pearl Maus sat when she edited her ever-to-be-remembered book, "Puerto Rico in Pictures and Poetry." The author may be better known to most Americans by the widely read and highly appreciated book she wrote, entitled, "Christ and the Fine Arts."

I am seated here and thinking of Puerto Rico's people, their spiritual and physical poverty, however, struck anew by its unusual natural beauty. It seems as though God must have put forth special effort in making this island a prize creation. Then quickly comes the question, what has happened to man, also God's creation, now toiling on this isle of natural beauty? At this writing the shadows of the wings of a beautiful Traveler's Palm are playing upon my face. It seems as though this Traveler's Palm, with its outstretched wings in a fan-shaped manner, is saying something in its calm, still and yet firm manner.

Before me there is Cynthia Pearl Maus's book, "Puerto Rico—in Picture and Poetry" wherein I read again the poem, "The Taveler's Palm" by Cecil E. Stevens.

A sketch of sandy waste—
The staggering rover looks with eager eyes
To where a fan-shaped palm
Raises its fronds against the blue, blue sky.

Water!—The life-giving stream!
With trembling hands he slashes at the base—
And gulps the liquid that will save his life!
And in his heart he says a silent grace.

So God to each of us has sent a Traveler's Palm—
His own beloved Son!
To fill our thirsty souls with hope and cheer,
To drive out our dense ignorance and fear,
And give to us the water of eternal life!

The "Traveler's Palm" has nestled away at its heart a generous supply of water. In days gone by, we are told the Traveler's Palm tree came to the rescue of many a thirsty traveler.

Cecil E. Steven's poem reminds us that God to each of us has sent a "Traveler's Palm" by sending His beloved Son to offer the water of eternal life to quench forever the thirst of those who drink it. That is what the Traveler's palm beside me seems to be saying. I can't help but imagine it saying even more and that is, "Here in Puerto Rico there are not many that are thirsty for the water I, a Traveler's Palm, have to give, but there are so many who are in thirst of the water of eternal life, that the One has to give, who sat by the well with the Samaritan woman. What are you doing about it at La Plata?"

As this Traveler's Palm tree appears to be posing such an important question, it seems logical that some of you readers may have asked similar questions. As you may know, the Mennonite and Brethren in Christ churches, represented in the Mennonite Central Committee, are doing relief and reconstruction work in some thirteen different countries in various parts of the world. Puerto Rico, a little island at the heart of the Carribbean waters, with about 3,400 square miles and more than 2,250,000 people is one of the thirteen lands refrerred to. Not only is this one of them, but by a goodly margin has the largest number of MCC workers. Our Unit has a quota of approximately fifty Continental workers. To this we must add approximately twenty Puerto Rican workers hired by the Unit Administration, who assist in various types of service.

Naturally, you would say that such a group of young men and women consecrated to the cause of Christ should be able to do something about the urgent needs of Puerto Rico. Space will not permit to go into detail regarding the many urgent needs of Puerto Rico except to say the needs are physical, economical, social and spiritual needs. Neither does space permit for us to go into detail regarding the various phases of our work. Through various articles as well as through written and verbal reports you have been informed of various phases of our work. We shall pause to list the various phases of our work, however, before we review in greater detail our program of ministering to the spiritual needs of our Puerto Rican neighbors.

Our medical service includes a thirty-bed hospital, the conducting of various types of clinics, such as T. B., V. D., general, pre-natal, and children's in various medical centers in various rural sections. Innumberable cases are followed up in their homes and huts by our medical social worker. Our dentist and dental hygienist offer the necessary dental service to the La Plata and nearby communities. A trained nutritionist administers the milk stations and child feeding program and assists children's clinics and follow-up of nutrition cases in their homes. To strike at the roots of many ills we carry on a sanitation program with the basic concerns being proper sewage disposal and sanitary water supply. A nurse spends full time in the program of Public School Health checking for various ills in children of nearby rural schools.

Educational, recreational and social activities for the community and Unit are being planned and supervised through our Community Center Program. Directors of Community Center programs assist with the same kind of activities in nearby schools. Mothers and young girls are taught to sew in several of our sewing classes. A number of mothers and girls are attacking the financial problems of their families by doing Puerto Rican linen work which is supervised by unit members who, also assume responsibility for marketing the same.

In the fields of agriculture, the Unit has its own dairy, chickens, pigs, gardens, beginning of an orchard, and also do their own butchering. The Unit sponsors a 4-H club. The farmers of the community are assisted in various ways, including a program of artificial insemination.

It goes without saying that many serve at important tasks in the kitchen, laundry, business office, and at jobs in construction, maintenance, auto mechanics, electrical work, plumbing, work as matron, office clerk and in administration.

The program as it is set up, the various phases of it merely listed for you above, is an attempt to meet the many needs of rural Puerto Rico. We believe in what Jesus said, "What ye have done for the least of these my brethren ye have done unto me." "In the Name of Christ," we try to minister to these needs. As we minister to the physical, economic, and social needs each one of us in one way or another have various opportunities to minister to the spiritual needs. There is no job with the entire project that does not permit various contacts with our Puerto Rican neighbors. It is almost impossible to walk from one building to the next without being observed by or talked to by one or more Puerto Rican neighbors. Each one, individually, can be a witness for Christ by his deeds or acts of kindness or by word of mouth. The "father" of Public Health once said, "What is the use of helping a man to live longer if you can't help him to live better." We have opportunity for both.

Not only is it our privilege to give an individual witness, but also a cooperative witness as well, for the island as such. On this comparatively small island you will not find many large sections, if any, where there is not at least one who knows about the project. The significance of our cooperative witness could be illustrated in many ways. To list but one, permit me to quote the words of a Puerto Rican professor of the Evangelical Seminary when he said, "You have taught us that religion is to be lived."

As Christians, as believers in the church of Jesus Christ we think of our works as being the fruits of our salvation and also supplementing the evangelistic mission of our church. As we stood in the center of our project we could look into all four winds and see hundreds of homes and huts each representing large families,

THE CONTRIBUTORS

Harry E. Martens has just recently returned from Puerto Rico to the United States after serving as Director of the La Plata Relief and Reconstruction Unit from March, 1945, to October, 1946. The La Plata Unit, which is sponsored by the M.C.C., has about fifty workers at present (native workers excluded). Most of these fifty unit members are volunteer workers. Before going to La Plata Brother Martens served as a C.P.S. regional director, first in the Rocky Mountain region, and then later in the Eastern region. Previous to that he served as director of the Colorado Springs C.P.S. camp, beginning his work there, January 1, 1943. Mr. Martens has resumed his connection with Bethel College.

Mrs. Willis Rich writes from the viewpoint of mother and homemaker. Other articles which she has previously contributed are: "Thoughts for Mothers," "Children Are People," "The Kingdom of God in the Home," "Good Gifts for Our Children," "The Task of the Christian Home," and "God's Orchestra."

but, not a single church, Catholic, Protestant or otherwise. The mode of travel being walking or horseback for most of them, the churches in town are out of reach for most of them. Inasmuch as most of the families are nominally Catholic the church does not reach them nor do they get to church. To us the church has meant much joy in life. We consider it not only as an essential in life, but in as much as we through it, have found Christ as personal Saviour, we consider it to be at the heart of life. Should we go on indefinitely without offering this, which means so much to us, to our Puerto Rican neighbors? We came to minister to the needs of these people.

We felt called to build a "House of Worship" in this valley of La Plata. This church was to be for members of the Unit and members of the community. On March 17, 1946, what had been a vision became a reality when our little chapel was dedicated. Each Sunday morning there is Sunday School, and there are regularly worship services in English. Every Sunday evening since the day of dedication, we have conducted religious services in Spanish for members of the community and Unit members, with frequently an attendance of more than one hundred. Unit members and friends of the Unit share in the conducting of the services. On Sunday afternoon there are several Sunday School classes conducted in Spanish for the children and young people of the community.

During the month of June, with the help of several Puerto Rican Seminary students, we conducted a two-weeks Bible school for children of the community between the ages of six to twelve years. The first day opened with ninety-six children present, while the highest daily attendance during the session was 103. The climax of the session was the last Sunday evening when the children of the school presented a religious program with parents and friends as guests.

This, then, in part brings to fruition our desire of being able to minister more definitely to the spiritual needs of our Puerto Rican friends. In this valley, now is planted a "Traveler's Palm." Here we have a house of God through which, we pray, may flow waters of eternal life. We pray that many may come to dip of the water only Jesus can give.

Relief Projects Open to C. P. S. Men

A number of relief assignments are open to interested C. P. S. men. The Unit at La Plata, Puerto Rico, needs two cooks, one farm hand, one male hospital attendant, and one mechanic. The term of service in Puerto Rico is eighteen months.

A ten-men C. P. S. Unit has been approved for the Philippine Islands. A number of these men are still to be chosen. The term of service in the Philippines is three years. Anyone who feels the call to serve in either places may contact J. N. Byler, Director of Relief.

The Reader Says:

Harold Chance, of the American Friends Service Committee, in a recent pamphlet gives the following reasons for the disintegration of the Friends Peace testimony:

1. The spiritual life out of which pacifism grows is no longer present in sufficient depths to produce pacifists.
2. Our testimonies have become traditional rather than living messages.
3. Non-Quaker community influences are greater than those of the home and the Friends Meeting.
4. Friends-Meetings have become cross-section community churches.
5. Non-Quaker literature and study materials is being used in our First Day Schools and Christian Endeavor Societies.
6. Military toys and 'comics' are to be found in the hands of most Quaker children.
7. Friends academies, which formerly had a sound influence on Quaker youth, have largely disappeared.
8. Pastors have to make a living and cannot speak out on the Quaker peace testimony.
9. Low standards of membership have brought into our Quaker groups large numbers who do not understand our historic position with regard to war and peace.
10. Friends have failed to instruct their children in Quaker principles.
11. Quaker literature is no longer read by most young Friends, and they have lost touch with our historic principles.

If you substitute "Mennonite" for "Quaker" and "Friends" (and of course replace the term "pacifist" which we Mennonites are so squeamish about using), would not the same indictment apply in large measure to us Mennonites?

A yearbook which is two years behind times is no yearbook!

People say they want a handbook of statistical information with the LATEST statistics, directory service, district organization, officers, and institutions. Do you agree?

In order that the 1947 YEARBOOK may include fresh, 1946 figures and reports, the editors feel that it might be best to plan on publishing it just a bit later this year—say, about February 1 or 10. Then, if you want to know ACCURATELY who is pastor where, what the name of a certain church is, how to spell the name of a certain official, you HAVIT—and you have it up to date!

regular meals. A sad record is confirmed in a report of one kindergarten stating that out of 40 children 17 are TBC suspects.

At this first distribution of flour we thought it our duty to consider first of all such institutions of this city which are looking after children in the age of 3 to 14 years.

This consignment was an encouraging help, a new hope after the extremely hard and long winter months and we all were happy to realize that there was still love and charity among Christian Brethren living far across the ocean, who want to be nothing but helpful and do all they can to make forget the war.

Discharges from C. P. S.

Selective Service advises that all men inducted in 1945 are eligible to take their physical examinations and submit their applications for discharge immediately. None of these men eligible for discharge will be allowed to take furlough prior to their discharge. Discharges are to be effective December 10, 1946. This development brings Civilian Public Service population down to a comparatively small figure. It will leave 145 men under Mennonite Central Committee administration, 34 under the Brethren Service Committee and a small number in camps under Government administration. A total of approximately 205 men will remain in CPS after December discharges are effected.

YOUNG PEOPLE like the MENNONITE, because:

1. It stimulates thinking and commitment
2. It summarizes news and activities
3. It challenges to Christian adventure

But, they must read it first. If you can't send them a gift subscription for a full year, how about a three-months' subscription? or a two months' trial subscription? Or 10 months for a dollar!

Rev. and Mrs. Elmer J. Dick Write from Africa

(The following letter was sent to Rev. Howard G. Nyce, Secretary of the Foreign Mission Board. In view of the interest it may have for others, Brother Nyce submitted it for publication. The Dicks' address is: Kalomba Via Tshikapa, Kasai District, Congo Belge, Africa. The letter was written August 19.)

Since our recent arrival on the mission field of Africa we have been able to make a few silent observations of the church of Africa, though we have not been able to do much in the line of working with them as yet.

The outstanding observation is the transformation of the life of one of these who believes unto salvation. As one compares one of these redeemed ones with his heathen brothers one cannot help but marvel at the difference that a living faith in the Almighty Saviour makes.

Even though there is such a transformation, one is continually reminded that they are not yet perfect. Though they are accepted in Christ their walk is not always acceptable to Christ. Satan is continually seeking his opportunity to bring one of these to fall. But is that not also true of the American Christian? Furthermore, is that not also true even of ourselves? The Apostle Paul has rightly said when he wrote, "Let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall." Before we conclude this thought we must emphasize the importance of intercession in behalf of the brethren. The African Christians definitely need the prayers of the American brethren in Christ.

As we are getting more and more into the work from day to day we are led to thank our Lord more and more for the high and holy calling with which He called us to this needy field of Africa. For many years we have been convinced that God's entire plan for this life centers around missions. But since we have been able to observe the work of missions we have become more and more convinced of this great and important truth.

To date, our time is being spent mainly in language study. There are many many station duties which can be taken care of without the knowledge of the language. These duties are so numerous that one must be careful lest one sacrifice his language study in behalf of them, even though they are very essential.

Becoming acclimated has not had too serious an effect on us thus far. No doubt our trip up the Nile has helped us in gradually getting used to new climatic conditions.

In examining the reports of our out-station workers and supervisors we are definitely reminded of the words of Jesus, "The fields are white to harvest but the reapers are few." It causes us to look forward eargerly to the day when the language barrier will have been overcome and we will be able to minister freely to the needs of these poor people.

A very profitable and blessed time was spent August 3-6 at Nyanga at our annual conference. We believe, we all returned to our stations and responsibilities with a more sincere determination to put forth even more efforts to carry out the Lord's will. We were especially privileged to have Rev. Rediger in our midst during this time, feeling that it will help us to work more unitedly with the faithful ones at home. Thanksgiving Day in Friesland

BY DENNIS LEHMAN

Upon entering the rustic gate to Colonia Friesland, Paraguay, in the month of May one first noticed a mound of red clay, which was quite unlike the large red ant hills which spot the country-side like five-foot inverted thimbles, for this mound was about fifteen feet long and had been made very recently. In passing down the lane a little farther on another such mound is seen by the roadside next to the cotton field. These are grass-hopper graves and the colonists will tell you how they spend day after day chasing grasshoppers almost futilely as in most parts they saw the entire cotton crop disappearing. With the cotton went also the vegetable gardens and the foliage on the fruit trees, but already the fields had been planted again and hectare after hectare of kaffir was ready to harvest, an abundant harvest. How disappointing when it rained almost without ceasing and the fields became soft and the kaffir began to sprout, mold and rot. Again there was no market value for the cash crop. Ordinarily two crops are harvested each year, but as Thanksgiving Day approached one could not help but think of the two past years of crop failures.

(Thanksgiving time in Paraguay is in our spring season. The Mennonites in Paraguay celebrate a harvest festival although it has a different background from our pumpkin, turkey, cranberry sauce Thanksgiving. Dennis Lehman, the writer, is one of the M.C.C. workers in Paraguay. He is from Berne, Indiana.)

During the months of May or June after the summer harvest the Friesland Mennonites set aside one Sunday to give thanks to God for His blessings bestowed upon them. About four hundred people gather at one of the Colony churches, which during the week serve as school buildings, and hold services all day long. Besides the Thanksgiving sermons there are many recitations, and the highlight of the services—beautiful singing by the village choirs.

Their sermons this year, 1946, were particularly touching, indicating the faith and courage of the Paraguayan Mennonites. For the ministers reminded the people that although they had had drought, excessive rains, crop failures, and grasshoppers they still had something to eat; whereas in so many parts of the world people are at this time starving to death. Letters, which had been received by relatives of fleeing Russian Mennonites stationed in Germany, were read to the entire group. It was particularly fitting that these colonists were giving thanks to God for that which they had and expressed an eagerness to receive as many as possible of these European refugees and share with them of their depleted larder.

For Thanksgiving Day the church is decorated with strings of the fruits of the season hung from the ceiling and around the windows. What a strange assortment composes these decorations—oranges, grapefruit, huge mandioca, cotton balls and wreaths, maiz, kaffir, squash, bananas, rice, rosella, poinsettias, lemons, peanuts, radishes, and mammons. After the church services these are auctioned off for a mission offering. For the noon-day meal at the church all of the people are served zwieback (a kind of roll) and coffee. Zwieback require white flour which at times is not available. This explains why it was measured out so very carefully and rationed to the different homes where the mothers baked the Thanksgiving dinner on Saturday afternoon. The coffee was made at the church by boiling the water in large butchering kettles and the coffee grounds are put in tea kettles to which the boiling water is then added. Everyone can be served quickly and easily.

Is it true that the greater the abundance which we have the more insincere and mechanical become our thanksgiving prayers, sermons and songs? The greater the abundance which we have the weaker becomes our faith, our courage, and our will to share and help in proportion to our abundance? Here we have seen an unshakable faith an unmatched sincerity and a will to help almost beyond that which they are able.

In July, a military report covering the American zone of Germany said the average weight of the German civilian has dropped to the lowest point since the occupation began. Reports from Japan state that the coming winter will be a very difficult one.

Early Thanksgiving Dishes

By WALTER K. PUTNEY

Would you smack your lips if you saw mother preparing beans, succotash, and a thick soup made from beans, peas, corn and pumpkin? That is what our earlier people had for their Thanksgiving dinner, besides fish, turkey and perhaps a bear steak.

Strangely, pumpkins and beans were not very popular with the earliest settlers because of the fact that they had to eat so much of that kind of food during their days of struggle for existence. But both pumpkins and beans retained their places and came to be regarded with great favor. It may seem strange to you that anybody would relish a good plate of backed beans at Thanksgiving. Did you know that backed beans were introduced to the white people by the Indians? They baked their beans, almost as we do today, in pots made from clay. They also taught the white people how to cook beans and corn in that popular dish known as succotash; they gave the pumpkin to the settlers and taught them how to stew, boil, bake and dry pumpkins and one of the dishes, called awkward food, was used by people for more than two centuries after the colonies were settled.

Awkward food looked like anything but bread but that was what it was. Indian meal—or corn meal—was mixed with the flesh of pumpkin and baked in loaves. The name, awkward, probably was given because it could not be easily handled because it fell apart.

Thanksgiving was first appointed as a day of real gladness that the settlements had survived a harsh winter, people regained health and the harvest of the fall was abundant. The Indians held a fall feast, known as the Corn Dance. This was a full week of celebration and thanks were given to the Great Spirit for giving the red men a generous harvest of corn.

Popular with the Indians were dishes prepared from corn, beans and pompions, as the Indians called the pumpkin. Baked beans, flat baked corn cakes, beans and corn stewed together into a dish we now call succotash, and pumpkins baked, stewed, boiled and mixed with other things all had their places in the feasts of the week.

The colonists, when they held Thanksgiving celebrations, copied much from the Indians and ate of the same dishes used by the red men when the latter held their great corn feast in the fall. Later people, carrying on the customs, retained the use of baked beans, boiled corn and beans and the use of pumpkin. These, together with game birds, meat and fish, made up the old time Thanksgiving dinner.

An interesting fact in connection with pumpkin pies is that what we now consider as a fine Thanksgiving pie would have been called a tart a hundred or more years ago. A pie to those early people was something that was baked in a very deep dish, much as we make our meat pies today. There was no under crust and often other vegetables were on top, to help fill the dish and make the pie taste more palatable. It was not until the last century that modern pies became popular and the old fashioned pie went out of style. In reality, the old time pumpkin pie was nothing but a deep dish of baked pumpkin flesh, covered with thick crust.

For many years it was the custom to place beside each plate, five kernels of corn to remind people of the hardship of our first settlers who were actually reduced to that much corn per day when food was so scarce. —Pilot.

Youth Activity in Other Churches

(Doubtless there are times when all of us wonder how other people are doing the job or are carrying on in the work we are doing. Farmers go to see how other farmers do their work, musicians listen to other musicians, and preachers visit other churches. With this in mind, a plan to run a series of articles on the young people's organizations of other churches than our own is being inaugurated with this issue. These articles are descriptive of the problems, methods, and motives which have caused these young people's organizations to operate. It is hoped this will be helpful to local young people's groups as well as leaders in furnishing new ideas and a deeper appreciation of fellow Christian groups. Ed.)

YOUTH ACTIVITY IN THE CHURCH OF THE NAZARENE

By Lauriston J. Dubois, General Executive Secretary

The youth organization of the Church of the Nazarene is known as the Nazarene Young People's Society. While not exactly a fellowship organization as this is known in many denominations, it does head up the youth activity program of the church.

The basic unit of the N.Y.P.S. is the unit in the local church. There are 2,315 of these groups in the United States, Canada and the British Isles. Each group meets at least once a week, usually on Sunday evening prior to the evening service.

The membership of the local N.Y.P.S. is made up of active and associate members between the ages of twelve and forty. According to the Constitution:

"Active members shall be young people who are members of the Church of the Nazarene and who sign the pledge for active members."

"Associate members shall be young people not members of the Church of the Nazarene who give testimony to the saving grace of Jesus Christ, and who are of good moral character, and who sign the pledge for associate members."

There is also a provision for honorary members who shall be "older members of the Church of the Nazarene who desire to be affiliated with the society and who shall be elected as honorary members by the society, or by one of its departments."

In order to meet the needs of the wide age-span provided for in the constitution, a provision is made whereby local societies can departmentalize their groups according to their local situation. The general pattern of departments is as follows: Intermediate (ages 12, 13, 14); senior (ages 15, 16, 17); young people (ages 25-40).

A society may organize from two to four departments. A smaller group that needs all of its "youth" to man its activities finds it possible to use the older group. A larger society can place its emphasis upon its intermediate and senior young people, and still not lose the young adults to the total program of the society. A society may organize the departments it feels are wise and may combine any of the groups as outlined.

"In order to simplify the many references to the departments and to their members and to make for ease in publicizing their various activities, names have been selected for each of the groups. Beginning with the oldest and moving to the youngest these names form an acrostic of the letters N.Y.P.S. and are NAVIGATORS, YOKEMATES, PIONEERS, and SENTINELS. This further emphasizes the basic purpose in the departmental program in which each department is an integral part of the whole and all together the departments make up the N.Y.P.S."

Officers are elected for the N.Y.P.S. as a whole and also for each department in particular. Departmental officers are responsible for the functioning of the department and the department's relationship to the total program. Society officers are responsible for the functioning of the departments and for the contacts with the district and general program. A "planning conference" of all departmental executive committees and the N.Y.P.S. officers meets several times during the year.

Besides the weekly devotional program the local society plans activities of fellowship, evangelism, visitation and service. The "object of the society shall be to build up its members in Christian experience and in holy character, and to instruct them in the doctrines of the church, and to bring about the salvation of other young people. The activities of this society shall be distinctly religious and spiritual."

There is a very close relationship between the N.Y.P.S. and the other agencies working with youth in the local church.

The district program is organized along the same geographical lines as the church proper. There are fifty-eight functioning districts in the United States, Canada and the British Isles as well as several "missionary districts" in other countries. These districts roughly are equivalent to states although they do not always coincide with the state lines.

The legislative body of the district is the District Convention which is made up of representatives elected from the local societies, the pastors of the local churches, and elected members of the District N.Y.P.S. council. It meets once a year, elects a district council and makes district plans for the year.

The district organizations are very active and have much to do with the general progress of the societies within their borders. They plan for camps and institutes, rallies on the zones, special projects for home missions, literature and generally keep the program moving.

The district keeps in touch with the local societies through personal contacts of the officers and council members and through district bulletins issued in the majority of cases once a month.

The district council is made up of the officers of the district president, vice-president, secretary, treasurer, "teen-age" supervisor, junior supervisor, chairmen of the literature, evangelistic, missionary and stewardship committees and the zone chairmen. This council is the functioning body in the interim between conventions. They take directions from and are amenable to the convention. The general program is organized through the general convention. This convention is made up of delegates elected by the various district conventions according to membership. It meets once every four years and makes over-all plans for the general work of the N.Y.P.S. It elects a general council consisting of seven members elected according to geographical zones and a general president and a general secretary. These with a member from the Board of General Superintendents composes the council.

The council meets once a year and makes the detailed plans for the year and supervises the youth publications and the general promotional material. The secretary maintains an office at the general headquarters of the church and spends full time directing the youth work of the church.

Projects of the general council are spaced to fit with those of the district and the local organizations. Promotional literature is made available for use of the district and local groups. The general secretary edits The Young People's Journal which is a monthly publication featuring articles of inspiration and devotion and workshop ideas for the local societies. The general office also publishes Nyps-O-News a monthly bulletin for district youth leaders.

The general N.Y.P.S. cooperates with the C.R.E.Y. and the U.C.Y.M. and with other interdenominational youth agencies working toward a greater cooperation of Christian youth today. This is true also with the district and local organizations.

The slogan for the N.Y.P.S. for the quadrennium 1944-48 is "Giving Christ to the Nations." The general council, the district organizations and the local societies are convenanting with the total Church of Jesus Christ that they will do their part to bring this to pass in this day of so great opportunity and challenge.

A "Suggestive List for Those Who Desire the Best in Books for Children" has been compiled by Miss Elva Mae Schrock of Nappance, Indiana. This was done by request of the Middle District Conference Committee of Education. This list consists of fourteen mimeographed pages and is intended to be a suggestive guide not an exhaustive collection. For parents with young children, it should be of interest.

Special M.C.C. Session Convenes in Interest European Mennonite Refugees

The Mennonite Central Committee and the members of its Mennonite Aid Section met in joint special session in Chicago on October 31 for the purpose of determining what can be done to assist the Mennonite refugees in Europe who desire to migrate and find new homes. There are an estimated ten thousand such who look to the North American brotherhood for guidance and assistance in finding a new home with opportunity for community and church life in line with their traditional Christian faith and practice. A considerable group of these have already fully committed themselves as desiring to go to Paraguay. The colonist groups in Paraguay have expressed their willingness and readiness to receive up to one thousand of them and to provide for their resettlement and rehabilitation after arrival in Paraguay without further outside help. The government of Paraguay has assured these groups of entry permits.

The Chicago meeting approved the recommendation of its Special Study and Planning Committee that a separate organization, "Mennonite Resettlement Finance, Inc.," be set up as a subsidiary to MCC for the purpose of aiding and assisting in the migration, location, resettlement, and rehabilitation of Mennonite and other individuals or groups served by the Mennonite Central Committee. The new organization will not be a fund raising organization, but will function as a trustee of funds authorized and raised through MCC channels and under principles and policies outlined by the Mennonite Central Committee and will receive, manage, disburse and recollect such funds. Eight brethren were appointed as a Board of Directors of Mennonite Resettlement Finance, Inc.,—E. C. Bender, 1711 Prairie Street, Elkhart, Indiana; J. W. Warkentin, Hillsboro, Kansas; William Snyder, Akron, Pennsylvania; Elvin R. Souder, 210 E. Broad Street, Souderton, Pennsylvania; H. J. Andres, Newton, Kansas; C. A. DeFehr, 78 Princess Street, Winnipeg, Manitoba; Winfield Fretz, North Newton, Kansas; and C. L. Graber, Goshen, Indiana. The Chicago MCC meeting approved proceeding with an initial migration of up to two thousand European Mennonite refugees to Paraguay, which same is to be facilitated as promptly and as economically as can be arranged. Constituent group representatives present assured the cooperation of their groups with the necessary financial support. Plans were outlined and approved for promptly assembling a total of $400,000 to be available as may be needed to facilitate this initial movement to Paraguay. Seventy-five per cent of this total is to come from funds contributed by the several constituent groups and the remaining portion assembled from individuals or groups on a participating ten-year certificate of loan basis. Present indications are that the movement may take place by January, 1947. The necessary funds likely need to be made available during the December 1-April 1 four-month period.

College and Seminary News

FREEMAN JUNIOR COLLEGE

There has been no school the past two weeks since it was the time of the annual corn-picking vacation. Calling it a vacation may be a bit misleading, since most students and faculty members did harder physical work during the two weeks than at most other times. Picking corn was of course the work of the majority. Some of the faculty members tried their hands on this as did the students from foreign countries. On the campus and on the college farm electrical wiring, painting, papering, erecting corn cribs, and fencing were among the faculty projects carried out. Some of the men got in a little pheasant hunting by way of relaxation. Several instructors used the opportunity to visit friends and relatives elsewhere. Miss Franz visited with the Rev. Edmund Miller family in Chicago and with her sister on the Bluffton College campus. Miss Ewert spent her vacation in Chicago visiting her sister and friends at Mennonite Seminary. Mr. Lichti spent part of his vacation in Chicago, and Dr. Gross spent part of his at North Newton, Kansas.

BLUFFTON COLLEGE

The largest crowds ever to attend a Homecoming and Parent's Day celebration helped to make the weekend a great success. Three-hundred-twenty-five attended the Homecoming Banquet in Ropp Hall Saturday evening. Clifton Sprunger, Berne, Indiana, gave the main address, launching the campaign to raise funds for the Auditorium-Physical Education building. The chapel was filled to capacity twice for one act plays which followed the banquet. In the afternoon two touchdowns made by Defiance in the last ten minutes of play defeated Bluffton 12—6. The chapel was filled for the Vesper service Sunday afternoon, with an overflow crowd listening in the corridor with the aid of a public address system. Rev. Russel Mast used as his subject "Five Minutes to Twelve." He stressed the urgency of the present situation and the need for realizing this urgency and for conviction and decision on the part of individuals in meeting it. A reception in Mussellman Library was the closing event in a week end of stimuatlng experiences.

BETHEL COLLEGE

The opening number of the Memorial Hall Series of educational entertainment for 1946-47 was presented November 12 by Maurice Eisenberg, outstanding concert artist and head of the violin-cello department in the New York College of Music, whose appearances during his two-day visit on the campus were much appreciated. Subsequent numbers will be: Norman Thomas, statesman, November 26; Westminster Choir, February 10; Mordecai Johnson, educator, February 25; Janet Bush Opera Quartet, March 11, and Stuart Chase, economist, April 9. The heavy ticket sale makes possible a season ticket for one dollar plus tax. Lecturers appearing to smaller campus audiences this fall quarter have included: Bruce

Thomas, foreign correspondent; Marce Reyes, Filipino lecturer and entertainer; Edgar C. Raine, authority on Alaska; Wilfred Wellock, British journalist; and Art Hook, explorer and deep-sea diver. A number of outside speakers — visiting ministers and alumni — have also addressed the student body during chapel periods.

Jottings

—First Mennonite Church, Bluffton, Ohio: Foreign countries continue to present needs. This community has sent 2,885 cans of fruits and vegetables. Of this amount the First Church contributed 576 cans. The Ebenezer and First Church have sent vegetables and eggs to the Seminary group in Chicago. The church ladies of Ebenezer and Bluffton have raised $186.00 toward a Walk-in Refrigerator for Ropp Hall. Many women's organizations of the conference will help in this project. The homes of this community will help the college entertain the guests during the Bible lectures. The lectures begin November 17, given by Dr. Allen G. Wehrli of Eden Theological Seminary, Webster Grove, Missouri. During the same week there will be a Minister's Conference and a Woman's Missionary Conference. Peace contests have been held in the churches of the town. This is a fine practice for our young people. College prize winning essays are used. We have not missed a year of contest for twenty years. —Corr.

—Alexanderwohl Mennonite, Church, Goessel, Kansas: Twelve delegates and Rev. P. A. Wedel represented our church at the Western District Conference. Our pastor, Rev. P. A. Wedel, presided at the Minister's Conference and has been elected again for next year. Since June 5, nineteen marriages have been announced from the pulpit. On October 6, the new Sunday School year started with Randolf Schmidt and Erwin Reimer as Sunday School superintendents. A Ladies' Chorus has been organized and the Young People's Mission Band has again started its work. On November 3, the church observed Holy Communion. In the afternoon Rev. P. A. Wedel spoke at the mission festival at the Springfield K.M.B. Church. In the evening he started a series of evangelistic services at the Hutchinson Church. Thanksgiving week he will be ministering to the Hillsboro Mennonite Church. The ladies of the church canned 1,325 quarts of meat last week at Hesston for relief. —Wanda Schmidt, Corr.

—First Mennonite Church, Sugarcreek, Ohio: The ladies of the church cooperated in canning 128 quarts of apple sauce and eighteen quarts of pears this past week. A large part of this will go the Mennonite Biblical Seminary at Chicago. The rest will go to Bluffton. Rev. Harry Yoder of Bluffton Collge was our guest pastor here last Sunday. He took back with him a carload of canned fruit and vegetables which were donated and processed by the church people. Rev. Stauffer, our pastor, just returned from attending the Western District Conference. —Wiley McDowell, Corr.

—Zion Mennonite Church, Souderton, Pa.: Guest speakers at evening services during the past month include Rev. Harry Yoder who showed pictures of Bluffton College, Rev. George Stoneback from the Fairfield Mennonite Church, and Mr. Floyd Moore, a Quaker on the faculty of Guilford College, who is now enroute to Palestine. Our missionary, Samuel T. Moyer, visited our congregation on Sunday, October 27 and brought the morning message.. We were fortunate to have Dr. Cornelius Krahn of Bethel College with us this year for the Annual Bible Lectures, November 3 to 8. The illustrated lectures on the theme "The History of our Faith" were interesting and of great value. Through them we were again reminded of our responsibility to the noble heritage that is ours. —Corr.

—Immanuel Mennonite Church, Delft, Minnesota: On November 7, our Ladies Mission Society entertained the ladies of the Gospel Mennonite Church of Mountain Lake with a joint Thanksgiving program in our church, followed by a lunch and social hour. On November 17, we will have our annual Harvest and Mission Festival. Our guest speaker will be Rev. Alvin Becker of Woodburn, Indiana. On October 13, in the evening, occured the marriage of Myrtle Fast to Abe F. Schultz. On October 27, Miss Lenora Klaassen was married to Eugene Muller. —Martha Baerg, Corr.

—Grace Mennonite Church, Enid, Oklahoma: We have had almost a weeks rainy and cool weather, but it cleared today, November 6, and once again we have sunshine. In the first part of September Mr. and Mrs. John Epp and son left us and moved to Liberal, Kansas. We do miss them a great deal. On September 22, our church had the privilege of having Miss Elizabeth Foth, New York, and Rev. and Mrs. Erwin Wedel, from Jackson, Mississippi, with us in the evening to tell us of their work. Monday afternoon the Rev. Rahns took them to Meno. A week or two ago Rev. and Mrs. Rahn had company from Mountain Lake. They were Mr. and Mrs. Emil Rupp and children. Mrs. Rupp is a sister to Rev. Rahn. Delegates sent from our church to the Western District Conference were Rev. Rahn and Mr. Sam Jantzen. Last Sunday Adolph Koehn was home with his folks, the Fred Koehns, of Liberal, Kansas. Our town has the county fair on this week. —Corr.

—Bethany Mennonite Church, Kingman, Kansas: Rev. H. P. Fast, of Orienta, Oklahoma, will conduct revival meetings in the Bethany Mennonite Church located 12 miles southeast of Kingman, Kansas, beginning Sunday evening, November 17, to Friday, November 22. Miss Elsa E. Grantland spoke in our church Sunday evening, October 20, relating of her mission work at Paint Rock, North Carolina. Sunday P. M., October 27, Dr. E. G. Kaufman gave a very vivid description of conditions in Europe.

—Butterfield Mennonite Church, Butterfield, Minnesota: Our Pastor, Rev. Paul Tschetter, is attending the conference of the Grace Bible School in Omaha, Nebraska, this week. The Ladies Mission Society has sent 534 pounds of clothes, including twenty-five home made quilts, for relief, an estimation of four hundred and seventy dollars. —Mrs. Gust. Miller, Corr.

—Second Mennonite Church, Paso Robles, California: On October 27, thirty members of our Sunday School responded to an invitation given by Rev. and Mrs. Chris Ummel to give a program that afternoon in the Farm Labor Supply Camp at Shafter. The program consisted of songs by the Primary children, an illustrated lesson by the Juniors, or missionary play and a muiscal number by the Young People, an object lesson, scripture reading and prayer, and general singing. Monday evening, November 4, Rev. J. R. Barkman, of the Grace Children's Home, showed pictures and told of their work. —Mrs. W. N. Claassen, Corr.

—First Mennonite Church, Lima, Ohio: We have started a weekly Children's Bible Hour. We were encouraged by the increased attendance the second week. The Women's Mission Society is sewing one day each month for relief work. In the afternoon we have a short program. —Mrs. R. E. Bixel, Corr.

—First Mennonite Church, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania: Rev. Wesley Ewert has consented to become our pastor. He will serve over weekends until through with his seminary work at Hartford, Connecticut, in May, at which time he will take up full-time pastoral duties. On October 25, the Lord called home Mrs. Anna Elliott, one of our Sunday School teachers in the Primary department for many years. She had also served as its superintendent part of that time. Her husband and three children survive. Our Sunday School Mission offering for the last quarter in the fiscal year amounted to $110.00, the total for the year ending October 31, was $630.24. —Mrs. H. S. Weiss, Corr.

—First Mennonite Church, Newton, Kansas: Our evangelistic meetings came to a close Sunday evening, November 10. Our guest speakers were Missionary Marvin Dirks, Sunday and Monday; Rev. R. R. Brown of Omaha, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, both afternoon and evening; and Rev. Theodore Epp, Lincoln, Nebraska, Sunday morning and evening assisted by Rev. Melvin Jones. May God grant that these services will be a blessing to the Church and a help for the salvation of souls. Besides buying a parsonage and soliciting funds to pay for the same, we are working on an extensive relief program. A carload of flour and C.A.R.E. packages, food boxes, dried fruit, powdered milk are the projects undertaken. Let us give cheerfully of that which the Lord has entrusted to us and help suffering humanity. —Corr.

—Bethel Mennonite Church, Waka, Texas: Since Rev. and Mrs. Gerhard H. Neufeld, who served our church during the summer months, have left us and moved to Meno, Oklahoma, where Rev. Neufeld is superintendent of O. B. A., we have again been without a pastor. However, starting November 10, Rev. Richard Yordy of the (Old) Mennonite Church, Perryton, Texas, will come and serve us two Sunday afternoons a month. Mr. and Mrs. Herman Wiebe and children attended the Western District Conference at Beatrice. This territory has received lots of moisture this fall. —Mrs. Herman Wiebe, Corr.

—Bally, Pa.: The Hereford church was crowded on the morning of November 3. The occasion was the twenty-fifth anniversary of Dr. Elmer E. S. Johnson's pastorate of this church. During Sunday School Dr.. Johnson was the special guest of the Primary Department. Rev. Paul R. Shelly, a son of the congregation, presided during the morning worship service. Dr. John E. Hartzler, of Goshen, Indiana, and a professor at Hartford Theological Seminary, brought the morning message, speaking on "Unfinished Temples." Other representatives from Hartford Seminary, where Dr. Johnson served for so many years as Professor of Church History, were the Dean of the Seminary, Dr. Tertius van Dyke, and Rev. Willard Carter, assistant to the President. Rev. Shelly presented the congregation's gift to Dr. Johnson. This was a substantial check and a scroll. The Ladies Aid Society and the Adult Bible Class, of which Dr. Johnson is the teacher, presented him with a bouquet of twenty-five chrysanthemums. Following the service a hemlock tree was planted on the grounds in commemoration of the anniversary. About 150 members and friends enjoyed the covered dish luncheon at noon, at which service various representatives paid tribute to Dr. Johnson.

—A daughter, Karen Ann, was born to Rev. and Mrs. Wilbert A. Regier of Pratum, Oregon, on October 13.

—The Glicks Seed Farm Cannery, Smoketown, Pa., was used last winter for canning around a total of 48,941 cans of meat for relief, according to an interesting report by the Lancaster County Committee for Food for Relief. —The Trustees of the Western District Conference met at the General Conference Headquarters on Sunday afternoon, November 9.

—Henry Plett, a member of the church at Turpin, Oklahoma, was a visitor at General Conference Headquarters on Monday, November 11. —The New Hopedale Church, Meno, Oklahoma, has voted to adopt the 100 Per Cent Church Paper Plan, according to a report by one of the members.

—Rev. Andrew Shelly of Kitchener, Ontario, conducted special meetings in the Buhler Mennonite Church, Buhler, Kansas, from November 3 to November 8. The other Mennonite churches of the community participated in the services. Rev. Shelly also spoke at Hesston College, and Tabor College.

The morning session emphasized missionary education in the children's work of our churches. Miss Frieda Lehman of Berne led this discussion. Miss Elma Sprunger and Miss Evelyn Stuckey, both of Berne, who were sent as delegates by the conference to the Winona School of Missions last June, gave reports on their experiences there. Other speakers heard throughout the day were Miss Myrtle Wasser of Bedminster, Pa., now a student at Bluffton College, who spoke of her work in a mental hospital this past summer; Dr. and Mrs. Herbert E. Dester who effectively described their work in India; and Rev. and Mrs. Archie Graber who gave an interesting message on the work in Africa.

The nominating committee presented the following ballot: Miss Elma Sprunger, chairman; Miss Elva Schrock, vice-president; Mrs. William Turner, Topeka, corresponding secretary; Mrs. John Weaver, recording secretary; Mrs. N. A. Goldsmith, Grabill, treasurer. These officers will serve the conference for the coming year. The Eighth Street Church of Goshen extended an invitation for the 1947 Conference. According to the custom established two years ago, the conference is sending Miss Elva Schrock and some girl to be selected by the Nappanee society as representatives to the Winona School of Missions this coming June.

The two offerings taken at the afternoon and evening sessions amounted to $400.00. After all expenses are paid, this will be divided between the work in India and that of Africa. —Mrs. G. M. Stoltz.

The First Session of the Pacific District Conference

BY DAN J. STEINER

On May 25, 1896, the first Pacific District Conference and Sunday School Convention (three days) was held in the Baptist Church in Pratum, Oregon, then known as Enger. Ministers John B. Baer (reiseprediger), Samuel F. Sprunger, J. J. Balzer, Christian Kaufman, Paul R. Aeschliman, Jacob R. Schrag, Abe A. Sommer, Deacon Peter P. Steiner and laymen Jonas A. Amstutz, were instrumental in perfecting the organization of the Mennonite Pacific District Conference. A well prepared program was rich and brimful with good things to enjoy. The discussions were lively and to the point and were well taken. The fellowship was outstanding.

Rev. S. F. Sprunger served as chairman (vorsitzer) and Rev. J. J. Balzer as secretary. The united choir of thirty-five voices from Eugene, Dallas, and Pratum, under the leadership of Dan J. Steiner, aided much in making the large gathering a grand success. The meetings were greatly enjoyed throughout the session.

Those were indeed "horse and buggy days." Guests from far and near, Eugene and Dallas and surrounding community, came on their hacks and spring wagons. The horses from a distance were turned out in Wm. B. McCallister's pasture where there was running water (Pudding River). Dan Schrag's team of Eugene got away—someone had left the gate open. They wandered around for three days looking for them when they finally located one at Harrisburg near the Santiam Ferry on its way home and the other one a few miles from Pratum. None of the farmers had phones then in these parts of the good old U.S.A.

Our farmers were all pioneers; some still lived in log houses and others in small frame buildings. They had little room to entertain guests; however, the visiting ministers from the East and South were provided for in the homes, while the local guests from Eugene and Dallas brought blankets and pillows along and were comfortably quartered in the Pratum warehouse. An

From the editor's point - of - view:

A REAL THANKSGIVING is asked for by an editorial in the "Christian Century" which states, "Some Americans who ordinarily eat 3,500 calories of food a day will gorge themselves on Thanksgiving Day this year. But others will share this occasion for gratitude . . . with the hungry children of Europe and Asia . . . Last winter at least 6,000,000 died in Europe alone, and in the coming winter an even greater toll may be taken . . . To all of us the unanswered cry of hungry children is the bitterest sound in the world."

ADVENT, as a season of expectancy of salvation, is suggestive of the fact that Christ came to save sinners. The Saviour pointed out, "Those who are well have no need of a physician, but those who are sick; I came not to call the righteous, but sinners." He made clear that the good shepherd leaves the ninety-and-nine to go after the one that has strayed. He had a particular concern for those who were down and out in sin. He wanted to help the helpless. Today there are still those who find life a terrible mess or a crushing problem. They are the lonely individuals, the ones whom the general program of the Church does not heal. The program of the Church today seems to emphasize the ninety-and-nine and not the one who has strayed. Sermons and services are more for the saints than for the sinner. Ministers in most cases mix more with the saved than with the unsaved. The Master's emphasis is not widely prevalent today, and the one out of the hundred remains lost in the wilderness of life's problems. Encouraging is the fact that there is a growing number of shepherds who, by accepting troubled people as they are, make plain that "Christ receiveth sinful men." Many an individual lost in confusion and frustration is expectantly looking for The Light. It is up to the Christian Church not to disappoint those who are expecting salvation.

MOTIVES, man's inner sources of action, might well receive more study. Since people are frequently troubled by what they consider as the unseemly behaviour of others, they would benefit by knowing the sources of such behaviour, by knowing "what is in back of it all." To know that a car is troubling is important; to know what is causing that trouble is even more important. In human relationships we are frequently impressed by the troublesome nature of some behaviour, but the causes of it remain mostly hidden and are not very diligently sought after. To hold that we should not question the motives of people does not necessarily mean that we should not seek to understand them. We need to understand if we are to forgive. We are told that to understand them. We need to understand if we are to forgive. We are told that to understand all is to forgive all. Since forgiveness is such a very vital necessity for right human relationships, it would seem that concentration upon motives would be a very worthy endeavor for Christians. A child brought up with a keen and clear appreciation of its own wants and wishes and the wants and wishes of others would probably achieve a very mature understanding. "Motive" is the name of a very vigorous and unconventional paper published for the college youth of one of the largest denominations in the United States. It seems that a comprehension and understanding of motives is a necessary step in the solution of behaviour problems. Jesus Christ, our Saviour, knew what was in man. Do his witnesses have an obligation to be somewhat like him also in this respect?

A CHANCE TO GET TOGETHER through play is something which young people want and need. Play is not so much an end in itself in a great many cases as a means towards an end. Young people like to get together. Play gives them a chance to do so in a way that saves them from awkwardness and handicapping self-consciousnesses. Play helps people to fit together. Young people have an urge to fit in. If they live in a community where there is no acceptable social way of learning to fit together, they will be frustrated. As a result some may never learn and others in the attempt to learn will try methods that are rather unwise. Now parents are anxious that their children solve their own problems successfully, but frequently they have so many problems of their own to face that they forget about the problems of young people. This is natural but not helpful. A young writer exclaims. "Someone in each community needs to make the social life of the young people their special concern so that a creative dynamic program of activity is carried out. Those communities having all this are indeed blessed."

Should the Pastor's Wife Entertain All the Guests?

by Mrs. Earl Salzman

It must always needs be the task of every minister's wife to decide just how much time she should devote to her home and how much to the social and religious life outside the home. She, perhaps, of all women has the rather peculiar problem of being a mother and homemaker with all the duties of every other homemaker in the church, but added to this she has very definite responsibilities to the church and to the community. Fortunate is the pastor's wife who can early decide just what place each should hold in her busy life.

Whatever her decision shall be, she must not neglect her work as a homemaker and as a hostess to guests who come to that home. Should she entertain all those who are guests of the church? This surely can be answered with a decided NO, not all of them.

The reasons one must give a decided no to this are of course varied and only a few may be given. You will be able to add others from your own local experience. Many guests come to the church who have relatives and close friends among the members. They naturally will prefer to visit with them while in the community, so after paying their respects to the parsonage they become the guests of their friends. The wise woman of the parsonage will graciously grant this.

Then there are times when the minister's wife is not physically able to take her place as hostess to all the guests who come to a church within a year's time. Usually there are many of them and sometimes the stay is a number of days. Then may I say there should be those in the church who will graciously and gladly open their homes to relieve her of the responsibility.

Then again the minister may have a family of small children, and with such a family, whether it be a minister's or otherwise, there is more or less noise and confusion. Guests may come who desire quiet and less commotion than is found in the home where there are small children, where the telephone rings continually and where there are many interruptions by the ringing of the doorbell. Places of quiet may be found in the home of some of the church members, and this gives the pastor's wife more time to look after her children.

Also there may be a home in the church which the pastor feels needs the presence for a few days of just such a personality as is found in a certain guest who has arrived. They may be able to bring untold blessing and pleasure to many such a home. There again the pastor's wife will graciously and gladly ecquiesce in their favor.

However, after all this is said there will be a large number of guests throughout the year that the parsonage will be expected to be hostess to and will desire to entertain. Here again there are a number of reasons why the woman of the manse should entertain many of these people.

Quite a large percentage of those who come are in religious work similar to that of her husband. He will draw much inspiration and strength for his work if he is able to share with them in many of their and his rich experiences. There will be problems to be discussed, and often plans to be formulated. This can be done most effectively by having them as guests in the home.

Then this has been an experience in our parsonage and perhaps it is a slightly selfish reason for wishing to have these guests in our home. The children of the parsonage often profit much from these contacts. There are very few homes in any profession or circle that have coming into them so many ministers, missionaries, college men and women, great leaders of our churches and schools as you will see inscribed in the guest books of many of our parsonages. The conversation at the table and around the fireside in the evening is informational and inspirational and gives to young people a vision of the work and a knowledge of some of the problems. We personally never entertain these guests but what we feel our lives and those of our children have been enriched by these contacts. This may be selfish, I say, but nevertheless what a pleasure, what a blessing and how rewarding.

Then, lastly, most churches expect of the parsonage that it be used for the entertainment of some of these guests. Many of them are built with an extra bedroom which is to be considered as the guest bedroom. I say for the entertainment of some of these guests, not all of them. The church homes may not realize it but they are missing many real and rich blessings by not having these guests in their own homes.

Mrs. Earl Salzman of Upland, California, has had many years experience as a pastor's wife. Rev. and Mrs. Salzman are now serving the First Mennonite Church of Upland.

A Three-Day Jeep Tour

by Helen E. Nickel

The most interesting experience that I have had since arriving and getting acquainted with my new work is the three-day tour into the district. Mr. Ratzlaff and I had both received urgent invitations from the pastor of the Antioch circuit, Tranonidhi Paul, to accompany him when he would go to administer the rites of baptism and the Lord's Supper. We decided to put the jeep to its first test trip, so we wanted to start early Tuesday morning, June 4, to return Thursday evening.

At starting time we were by no means alone. After considerable delay for last minute considerations, thirteen were at last seated comfortably in the jeep; the luggage, household goods and numerous miscellaneous articles plus what we two would need, all this made a little mountain on the trailer, but it was neatly covered with the tarpaulin. The additional passengers were John and Bela Gardia, evangelist; Gyan Master with his wife, Lallo and three sons, the smallest a nineteen-day-old baby; Prem Das Master with his wife, Padma, and two little daughters. Don't forget the lanterns, water canteens and umbrellas twined around our feet.

For some distance the road is good, because it is the much trafficked bus line from Raipur to Sambalput, but after some miles beyond Basna we had to leave the road to reach Gidhli village where two of the couples will live and work. It is not at all impossible that there will be seventy-five children in school here, almost all of them beginners, because a large group of people were recently baptized here. We stayed just long enough to see the living quarters of the workers and to unload their things. It made a difference, less weight and more room with four adults and three children less in the jeep.

Our next stop was at Saraipali, where the Palak of the Salem Church lives with his large family. Then on to Nawapara, almost noon and very hot. Here the pastor of the Antioch circuit, Tranonidhi Paul, and a group of his helpers and village Christians gave us a respectful and typical welcome. Singers with drums came to meet us, selected ones hung garlands of jungle flowers around our necks. Women stood ready with little brass pots of water to pour over our hands, and if desired over our dusty feet. This custom I have learned to appreciate very much because of the extreme heat and dust. A hot meal was ready for us, and then we were allowed to rest for several hours in a clean room in the near-by village Kotidwari. In the meantime the master and his family also got settled.

In the afternoon there was an impressive service. The pastor spoke in Oriya when he gave his message to this group. Many of them were very new converts. At sunset time we went on to Kukri village about two miles distant. In a quiet, rather large and clean courtyard another smaller group of new Christians gathered quickly for a service. The moon was new and gave a faint light; for such parts in the service where it was necessary to read Scripture the one lantern provided the additional light. One woman was baptized; another, plainly suffering from T.B. had insisted on coming to partake of communion, the second time in her life. The table was a thin trunk, covered with a white cloth; the elements the customary unleavened whole wheat bread in a covered enameled plate, and raisin juice in a small brass vessel. This was given out by spoonfuls into the palm of the hand. Explanations were very simple and the response wholehearted. The singing, if it lacked somewhat in melody and harmony, could not have been improved for tempo and volume. All seemed to be prepared for the offering. They brought coins, or an egg, or small leaf or brass cups filled with rice.

Next morning we opened the school in the still uncompleted building which stands midway between Narapara and Kotidwari villages. Twenty-two pupils presented themselves for enrollment. Two village owners were there to grace the occasion. One from Kukri had accompanied four boys from his village. The start came off with a bang,—there may need to be considerable prodding later on to keep up the interest and momentum of teacher, pupils and patrons. Illiteracy is a solid wall which must be broken down. It is not difficult to see why more workers and better supervision in these outlying districts are needed.

I cannot take time to describe each successive experience on that three-day trip. At each place there was something new and challenging; Bastipali, one lone young couple, won to Christ through the witness and teaching of the hospital staff at Jagdeeshpur during a period of illness, the parents now much attracted even though the neighbors are very antagonistic. Bagdwari with a baptismal service for a couple, parents of two children. On to Parkipali and Mandalmal, and over roads which were not worthy of the name. It was evening when we reached Kodopali where the pastor lives. He had been away longer than we, having joined us at Nawapara, now he received the same cordial welcome that we got. His home reflects Christian fellowship, love and zeal for the work of the Lord. Here were the mother, a small daughter, Shushiela, (who, by the way, was the first orphan baby that I adpoted out into this Christian home years ago in Janjgir) and the aged father. The married daughter and her husband had been at home during the hot season and would now return with us to serve at Jagdeeshpur. The pastor's nephew, Monohar, is assistant evangelist and lives with them together with the young wife. Temporarily also a cultured looking fine young man, Piyari Lal, was staying with them. He was of Brahmin caste and recently opposed tradition, false religion, and great social pressure to confess Christ openly. He will attend the Bible Training School at Janjgir because he has the necessary basic education, and it will strengthen his faith.

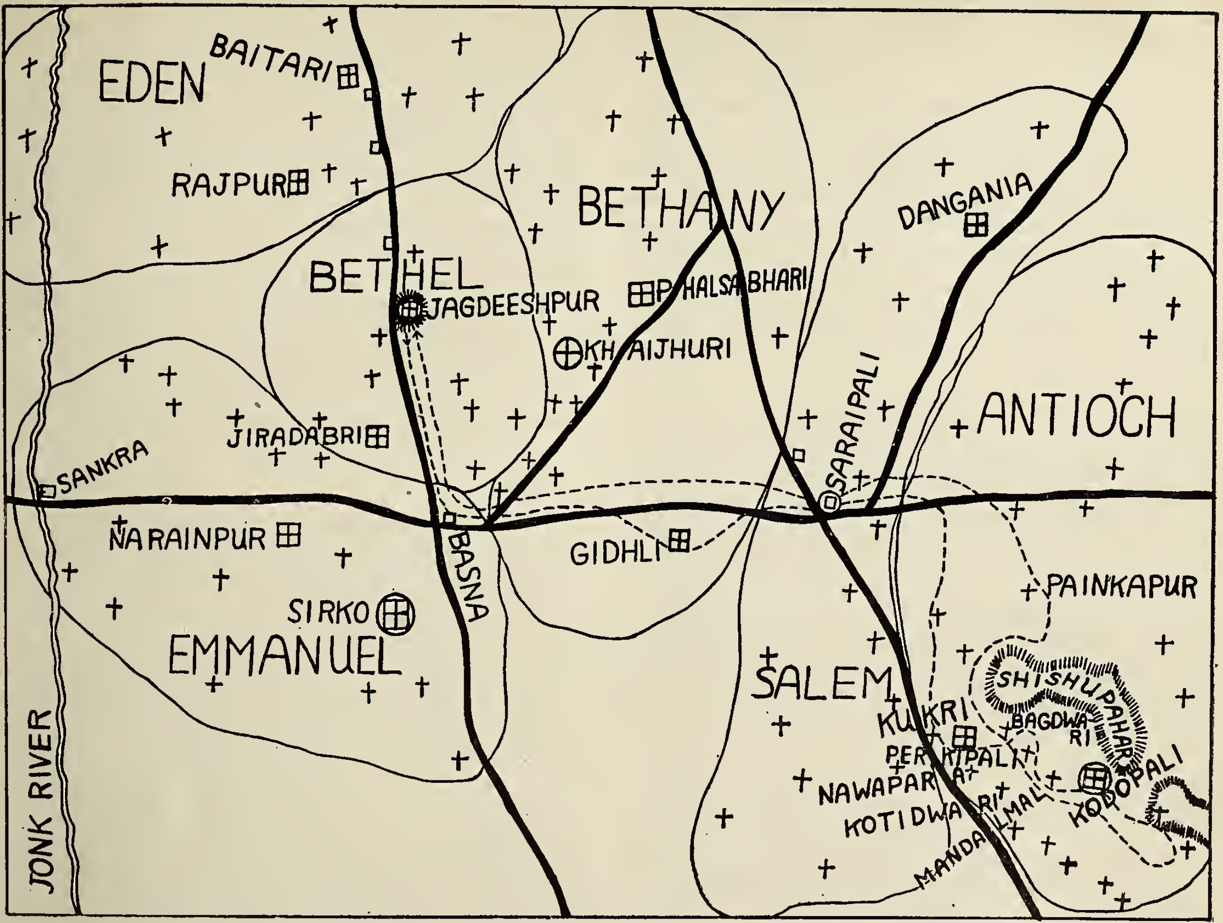
Helen E. Nickel wrote the article, "A Three-Day Jeep Tour" shortly after her return to India at which time she took up her new work at the Jagdeeshpur mission station.

JAGDEESHPUR MISSION STATION AND RURAL AREA



The Jagdeesphur area is approximately thirty-six miles east to west, and twenty miles north to south Six organized church circuits are in this area. They are: Eden, Bethel, Emmanuel, Bethany, Salem, and Antioch. The crosses make the villages in which the Christians live. There are more than a hundred of them. The circles indicate the homes of pastors, or palaks. The squares indicate village schools under church auspices. Jagdeesphur is one of the General Conference mission stations in India. It has a hospital; high, middle, and primary schools, industrial work, fields, orchards, print shop, normal training class, and church. The map above is of July 1. 1946, and was drawn by Helen E. Nickel. It is one of the few maps that we have of our India mission field or parts thereof.

The last day was to prove the most strenuous of all. However, the beauty of the jungle with its variety of trees and shrubs, and the scenic wonder of the hills and mountain, relieved the fatigue and weariness from heat and bumpy driving. The wonder of the fresh green foliage in spite of the sizzling heat. All day, like the day before, we kept in sight the imposing view of the rugged mountain, Shishupahar. Its flattened uppermost section composed of upright, rocky ledges, then a ring of trees, and lower the dark rock formations. At times when we were so near it seemed quite foreboding but at sunset time it was softened and colorful in the light. It is really a large mountain, and by the time we had reached Sahajpani and Pattrapali we had encircled it completely. And over what roads. It is an injustice to expect even a jeep to traverse them. Deep, uneven rutted cart roads, stones without end, dust, open fields with no tracks visible at all, small underbrush of jungle trees, or jutting stumps which made Harold bypass most unexpectedly. Just a few times we had to stop to use picks to hack down banks. Once we got into such a tight place that we had to unhook the trailer, take the jeep through, and finally get everything attached and ready for a fresh start. During the rainy season these roads are practically impassable, even for bicycles. When we went through the narrow pass between two sets of hills, the pastor told us how dangerous it is because of wild animals and robbers. Recently he spied a black bear at close range while cycling; the helper who was running along side got so frightened that he ran back to the village and left him alone.

That morning we had gone for a morning dip in the warm waters of a natural spring about a mile and a half from the pastor's home. Now at four o'clock in the afternoon we were as hot and duty as ever. Glad to get back to Kodopali for tea and sweet jungle mangoes and a half-hour rest period. Then we said farewell and joined in a prayer of praise and petition. This was interrupted by a runner who came bringing a letter requesting the pastor to come to get another village to baptize four believers. How will he be able to reach all of his scattered and needy flock?

On the way back we allowed ourselves just enough time to stop to greet a group of Christians living in Painkapur. To eat a hot evening meal and evade a terrible wind and dust storm, at Saraipali. Here the baby was just one-year-old and the very day of its birth had ushered in the rains last year. Again the skies were heavily overcast with clouds and the "break" might come any time. We were very quiet, tired, and ready to call it a day's work, as we sped over the good road toward Basna. The lights of Jagdeeshpur came into sight at about 9:30. How welcoming they looked! The jeep had passed its first test successfully. The speedometer registered 104 miles, the oil tank showed six gallons less of gas—precious rationed petrol. We had visited at least twelve groups of Christians, had seen the harvest in that four were baptized in our presence. Large groups of eager, new, mostly illiterate Christians had been in the services. Almost three hundred have been baptized since New Year, 1946. What a need for shepherds. What a call for earnest prayer that these may grow in grace and knowledge of their Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ.

BETHEL COLLEGE

The Freshmen held class elections at the end of the first quarter, choosing Melvin Flickinger (Pretty Prairie) as president. Other class presidents, elected at the beginning of the year are: Senior, Roland Bartel (Hillsboro); Junior, Marvin Dyck (Whitewater); Sophomore, Earl Loganbill (California, Missouri). The Urban Sociology class, accompanied by Dr. Fretz, made a recent field trip to Wichita to study the city's ecological pattern and community centers. His class in Consumers' Problems previously made a similar trip to Kansas City to study wholesale and retail businesses. Rupert Hohmann, Sophomore, was presented in a brilliant violin recital before a large audience in the chapel Sunday afternoon. Proofs are being returned of individuals and organizational pictures taken throughout the month for the Graymarron, the college annual. BLUFFTON COLLEGE

A meeting of students and teachers in Home Economics in the colleges of Northwestern Ohio was held on the campus Friday, November 15. Students, on their own initiative, have announced plans to raise at least one thousand dollars in cash toward the Auditorium-Physical Education building fund. Money is to be raised by personal contributions, by benefit programs given by students organizations, and by a student work day. Saturday, November 23, has been set aside as this work day. Students will seek jobs in the community and pay received will be turned over to the building fund. Building plans were given final approval at the meeting of the Board of Trustees November 8. The drive for funds was launched by a speech by Clifton H. Sprunger, Berne, Indiana, at the home coming dinner the next meeting. Solicitation work is to be carried on over a two-year period by regular employees of the college, with such volunteer assistance as may be secured. A number of gifts toward this fund have already been received. The building plans are explained in the November College Bulletin. If you are not on the regular mailing list, a copy may be secured on request.

FREEMAN JUNIOR COLLEGE

During the chapel period on Monday Dr. John R. Schmidt discussed the work of the MCC in Paraguay. It was the report of one thoroughly familiar with that work and was very interesting. Wednesday Rev. George Dick of Bloomfield, Montana, was the speaker. His message was devotional and was an inspiration to everyone. Rev. Dick is well known on the campus. He was the speaker during the annual Bible Week services in the spring of 1945. Mrs. M. J. Woolmann gave a musical program at the weekly YWCA meeting. The academy play, "St. Elmo" by Conway and Evans, was presented Friday night. It was under the direction of Miss Kaufman, head of the speech department. The Cimonoce Emoh Club discussed the use of leisure time at their last meeting.

MATERIAL AID

A news release sometime ago indicated that cash contributions for relief should be channeled through the respective Conference Treasurer. The Conference Treasurer in turn was to forward the donations to Akron with instructions as to where the money was to be used.

In the news release of November 1 the statement was made, "If you should desire to have your blankets purchased in this manner cash contributions may be sent directly to Akron Headquarters." In the light of the first release it should have been stated that anyone wishing to contribute cash for the purchase of blankets should send their cash contributions to the Conference Treasurer, who would in turn forward it to the Akron office for that purpose.

We encourage our constituency to send their relief contributions through their Conference Treasurer. We hope that this will clarify the contradiction in these two releases.

In recent weeks information has been released concerning the names of needy Mennonite families whose names have been forwarded to this office by our workers in Central Europe. It was our suggestion at that time for our people to ask for these names and send to these families eleven-pound gift parcels as a "plus" relief effort.

Additional lists totaling approximately 3,500 names of Mennonite families in Germany have now been received. This brings the total number of names received up to 4,500. Approximately 1,000 of this number have already been sent to persons requesting them.

In light of the new lists received, we would encourage the sending of only one package to the same address. It would be our suggestion to send two packages to two different families rather than two parcels to the same address. If additional requests are received directly from these families, they should be referred to the Akron office in order to avoid duplication.

We would like to again emphasize this project as being an extra effort above the other relief work being carried on. In this way we can give a personal witness to our brethren over and above that of our general relief program.

Personnel Needs

Secretarial and clerical workers are needed at the Mennonite Central Committee office at Akron, Pennsylvania. A secretary who can readily translate from German to English and visa versa with proficiency is urgently needed. If you are interested and feel the call or if you know of someone interested in this service, write immediately to Richard Ebersole, M.C.C., Akron, Pennsylvania. State experience and training, age, church affiliation, name and address of pastor, and names and addresses of three references.

There is need for a construction foreman who would be able to take the initiative in general up-keep of the present buildings at the La Plata Unit in Puerto Rico. The job would include the supervision and construction of various small buildings. Anyone interested should write to J. N. Byler, Director of Relief, M.C.C., Akron, Pennsylvania.

SEND IN NAMES AND ADDRESSES

The New York Mennonite Fellowship has been organized for another year, and regular meetings of worship, inspiration and fellowship are being planned. The meetings are held in the parlors of Biblical Seminary, New York. Speakers are being dated up for the year. Missionaries, relief workers or ministers, who will be in New York or are located near to the city or in the city on business, will be contacted.

The group selected a President and Secretary-Treasurer of the Fellowship. The officers elected for the year are: Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Friesen, 235 East 49th Street, New York, 17, N. Y. They are seminary students and serve as President and Secretary-Treasurer respectively.

All ministers or parents who have members or children in New York are kindly urged to send in the names and addresses to the Friesens. The meetings are held in the evening; this enables working people, students or professional people to attend.

Biblical Seminary is quite centrally located. May the Lord bless the meetings, and may they serve to strengthen the interest and devotion of many to Christ and the Church.—Yours for a worthy Mennonite Fellowship, A. J. Neuenschwander, Secretary, Board of Home Missions, Quakertown, Pa.

WILL YOU JOIN OTHERS IN PRAYER FOR OUR WORK IN TORONTO, ONTARIO?

Early in the summer Rev. Arnold A. Fasts left the Toronto field to enter some college in the United States for further training. During the summer we had Rev. J. A. Dyck, supply the pulpit and look after the work. Now Rev. Dyck is teaching in the Leamington Bible School.

The Church, many friends and the Board were much in prayer asking the Lord to direct us to a possible worker. Recently contact was made with Rev. and Mrs. H. Albert Claassen, Beatrice, Nebraska. Agreement has been made with the church to have Rev. and Mrs. Claassen visit the Toronto field and conduct worship services in the anticipation if all agreed they be asked to take up the work for a time in Toronto.

November 17-24 is the time for the meetings and the visitation, and the Board and the Church desire the prayers of all mission friends that the Lord's will might be discerned and followed.

Thanking you for your prayer interest, I am your Brother in Christ, A. J. Neuenschwander, Secretary, Quakertown, Pa.

A NOTE ABOUT DR. C. E. KREHBIEL

A short time ago, we received the following letter from Brother C. E. Krehbiel, addressed to the members of the Board of Publication:

Dear Brethren:

Apparently the time has come for me to lay down my pen. On October 16, in the evening, I became suddenly ill and the doctor says apparently from a brain blood clot. This makes it impossible for me to continue to edit the Bundesbote.

Therefore with this I am handing you my resignation from a work which has given me no little joy and I hope has been a blessing to many.

May the Lord guide you to His choice of a successor.

Still in His service yours
(Signed) C. E. Krehbiel

Brother Krehbiel has served long and faithfully in many and various capacities in our conference and it is with no small feeling of regret that we have received this information. We know that you share this feeling, as Brother Krehbiel has endeared himself to our whole conference.

It is our sincere wish and earnest prayer that Brother Krehbiel's health might again be fully restored. We are assured that you are joining with us in remembering Brother and Sister Krehbiel.

PRACTICING BROTHERHOOD

The spirit of the good Samaritan is needed not only when our brother man has been physically attacked, but also when differences in education and experience put him at a disadvantage with others or cause him to appear to be a transgressor.

In kindergarten, children learn not merely to listen patiently to both sides of a story, but do so with very little bias of opinion. Daily, they have practice in being kind and fair—the very essence of brotherhood.—National Kindergarten Association.

Youth Activity of the Church of the Brethren

By Harry Bowman
Chairman, National Youth Cabinet,
Church of the Brethren

The youth department of the Church of the Brethren, known as the B.Y.P.D., comprises about thirty thousand young people between the ages of fifteen and twenty-five. Its members are found in almost every state of the Union, the Dominion of Canada, and on other continents to which our missionaries have gone.

The B.Y.P.D. is a division of the Board of Christian Education and is set up on four different levels: local, district, regional and national. The five regions are divided into forty-nine districts which are subdivided into one thousand twenty-one local units.

Nationally the youth work is supervised by a National Cabinet, made up a regional presidents or representatives, the youth director and the editor of youth literature. The National Youth Cabinet is primarily a planning group; however, at times it undertakes to sponsor specific projects.

(This is a second article presenting the work of young people in different denominations. This time it is about the young people in the Church of the Brethren — a church with which we should be rather well acquainted having in common with them the peace position as well as the evangelical faith. Further, our seminaries are affiliated thus giving opportunity for closer contacts. Ed.)

The regional cabinets are made up of youth from the entire region, selected by the whole group. In some regions a representatives from each district is chosen. When this is done, the group elects its own officers. The regional cabinets are largely administrative groups, undertaking all the detailed planning for their specific areas. The regional cabinets are becoming more and more important as a unifier between and districts.

Every district has its own youth cabinet, comprising the regular officers and, in many cases, young people who head up different phases of work, such as worship, Brethren Service, recreational, and newsletter editors. The district cabinets are confronted with more detailed planning and work in closer contact with the local groups than is possible for the regional or national cabinets. Much of the promotion for carrying out the projects suggested by regional or national cabinets is undertaken by the districts.

Naturally, a very important part of the entire organization is the local group. To it falls the task of carrying out the plans and projects of the other cabinets—actual success of the work depends on the large-scale participation of local groups.

To persons not familiar with the organization, this seems to be a rather complicated set-up. After becoming acquainted with the organization, one becomes aware that it developed as a means of efficiently promoting the activities of the youth department and also of stimulating youth to action in service for Christ.

What are some of the projects that these groups have carried out? For the most part they are service projects of some type. Chief among these is the "Summer of Service," or the volunteer service of time. Much of this time is given for work in under-privileged communities, slum areas in our cities, not only to improve the spiritual life, but also to help provide a means of more wholesome existence.

Work camps consumed much of this volunteer service. Young people set up a work camp in some community and work with the local people for several weeks. In many cases these camps continued for an entire summer. We feel much progress has been made thus far, and plans are being made for further development.

Relief is the one project that has been most attractive to our youth. Besides voluntary service in relief centers where relief goods are collected for shipment to distribution points, several specific projects have been undertaken.

Chief among these is the "Heifer Project." This project has been carried on by the entire church, but the young people have promoted it vigorously. Many groups have brought or donated at least one heifer to the project. Plans have been made and put into operation whereby receipts from the sales of the pamphlet, "How to Pray," by E. Stanley Jones, will be used for the heifer project.

The youth department also carried through a soap project for war stricken areas. Accurate reports have not been compiled as yet, but we are happy that huge quantities of soap have been made and donated by our youth groups.

Summer camps play a large part in training and developing our young people. These are not specifically youth projects, but many of the camps are planned and carried through chiefly by the young people. Usually between thirty-five and forty camp-sites are used each summer. At many of these camps there is at least one period of those in the young people's age-group.

Another type of camp, a project far too great for youth but of vital interest to them because of their convictions, is the Civilian Public Service camps. These were established to furnish a place where service of a constructive nature could be given by our young men whose convictions would not allow them to participate in the program set forth by the armed services. Out of these came young men to serve as attendants in mental hospitals, human guinea pigs for research, parachute-jumping forest fire-fighters, and many other jobs of national importance. Many of our young women volunteered as applicants in mental hospitals and other worthwhile service projects.

In addition to supporting these service projects, great financial support is given to the mission program of the church at home and in foreign countries.

Through developing the program of the local group we find we actually have the surest method of accomplishing the desired results in project promotion. Thus four points are mainly stressed in our local program. They are worship, study, recreation and action. Program guides and planned programs are made available to the local groups through the facilities of the national youth headquarters. Program plans are published regularly in "Our Young People," a weekly publication. These furnish excellent material and suggestions for weekly programs, but leave ample room for creative planning.

Local groups and individuals are stimulated to action through youth conferences camps and other group activities. Each year a national meeting is planned other than the meeting of the National Cabinet. Some years these are held along with the regular church conference. In other years special meetings of the representative type are held, allowing only a small number of youth and adults advisers from each district and region. Also, each region sponsors a mass meeting, usually each year, and each district carries out a varied number of mass meetings annually.

New projects, then, may often originate in the local group, and if they seem to work well, they can be promoted through these conferences. Other means of promoting the projects are the regular publications or special literature, and the facilities of the national, regional or district cabinets.

Basically, the trend of thought of youth in the Church of the Brethren is much the same as in the older group, yet there is a profound difference. Although we are a church that stands strongly for peace, only about one-tenth of our boys went to C.P.S. camps. This does not mean that our church has turned from its peace convictions; perhaps we have accepted the tradition too casually and have not instilled in our youth the implications of this belief, which is so vital to our existence.

Our young people are trying to put a more practical application to Christianity. Thus we find young people becoming more interested in relief and rehabilitation, work camps, social issues and political action. Yet our youth seem to be holding on to the spiritual implications of basic Christian theology. On certain types of recreation and social behavior, young people are much more free than were their parents. We, like many other youth, are catering too much to commercialized recreation and not taking the initiative in planning our own more wholesome recreation.

The general trend of thinking is that our program in the future should be a program of postive leadership rather than a negative attitude of don'ts Our program should be presenting things on a higher plane to stimulate youth to strive for the higher and more constructive ideals. We should work for a Christian concept of vocation, with a feeling that our work in our own community is a small part in furthering Christ's teaching.

Cooperation is foremost in the minds of most Brethren youth, for we feel that only through working with other denominations and other people can we hope for survival and growth of Christianity. We feel that through cooperating with other youth we can acquire some of their fine qualities and perhaps share some of our own. We are all working for the same great cause of Christ. Let us all work together and pray that all Christians everywhere will cooperate more effectively as one great body.

Suppose You Try Smiling

Your burden is heavy, I haven't a doubt,
But others have loads they must carry about,
And they are not whining.
Some people are glad if but half of the way
Lies out of the shadow, or part of the day
They see the sun shining.
Suppose you try smiling!

This funny old world is a mirror, you know;
Turn its way with a sneer, or face of a foe,
And you will see trouble.
But meet it with laughter and looks full of cheer,
And back will come sunshine and love true and dear,
Your blessings to double.
Suppose you try smiling!

All places are open to those who are glad,
Too many lack courage, too many are sad.
Those near you need cheering;
So sing with your burden, the way is not long,
And if you look upward your heart will grow strong,
And skies will be clearing.
Suppose you try smiling!

The Magic Word

A Story

Once upon a time, in a far away country which we shall call Adanac, in the little village of Notgnimael, there lived a poor young man called Ali Baba. Now Ali Baba was not always happy, because he lived at the lower end of the village where the sun came up after breakfast and went down right after dinner; and so it was that Ali Baba wandered around in the dark half of the time. And to add to his troubles, he was always looking for something he couldn't find.

Now one day as he sat brooding over his troubles and hatching troubles for everyone else, too, he heard the thud of horses' hoofs outside, and opening the door, he saw that it was his neighbour, Cassim, with some of his friends.

"Ali Baba", sair Cassinm, "It grieves us to see you so unhappy. Day after day you sit with your head under the eavestrough hoping that it will rain so you won't have to work so hard. If you will join our group we will show you a way to be happy."

"That I will gladly do," said Ali Baba, "but what do I do so that I may join your group?"

"That is easy" answered Cassim. "Just give us five srallod (for that was the unit of exchange they used in those days) and come to our meeting place when the third sun has set."

And so it was that when the third sun had set, Ali Baba prepared himself and went to the meeting place to join Cassim and his friends. As it was yet early, and everybody had not yet arrived, they drank some reeb and played some sdrac (for such was the game they played in the old days) until everyone was happy. When the forty had gathered, Cassim mounted a sdrac— table and spoke thusly: "Friends, we are gathered together here on this occasion to find a great Secret — the Secret to Happiness. We are all unhappy because we are all poor and the Clouds of Sorrow and Discontent hide the Sun of Joys from us. Everyone in this world has a right to be happy, but are deprived of our Happiness by the Monk who keeps the Monastery on the other side of the village. Now I have heard that in a secret room within the Monastery there hangs a jewelled Necklace, with four great jewels, bound together by a golden thread. Whoever has the Necklace is rich and has the power to drive away the Clouds of Unhappiness that would darken his life. Now the monk shares this with only his closest friends and, therefore, we are left in the dark. We are as good as they, so why shouldn't we have the Necklace? We would be rich and happy."

"Yes," said one whom they called Ali Bi, "but how could we get the Necklace?"

"I have a plan," said Cassim, looking wise in an ignorant sort of way," we shall visit the monk to-nite and seek his permission to steal the Necklace."

And so it was that upon that very night the monk heard the thud of horse hoofs outside, and he, too, went and opened the door and saw Cassim with a few of his closest friends.

"We have come," said Cassim boldly, "to receive your permission that we may steal your Necklace which hangs in the secret room within the Monastery."

"But," said the Monk, smiling. "You cannot steal it from me for it is not mine; and anyone who would enter the secret room must know the magic word which opens its door."

"Then tell us the magic word," threatened Cassim, "or we shall force you to open it for us."

"I cannot open the door for you," answered the Monk, still smiling, "everyone who would enter and seek the Necklace must first understand the language of the magic word."

"Tell us the magic word, old fool," said Cassim angrily.

"I can tell you the word, but you will not remember it, for you do not understand such language. The magic word is 'Co-operation'. Go to the Monastery, and when you come to the room called Youth, utter the magic word and the door of the room will open that you may enter therein, and see the priceless Necklace."

Hearing this, Cassim and his friends were overjoyed, and they rode back to the meeting-place to share the good news with the rest. But when they got there, they had forgotten the magic word, for they could not understand such language. But Ali Baba had followed them, and had hidden near the monk's door, and he had heard all that was said. And when they were gone, he hurried to the Monastery and went to the room called Youth, and said. "Co-operation." And the door opened to him forthright, and he entered into the room. He saw an altar and walking up to it he saw on it the beautiful necklace—but it had only three jewels, and the thread that bound them together was not of gold. As he stood there he heard a voice behind him and he turned and saw the monk, who had followed him.

"I am happy to see you here, Ali Baba, for now you have found what you were looking for. But why do you seem so disappointed?

"It is true that you see only three jewels, for the fourth you may find only for yourself. The red jewel you see is Love, the blue one is Faith, and the white one is Trust. The thread that binds them together is not of gold, but of a metal much stronger and more precious — it is Friendship. If you will open the door to your heart and let these enter, you will find the brightest jewel of them all — Happiness."

And Ali Baba did as the monk had said, for he understood such language, and his heart became light within him, and the clouds above him were driven away. And he told his friends, and they came to seek for the jewels, and found them, and carried them away in their hearts. They were rich and happy, and they all lived happily ever after.

The Season of Expectancy

The period between Thanksgiving and Christmas is one of anticipation. It is one which, from childhood on, arouses within us great expectations. As children, the season is one of Santas, gifts, wreaths, tinsel, and much curiosity about just what is wrapped in the packages. There are cards exchanged, people go caroling and they invite each other in to eat nuts and enjoy a warm room. Even shoppers don't look quite so tried and bus drivers seem more friendly. There is a spirit of joy — that was evident even during the war years.

It is during this season that many great religious festivals are held. "The Messiah" is sung, the radio offers music heralding Christmastide, churches prepare special Christmas programs and the children are busy learning lines and practicing. Special emphasis is made on Bible study, and special devotional material is prepared. It is Advent, the season of expectancy.

This festival is a bright spot of the year. It is a season of joy for all the nation. And a season of joy is what it would be! We need to retain all the joyousness it contains. We need to fill it with the joy it can truly mean. That the Christmas season is not essentially a religious holiday as it is now observed is quite obvious. That this is the case, need not mean that the season should be less one of happiness and joy.

The deepness of the pleasure of contemplating what it means to him who follows Christ is thoroughly possible. And it is there that the full of joy of the season of Advent and Christmastide takes on depth and meaning. It is the heralding of the greatest event the earth has seen.

New Zealand has released all of the conscientious objectors jailed during the war. This is a contrast to the U. S. in which 1,200 are still in prison.

LABOR WITH THE HANDS

by Grace Noll Crowell

The quiet, simple processes of toil
May bring rich blessings to the hearts of men.
To lose oneself in labor with the soil,
To plow and sow and reap, and plow again,
May bring renewal to a tired mind,
And the peace that those who seek for it may find.
A woman bent above some ancient task—
A labor that she loves and understands—
May find contentment, more than she can ask,
In the deft employment of her willing hands.
Often some spiritual victory is won
Through finishing well a task she has begun.

To labor with one's hands is sane and good
For the body's strength and the spirit's fortitude.

BUILDING WORLD SECURITY

In our parks the doves and sparrows feed together, and the smaller birds are never tyrannized over by the larger. The bad-mannered sparrows are quite out of place among the doves; yet the latter never become contaminated by sparrow conduct, nor do they attempt to force these badly-behaved birds to conform to their own "higher standards of living." Perhaps they know intuitively that development is a step-by-step process. Children in kindergarten usually manifest a similar intuition. It is possible that world security would be more easily won did their elders consider the doves and the children.—National Kindergarten Association.

Jottings

—Elsa M. Grantland, who recently visited churches in the Western District Conference and also attended the Conference session at Beatrice, writes from Paint Rock, North Carolina: "I do wish to thank each family in whose home I was privilged to spend a time of hospitality and fellowship. I thank you, also all the members of the Western District Conference for their many kindnesses, consideration, and splendid hospitality. My greeting to all."

—Menno Mennonite Church, Lind, Washington: Rev. P. D. Unruh, Colfax, brought the morning message on Sunday, November 10. The superintendent and teachers of the Elementary Sunday School Department have prepared a Christmas program and practice has begun. Another drive for relief clothing is underway. —Mrs. Henry J. Franz, Corr.

—Bethel College Mennonite Church, North Newton, Kansas: The following marriages occured recently: Roland Richert to Edna Mae Tuttle, Wichita, November 2; Ernest A. Unruh to Dorothy Irene Dudte, Newton, November 9; Ann Ruth Hiebert to John L. Moyer, November 9. Twenty-eight of our boys and girls are enrolled in the Week Day School of Religious Education, a cooperative effort sponsored by the churches of Newton and the public schools. Mrs. H. A. Fast is one of the seven teachers in charge of the work. —Eldon Graber, Corr.

—Rev. Henry Hege of Corn, Oklahoma, reports that he finally heard from his folks in Germany. His second oldest brother, who was head of the transportation system in Danzig, lost everything in Danzig, but since he still owned the sixteen-room house and the land of the old homestead at Reihen (this little village lies about twenty-five miles south of Heidelberg), he has returned to Reihen. This brother, who for many years did desk work, now has to raise potatoes, etc. He is over sixty. At the beginning of the war he weighed 188 pounds; now he weighs 114. Reihen is in the American Zone. A son of this oldest brother (nephew of Rev. Hege) lives in the French zone and wrote from there. He reports that when people meet each other they talk about food and that it now is more difficult to get from one zone to another than it was to get from one country to another before the war. Rev. Hege has not yet heard from a brother and a sister who lived close to the Siegfried Line.

—Ernest Bachman, a member of First Church, Newton, Kansas, who last year sailed to Europe on a boatload of horses, recently toured a number of Oklahoma churches to show slides, speak, and arouse interest in sending CARE packages to the needy of Europe. Brother Bachman took about sixty names along. By the time he finished speaking at the Bergtal Church, Mr. Bachman already had around eighty requests for names to which CARE packages might be sent. He still had several more churches to visit.

—David Welty of Los Angeles was a recent visitor at General Conference Headquarters. Mr. Welty stopped off at Newton to visit relatives after having made a ten-day visit at Berne, Indiana, his old home town. After having been in the printing busines for many years, Mr. Welty has now sold his business.

—General Conference Headquarters received a clean-up on Thursday afternoon, November 15, when the office force doned old clothes, waxed and polished the floor, cleaned up the basement, and brought a little more order to the back room. Plans were also made for a possible re-arrangement of desks, etc. After several hours of scrubbing, polishing, sweeping, etc., the group enjoyed the sandwiches, coffee cake, cookies, and coffee provided by Rev. and Mrs. Walter Dyck. Workers at Headquarters are: B. Bargen, Manager of the Publication Office; Dora Albrecht, Assistant to Mr. Bargen; Delsie Tieszen, Financial Secretary; Donna Regier, General Secretary; Walter Dyck, Executive Secretary of the General Conference; Ronald von Riesen, Executive Secretary of the Board of Education, and Reynold Weinbrenner, Editor, "The Mennonite."

—Correction: In "The Mennonite" of November 5 we stated: "The Peace Committee of the Eastern District Conference is planning a Relief Rally to be held November 31 . . . " Rev. George Stoneback writes that the date is not November 31 but rather November 30. The rally is at 2:30 and at 7:30 in the Zion Church, Souderton. Robert Geigley and Henry Detweiler, both former relief workers, will speak. Pictures will be shown, and Harold White McCoo, director of the Inter-Racial Y.M.C.A. in Philadelphia, will be charge of the special music and group singing. Those who plan to attend are invited to bring a box lunch and stay for both sessions.

—First Mennonite Church, Nappanee, Indiana: Last Sunday evening our church joined in a union Reformation Day Service at the Methodist Church with Dr. H. G. Brubaker of the Brethren in Christ Church and Professor of Psychology and Education at Beulah College at Upland, California, as speaker. Mrs. Enz led the union choir of thirty voices, and Carol Petcher, also of our church, played the organ. Bob Hartzler of the Eighth Street Church of Goshen was the speaker last Sunday afternoon at the youth meeting of the C.Y.F. at the United Brethren Church. November 24 will be missions Sunday and Thanksgiving in our church with Marvin Dirks as the speaker. On November 28, the union Thanksgiving service will be held in our church at 9:30 with Dr. Ernest E. Miller, President of Goshen College as speaker. Twenty men of our church attended the five-church brotherhood meeting held at Topeka recently. During the Sunday School hour the Juniors went out to the farm to dedicate their heifer before it is shipped to Europe.—Mrs. Loyal Corwin, Corr.

—Johannestal Mennonite Church, Hillsboro, Kansas: Mrs. Arnold Penner, nee Unruh, passed away on October 22, 1946, at the early age of almost thirty-nine years. It has been the custom of our Mission Society, in place of getting flowers for the funeral, to send the money in their memory to the Memorial Hall at Bethel College. Miss Grantland was in our church on October 6 and talked to the children, as well as to the whole group. It was very interesting.—Mrs. Aronld A. Plenert, Corr.

—First Mennonite Church, Nappanee, Indiana: Last Sunday evening in the Eighth Street Church at Goshen, a service was held which was planned by the five-Church Brotherhood for all their members. Dr. Harold S. Bender, who recently returned from Europe, was the speaker. On Monday evening, Rev. Aron Jantzen, one of our missionaries to India, showed slides and spoke on "India's Great Need." Next Sunday evening we will have a sound film shown at our church on "The Kindled Flame" which shows the triumph of the Christians over paganism.—Mrs. Loyal Corwin, Corr.

—Bethany Mennonite Church, Quakertown, Pennsylvania: On October 20 we observed Rally Day in the Sunday School. We had a good program by the school and a record attendance. Mr. Era Kuyper, superintendent of a nearby Sunday School, was our guest speaker. November 10, our C. E. had a musical program consisting of favorite hymns. These were given by a brass quartet, a piano solo, and accordion. Rev. Edmund Miller, representing the Mennonite Biblical Seminary, is in our midst at present, and was our speaker. He spoke on the topic of "The Light in the Darkness" as found in St. John chapter one. He also preached for us in the regular service following C. E. in the evening. He spoke on John 17. His message was very inspiring and spiritual. He says the doors of service are wide open. Let us ask God to call our dear ones right out of our home churches and of our own homes to answer these calls. Rev. Neuenschwander is holding evangelistic meetings in the Richfield Church, November 4 to 16.— Mrs. Ed. K. Stoneback, Corr.

—Wayland Mennonite Church, Wayland, Iowa: On Sunday, November 3, the Wayland congregation had Rev. and Mrs. Ernst Harder and Miss Bertha Ewert as guests. Rev. Harder brought us an inspiring message. On Wednesday evening, November 6, Missionaries Rev. and Mrs. Aron Jantzen were at our church. They showed pictures of their work in India, and also brought challenging messages. We greatly appreciate these visits.—Anna E. Mullett, Corr.

—Brudertal Mennonite Church, Hillsboro, Kansas: Rev. and Mrs. Dan Schirmer brought the message Sunday morning and told us about the mission field in Hotevilla, Arizona. Due to the illness of one of their girls, they could not be in church to sing for us, so Rev. and Mrs. Schirmer sang a few special numbers. The Senior Sewing Society got some clothes from the relief center at Newton, cleaned them, patched them, and made different things out of them such as caps, gloves, boys' suits, etc. From the patches left over they made a number of comforts for relief. They also cut six thousand quilt patches for the Arizona stations. Now they are busy sewing dresses and aprons for Christmas presents for the Hopi ladies in Arizona. Mr. Oliver Unruh received his discharge from C. P. S. —Mrs. Edwin R. Funk, Corr.

—Emmanuel Mennonite Church, Galva, Kansas: On September 27 we were privileged to hear Dr. Ed. Kaufman of Bethel College give a very interesting report of his European trip. Rev. and Mrs. Garman Wedel and Lincoln Unruh served our congregation as delegates to the Western District Conference at Beatrice, Nebraska, and have given interesting reports to us. Our pastor and church board have planned a very interesting program for our Sunday night services this winter. We shall have a varied program, including C. E. on its regular date, evangelistic services, with occasional outside speakers. Some evenings we shall have young people's meetings in the form of round table discussions of young people's practical problems. Slides of Biblical nature or early missions will be shown, which we expect to secure from Bethel College. Anyone in the community is cordially invited to fellowship with us. On Sunday night, October 27, we had the pleasure of Christian fellowship at the Eden Church with a C. E. program exchange. We expect to have them with us in the near future for more spiritual blessings.—Marie Wedel, Corr.

—Bethel College Mennonite Church, North Newton, Kansas: Jean Wedel, Laverne Linscheid, and Virgil Flickinger gave a report of the young people's work program at the Chicago Mission last summer, Sunday evening, November 17, in the Student Union Room. The Women's Society met Tuesday evening, November 19, in the Student Union Room. Dr. R. C. Kauffman spoke on "The Place of Missions in the Post War World."

—Eden Mennonite Church, Moundridge, Kansas: E. E. Flickner presided at the annual business meeting. Church problems were discussed and officers were elected for the coming year. Approximately three hundred plates were served at the noon meal. The Ladies Aid and the Dorcas Society had a joint meeting in the basement. A mission project in the form of a bazaar netted $450.—P. K., Corr.

—Bethel Mennonite Church, Fortuna, Missouri: Brother Eli Fretz spoke to the Men's Brotherhood on October 29. Rev. Edmund Miller, from Chicago, closed a series of meeting on October 30. Mr. and Mrs. Harold Moser were received into our church by letter November 3. A radio preacher from Springfield, Missouri, Rev. Hitchcock, spoke in our church November 10. The M. C. C. truck came through last Wednesday to pick up our canned goods for relief. Paul Hilty was again re-elected as deacon. The other deacons are Warren Lehman and Rufus Hofsetter. The Sunday School elected Carl Hilty supperintendent and Elmer Garber assistant.—Mrs. Joe Lehman, Corr.

—Inman Mennonite Church, Inman, Kansas: We observed our annual Mission Festival on November 3. Speakers, were Missionaries J. R. Duerksens and Sam Goering, Harry Martens and Viola Duerkson. Rev. Sam Goering used slides to illustrate his talk. Viola Duerkson, a member here, is under appointment by the M. C. C. to go to Paraguay in the near future.—Corr.

AN INDEX OF MENNONITE THINKING

"Where can I find good material on our India Missions?"

"Where did Gerald Stucky go?"

"Where is that write-up on the Belton CPS camp?"

"What's Mennonite Youth up to now!"

A thousand questions, and you never know when or where they will pop up. You may remember that you read it somewhere in THE MENNONITE, but you can't remember when, or where, and you can't remember the exact title. Or you may remember who wrote it, but not what it was about—a good little poem, a keen quotation that you can use in your sermon, or for a speech, or in connection with something you are writing.

An INDEX, that's what we need. An index of everything appearing in the MENNONITE during the year just closing. An ITEMIZED INDEX! showing what page number. That indexes EVERYTHING—authors, titles, ideas, names, places, conventions, reports, events, programs, weddings.

Some magazines make it a practice to prepare such an index and publish it as a separate pamphlet. Some make one number a year their "index number." Someone has suggested that we include an INDEX OF MENNONITE THINKING in our MENNONITE YEARBOOK. What a handbook THAT would make it.

A careful analysis of what is involved—work, time, cost—indicates that it COULD be done. Do YOU think it SHOULD be done? That is the question. All you need to do is reach for a postcard, and on it you write, "INDEX? Yes, I'm for it," and send it on its 1-cent journey.

Look out! That next YEARBOOK may be the most useful little handbook you EVER saw.

(Editor's note.—Didn't you mean to add that the Yearbook is free to those whose subscriptions are paid in advance?)

—First Church of Garden Township, Moundridge, Kansas: The Garden Township sewing society put up six blankets, six comforters, $176.45 offering to buy blankets for war relief, and the women and children sent thirty-one good will Christmas bundles for war relief. —Corr.

—Bergtal Mennonite Church, Pawnee Rock, Kansas: It has been our privilege to hear the following guest speakers—Aaron Epp on October 6; Milton Harder, November 3; and Johannes Hilverda and Pieter Doves on October 27. Ten members attended the Conference at Beatrice, Nebraska. We are happy for the return of Eugene Deckert from Japan and Ben E. Unruh from the South Pacific. Both are discharged. The reports from the various departments of the church are over

INDIA MISSIONARIES CHOOSE NEW OFFICERS

Dear Mission Friends:

The India Conference was held October 12-18. This was earlier than usual, but it was held at this date so that all our missionaries could be present to attend the wedding of one of our missionaries, Miss Alida Schrag to the Rev. Abe Cummings of another mission. We are sorry to lose Miss Schrag, but we wish her God's richest blessings.

Dr. H. R. Bauman has been elected to succeed the Rev. P. W. Penner as Secretary and Treasurer of the Mission. All correspondence pertaining to this office must therefore be addressed to Dr. H. R. Bauman, Champa, C. P., India.

Rev. Orlando Waltner has been elected as Chairman of the India Conference to fill the vacancy of that office caused by Mr. F. J. Isaac's death.

In his letter to the Board, Brother Waltner says, "Please remember Dr. Bauman and me before the throne of grace." The Board would like to urge the members of our Conference to join us in remembering these brethren in prayer. May we further sugges that you continually remember all our missionaries before the throne of grace.

Sincerely yours, Howard G. Nyce

The REVISED STANDARD VERSION of the NEW TESTAMENT

THE ETERNAL WORD OF GOD IN THE ENGLISH OF TODAY

The Word of God is, of course, unchanging; but the form and language in which it was written has changed according to the customs and needs of time and place.

From stone tablets to papyrus scrolls, from handwritten volumes to printed compact books, its language has been Hebrew, Greek, Aramaic, Latin and now practically all the tongues of the world.

Even its English translation has to be revised from time to time as English itself keeps changing with the generations.

The REVISED STANDARD VERSION OF THE NEW TESTAMENT is the latest, authorized English revision of the New Testament prepared by noted Biblical scholars of our day. Archaic words and phrases and ancient styles of printing have yielded to the best English of our time and to the printing styles of present-day books.—Courtesy, Thomas Nelson & Sons.

Universal Bible Sunday, December 8

From the editor's point - of - view:

ENTHUSIASM for the Bible may be unwholesome as well as wholesome. The Pharisees exhibited an unwholesome enthusiasm for the scriptures. The Pharisees revered te scriptures; they delighted in intense and prolonged study of them; they insisted upon a strict obedience of them. To them every syllable was holy. Little wonder, that filled with such enthusiasm, they should rail upon Jesus for his actions upon the Sabbath and his words about the same. Did not Scritpures say, "Ye shall keep the sabbath, therefore; for it is holy unto you: every one that profaneth it shall surely be put to death." Ex. 31:14. It was an enthusiasm that was unwholesome instead of wholesome that made them look upon Jesus as being disloyal to the scriptures. How strongly they must have suspicioned Jesus of disloyality to the scriptures is evident in Jesus' affirmation, "Think not that I am come to destroy the law, or the prophets: I am not come to destroy, but to fulfill," Matt. 5:17. From their point-of-view they could not help questioning the loyalty of Jesus. They were conscious of their own enthusiasm for the scriptures, and this seemed to them a matter entirely praiseworthy. But they were not as conscious of the fact that there was something wrong within them and that they were using their enthusiasm for the scriptures to make up for the wrongness within. Jesus pointed out that the Pharisees made a great-to-do over minor matters of the law and neglected the truly important ones. Matt. 23:23. The Pharisees unconsciously sought to cover up their essential violation of the spirit of God's revelation by being strict about the Law. The sore point in the Pharisees was their lack of love for God and neighbor. It is such inner soreness that stimulates an individual to compensate with some kind of "goodness." Out of such inner soreness can come an unwholesome enthusiasm for the Bible. The individual is not so much to be blamed as to be understood. In most cases, if not always, he is unconscious of what he is doing. He simply cannot see himself as he is. His outer goodness gives him a sense of self-assurance. He cannot turn from his kind of goodness to a genuine inner condition because he lacks a real knowledge and understanding of the latter and because he lacks in an experience of grace. But there is a way out through the grace of God. As the individual recognizes the sinfulness within for what it is and as he sees himself as less holy than his pretensions at holiness, his spirit tends to become right. Then the need for "compensatory goodness," for covering up, drops away, and a life full of God's Spirit comes into being. Enthusiasm for the Bible is then a matter of the Spirit and as such is wholesome. And thus even today a Saul can become a Paul.

BIBLE STUDY which goes from the present to the past can be very satisfying. Such study is a matter of going from the familiar to the less familiar This kind of study concerns itself not so much with the environment in which human beings live or lived as with the inner workings of man today and in the past. This inner working is very much the same while the outer circumstances have changed from a camel's pace to the stratospheric plane's flight of today. Since the inner working of man is so much today as it was in the days of Jesus, we can utilize our knowledge of man today to mine the riches of the scriptures. When we have finished reading a passage of scripture we can ask, "What kind of human behaviour or motivation as we know it today does this passage suggest?" Once we have found the identical or similar behaviour today and have thought through this behaviour as we know it today, then we are in a very receptive state to return to the passage of scripture to see just how such behaviour worked out in the days of long ago with men who had very significant experiences. Once we can identify the inner working of the past with a known inner working of today, we are ready for spiritual enrichment. Then the figures of the past become to us men and women who are alive with the same feeling and thoughts that we find in ourselves. Then the solution of their problem becomes suggestive to us. Let us take for an example Mark 9:33-36, especially the words, "If any man desire to be first, the same shall be last of all, and servant of all." We ask, "Do men today desire to be first, and if so, how and why?" We may conclude from past observation and reading that a desire to be important is very general and very strong. After having thought through this inner working of human behaviour today, we will feel eager to learn more about the disciple's desire for importance and how Jesus dealt with it. The disciples will seem very much like ourselves (as they indeed were) and therefore more like close acquaintances from whom we can learn much, and Jesus will be speaking directly to us. In Bible study as elsewhere we can make use of the method of going from the familiar to the less familiar, and we can do so consicously.

The Christian and His Bible

by Lester Hostetler

The Jew has a day, the day following the Feast of Tabernacles, in which he rejoices in his possession of the holy law and sings "Be strong and fortified in your championing of Torah." Our Universal Bible Sunday, now widely observed the second Sunday in December, is something similar. We rejoice in the possession of the Bible, for it is the only clearly shining light in the present world darkness.

The Christian must read his Bible. How can he know the way of life unless he does so? William Lyon Phelps who was for many years Professor of English Literature at Yale repeated over and over "that a knowledge of the Bible without a college education is better than a college education without the Bible; and that a man or woman can learn more about human nature by reading the Bible than by living in New York."

Every thinking Christian knows that the Bible is not always an easy book to interpret and must therefore give diligence to its reading. The Bible is not one book but a library of eighty books (if we include the Apocrypha.) It was written over a period of a thousand years and in an age far remote from our own. Travel was measured by the speed of the camel. Modern communication and travel were undreamt of. Their civilization was largely agrarian, ours is urban. Their social and economic problems were simple compared with the modern problems that baffle us—the concentration of wealth, the conflict between capital and labor, power politics, global warfare, and the atomic bomb.

The historical background of the Bible is not always clear and the question of Phillip to the Ethiopian, "Understandest thou what thou readest?" is often pertinent. Often we must answer with the Ethiopian "How can I except some man should guide me?"

The Christian will learn to read the Bible for himself and guard against the spiritual anemia which results from a constant dependence upon second hand opinons. On the other hand, he will not disdain the use of guides to the interpretation of the Bible. A good commentary will serve this purpose and if he learns to use it properly, it will save him from many a pitfall in his exegesis of the Word.

The Christian cannot always avoid critical questions that are asked concerning the Bible. Why four gospels, instead of three or two, or one? When did the books of the Bible become the Bible? Why do the Roman Catholic and Protestant Old Testaments differ in content? When and why was the Apocrypha dropped from the English Bible? How could the early church exist a whole century without a distinctive Christian canon or Bible? Why are there so many different translations of the Bible?

These and many more questions can be asked legitimately. The answers to them is a long story and cannot fully be given here. It can be found in books like "The Story of the Bible" by Kenyon or "The Study of the Bible" by Colwell. A new book, admirable for its brevity and racy style, by Archibald M. Hunter on "Introducing the New Testament" has several interesting chapters on the subject. It should be said here that the reading of the Bible itself is far more interesting than books about the Bible, and much more profitable. But there is room for books about the Bible.

CANONIZATION

The canonization of the Bible refers to the acceptance of the books as holy and authentic and therefore to be included in the Bible. It was a gradual process. It was not accomplished, as one might suppose, by church councils called to decide which books should be included and which rejected. There were Church Councils which took action but they for the most part, only ratified what was already the general practice of the churches. By the year 200 A. D. all but seven of our twenty-seven New Testament books were in the canon. Those remaining in doubt were Hebrews, James, Jude, Second Peter, Second and Third John, and Revelation. By 375 A. D. they were all included exactly as we have them today.

There were several compelling reasons why the church formed a canon. One was the fact that there were a large number of Christian writings of questionable value and authority in existence. The church had to decide which books contained the true story of the life of Christ and His Gospel. A second reason was that early in the life of the church there was an infiltration of heresies, among them Gnosticism. The church had to guard against these false teachings. It did so by accepting certain books—twenty-seven in the New Testament —as canonical.

On what basis were books admitted into the canon? Of the large number of Christian writings, what was the criteria by which a few were accepted as Scripture while the others, including all of the New Testament Apocryphal books, were rejected? There were two tests: (a) was the book regularly read in the church? and (b) was it of apostolic origin? If a book met the first test, than it was certain that it had something to say to the church. If it met the second, then there was assurance that what it said came from the circle nearest to Jesus Christ and was therefore authentic. The wisdom of the choices made is undoubted.

TRANSLATIONS

The Christian owes an immeasurable debt of gratitude to the translators of the Bible, for we have come to know its message, not in the languages in which it originally was written, but in translations. Parts of the Scriptures have by now been translated into over a thousand languages and dialects; the whole Bible into two hundred languages, and the New Testament into two hundred and twenty-seven more. Thanks to the work of the American Bible Society the work of translation and publication goes on. Translations are being made in such areas as Mexico, Central America, the Philippines, South America, Africa, Thailand and the Pacific Islands. It is fine to think that the Mennonite Church, through its missionary Petter, has made a contribution in this field with a translation of the New Testament into Cheyenne.

The outstanding translation into German is that of Martin Luther and into English, that of the King James Version, 1611. The latter has been the household Bible of the English-speaking world for over three hundred years. There have been many revisions of it, based on older manuscripts and bringing the language up to date. We should be thankful for them and the careful student will not fail to make use of them. But the King James Version remains supreme in its beauty of diction. The standard Latin translation is that of Jerome made in the fourth century and called the Latin Vulgate. It is still used in all Roman Catholic Churches in the liturgy. The Old Testament used by the Catholics includes the Apocryphal books. The New Testament is in no essential different from the Protestant. The difference between us lies in its interpretation.

The New Testament books were originally written in Greek, not the classical Greek of Homer, but the conversational Greek of the common people, a Greek with a Hebrew "accent." The mother tongue of Jesus was Aramaic. His preaching and teaching was in Aramaic. The sermon on the Mount and the parables and His other teachings were not in Greek but in Aramaic and translated into Greek by the Gospel writers. God has always provided that His Word enters our common life and experience. On the day of Pentecost, each man heard the word in his own tongue wherein he was born. Let us thank God for faithful scholars who have translated the Word into the tongues of the common people.

There are more than 4,000 extant Greek manuscripts of the whole or part of the New Testament; but, contrary to widely accepted belief, there is no such thing as an "original" manuscript left. All the originals have been lost. The oldest are two, three, and four centuries removed from the original. It is probably well that this is so. For Christians are not the people of a book but of a Christ. His revelation in the manuscripts we have is fragmentrary and incomplete, yet it is sufficient for our needs.

Jesus Himself never wrote a book. He never wrote anything of which we have record except with his fingers a few words in the sand while the Pharisees were accusing the adulterous woman. The wind quickly erased what He wrote. It is doubtless well that we have no writings of Jesus else we might enshrine them and worship them. Christians are not people of a book, but of a Person. We do not worship a Bible but a Christ. His revelation in the manuscrpits we have is clear enough for our eyes to see the King in His beauty.

For many hundreds of years, the books of the Bible as well as all other books, were copied by hand. This resulted in many discrepancies in the manuscripts. No scribe, however expert, can avoid mistakes, sometimes changing a word, sometimes inadvertently omitting a line. It is only since the invention of the printing press in 1454 that we have duplicate copies of the Bible that are perfectly uniform.

Looking at the history of the canon and the translation and transmission of the Scriptures, we cannot fail to see in it divine guidance. The Bible has been examined and tested in every possible way, both by its friends and its enemies. It remains today the accepted, unique record of the people of God and the Savior of mankind. Apart from any theory of inspiration, or how the books came to their present form, or how much the text may have suffered at the hands of editors and copyists, the Bible remains God's Word, in a sense that no other book is God's Word.

There are many ways of reading the Bible, most of them helpful. Probably the least profitable is to start at Genesis and read through, word for word, to Revelation; though many have done so and been blessed by it. One indispensable way is to read it devotionally, using well selected passages, dwelling upon them, inwardly digesting them, letting them speak to the heart, and finally memorizing them. Another very important method is the historical, taking one book at a time, learning all one can of its background, its authorship, its message to its first readers, and to us. There is no better way, probably, than this historical study of each book.

We need a revival of Bible reading. Christian people in wide areas are lamentably ignorant of the contents of the Bible. They are living on the religious heritage of their fathers and mothers who were Bible readers. But a religious faith which is severed from its roots will ultimately fade out and wither like cut flowers. The fruitful Christian is rooted and grounded in the Word and delights in meditating upon it day and night.

Universal Bible Sunday should be a day of rejoicing in our possession of the Holy Book. It should stimulate a deeper dedication of ourselves to its regular reading and result in a fuller obedience to its timeless message.

An Appeal for the Family Altar and Bible Reading

by C. C. Wedel

"Till I come, give attendance to reading, to exhortation, to doctrine." I Timonthy 4:13. This is an admonition which St. Paul gives to Timothy, his own son in faith, as he lovingly calls him. Now Paul has not any reading in literature in mind when he gives this instruction, but a particular reading. In the beginnig of the letter he warns him not to give heed to fables and endless genealogies. In giving his advice to Timothy to attend to his reading, Paul meant the Scriptures. God called Israel again and again through Moses to remember his commandments, to speak thereof in their homes, or on their way.

The Bible has been the cornerstone of the best homes. This has been the case always and everywhere. It was the home where the Bible was first used by Christians. In the early stages of the church its members met in homes.

The schools likewise first met in homes. In the course of time, the schools have outgrown the home, and our particular school system, as we have it, has more or less outgrown the Bible, as the Bible has no place in the curriculum of the public schools. Whether we admit it or not, this situation affects the Christian home. The church school movement came into being principally because the Bible was neglected in so many homes. Too much cannot be said in praise of the church school and the vacation Bible school.

But far more can be done for the development of a Christian character through the use of the Bible in the home than anywhere else. Every parent wishes the best for his child, the best in health, in education, in opportunity, in companionship and most of all, in character. Homes are established to insure just these things. The daily program of the home influences the development of the character of the child. The stream of parental influence, which cannot be compared with anything else, can surely be sweetened by the parents high estimate of the Bible and by the daily reading of the Scriptures. Children unconsciously grow interested in the interests of their parents. Parental enthusiasm for music, for flowers, for art, is contagious. Likewise parental enthusiasm for the Bible will influence the child. That the Bible may hold its redemptive place in the home, certain points on the daily program of the home, must not be neglected. The Bible must have a regular place among those things which the family does together. The family eats together. Now if every meal begins with saying thanks to the giver of all good and perfect gifts, this custom will reflect the Bible's teachings. Then family worship either in the morning or in the evening, or both, is a tremendous family tie.

The daily family altar service may have its difficulties in our time of activities. Yet it is possible in thousands of homes, and if not each day, there can always be found at least some time each week the family may gather about the Bible and its message.

Is there an intelligent parent who does not look anxiously into his child's future? Everything today points to the fact that life will be more difficult for the next generation. We are anxious to make our children's life secure, but we know it is impossible to give them the security of material possessions. What seems secure today is shaky tomorrow. But there is one kind of security we can give them. It is the pearl of great price. We can give our children the priceless possession of a trust in a heavenly Father, and a love for his way of life. But this can only be done by magnifying religion in the home. We must be willing to give some time and effort for religion. The family altar service will take some of our time. But unless we take time to be holy, we will not be able to magnify religion in the home. Paul tells of his faithful follower Timothy, "From a child thou hast known the holy scriptures." As we study the life of Christ, we feel sure that Jesus owed his familiarity with the scriptures to his early training by his mother in the scriptures.

If we bring the thought to realization that whenever we read the Bible then God is speaking to us, we will feel the close connection with the divine. For he is not only the God of power, but also the God of his people, and the personal God of the individual. Not only is he high and lifted up, but he is the tender father who pities his children. Who can read the majestic lines in Psalm 90, "from everlasting to everlasting thou art God," and not be led to contemplate the eternal majesty and faithfulness of God? For the eternal happiness of man it is absolutely necessary that he read the Bible. The Bible speaks about man in Genesis in a way that no other book does. He who reads the record of creation, the fall, and the divine promise about man in Genesis, finds himself face to face with man's biography and that of his race. Yielding to the forbidden fruit, man is made aware of the inner break between himself and his God. He knows guilt and the consequences, both individually and socially. But from reading the Bible we note that the seeking God does not leave man to his lonely flight from God his creator, but finds him and brings him face to face with himself. It is only when man is linked up with the eternal God, that he possesses lasting significance and worth.

Were Timothy living today and ministering in one of our churches, he no doubt would make it his great aim to get church members interested in reading the Scriptures, and in giving the family altar its deserved place. St. Paul speaking in our day would say, "Timothy, my

Mrs. Petter's Jubilee of Mission Service

by Rodolphe Petter

(The following message by Dr. Rodolphe Petter was read at the fiftieth anniversary of Mrs. Petter's entry into mission work among the Cheyennes.)

Mrs. Rodolphe Petter upon graduation from college.

In the Word of God it says, "Thou shalt remember all the way which Jehovah thy God has led thee . . . ." Today, here on the Montana Cheyenne mission field in and our churches special remembrance is made before God that Meneha (the Cheyenne name of Mrs. Petter which we like to use in connection with her Jubilee) entered her mission service among the Cheyenne on September 24, 1896, thus fifty years ago to-day.

She has just related how she was brought to the mission work and what her activity and experiences were during the past fifty years. For her this day is one of inner joy and blessed remembrance of all that God manifested to her in her service for Him among the Cheyenne. And we rejoice and praise God with her to have been led and kept in the work for which she had devoted her heart and life for half a century and in which she still desires to remain active as long as God allows it.

It was in 1890 that my first wife and I left our folks and friends in Switzerland with the purpose of bringing the message of salvation to the Cheyenne in Oklahoma. It was in 1891 that we began mission work among them, having our quarters in the Mennonite Mission School at Cantonment, Oklahoma. It was there, five years afterward, on September 24, 1896, that Meneha (then Miss Bertha Kinsinger) landed to begin her mission career, as teacher of Cheyenne and Arapahoe children. This teaching implied not only the usual grades of American school education, but also instructing the Indian children in the word of God, Christian faith and life. After a large government boarding school was erected and our mission school ceased to be, the religious work of Meneha continued in the new school, in the form of evening services for Cheyenne and Arapahoe children.

After the close of the mission school our Mission Board appointed Meneha as Bible woman or missionary among the Cheyenne homes and camps, a help that was greatly needed. For such work, among Indians unacquainted with the English language, it was absolutely necessary to approach them in their own language. Knowing this and eager to read the Word of God to the Cheyenne in their own mother tongue, Meneha determined to become thoroughly acquainted with the complicated speech of the Indians. She studied it with great zeal, in contact with them and also with the help of the language material which Missionary Petter had thus far collected during some nineteen years. That material included very many Cheyenne words or sentences which needed classification or alphabetical arrangement. Thus, part of the time of her Cheyenne study, Meneha devoted to copying all the word material in alphabetical order. It meant 373 large pages longhand writing, or approximately eleven to twelve thousand words. She started a similar task for a Cheyenne-English collection, but this could not be fully carried out. This arranged copy or nucleus of Cheyenne words became useful to me when the much larger dictionary of 1,126 pages was worked out and printed in 1915.

In becoming well acquainted with the Cheyenn language Meneha's activity extended to teaching younger, even some of the older Indians to read in Cheyenn and understand the translated Bible portions. One o these older Indians otherwise fully unacquainted wit English reading, learned to read so efficiently in Cheyenne that he sat up a whole night to read the Cheyenn translation of Bunyan's Pilgrim Progress.

Then came the time when Meneha felt able and eage to give the needed instructions in Cheyenne to Indian who desired to become Christians, also help such wh had become Christians to be used as native helper later on. Meanwhile my life companion who came wit me from Switzerland, and stood faithfully at my sid in the mission work for eighteen years became seriously sick and was called to the heavenly Home in 191 I was left on the mission station with a young daughte and a son who both needed a good school education. I this situation I felt handicapped and wondered ho God would provide for my further mission servic Some two years later I realized what He had intende for me, when Meneha became my second life companio one well prepared for God's service among the Cheyenne; it was the Meneha who had proved a faithful and devoted mission worker for fifteen years. From then on during the past thirty-five years until today, she labored at my side with faith, devotion, zeal and unending patience, doing her utmost to serve her Master among the Cheyenne and persuade them to accept God's message of Salvation. She had an inner satisfaction and joy in leading the Indians to reach out for that which is their only true welfare for this life and that beyond.

In 1916 our Mission Board transferred us from Oklahoma to this Montana Cheyenne Mission field; and here, in the Lame Deer district Meneha lived and labored, carrying on the work she had done among the Southern Cheyenne but with the scope of her duties and activity greatly increased on the mission station, in the Indian homes, at the hospital; also coaching our Cheyenne helpers in their Bible preparations for the Sunday Services. Her duties in all these lines increased in the measure that Bible translations claimed much of the time and strength of her husband. And when finally missionary Petter had to give up his active service because of heart ailing, Meneha shouldered the share of his work with devotion, eagerness and great patience.

On the side line of her mission activity she tried to give the Indians a good example for creating better homes and surroundings for themselves. Look at the lawn, the flower beds, the shrubs, the cedar trees, and the shade trees surrounding the house, the church and the premises. They are all the planning and planting of Meneha with Indian help and irrigation facilities, God giving the growth to nice trees and shrubs on this place which in 1916 (only three years after the mission station had been built) had only prairie grass and sage bushes. You see how it looks now and what was made possible by labor spent at odd times to adorn the premises around this place. Well, a much greater zeal, devotion and labor was applied by Meneha to foster in the Cheyenne hearts, homes and tribes the growth of Christian faith and spiritual life. She carried and sowed the precious seed, the Gospel of Christ's salvation, with the assurance that God would make some of it grow unto a harvest to take place at His own appointed time.

That is why we rejoice and praise God today, that He granted His maidservant (Meneha) a service of fifty years for Him, among the Cheyenne. Half a century is a long stretch of time in carrying and sowing the Gospel of salvation and what it means or includes, God has long ago made plain in the Bible, saying this in Psalm 126:5, 6, "They that sow in tears shall reap in joy. He that goeth forth and weepeth, carrying precious seed for sowing shall doubtless come again, bringing his sheaves with him," God has said.

Thus we sum up fifty years of mission activity as a sowing of precious seed with the promise of a glorious harvest. Yes indeed this seed that has been carried and sown during fifty years is precious, but the sowing implied labor on unpromising soil, amidst rocks or thorns, exposed to evil elements and opposed by many people. All that is calculated to destroy the precious seed, or disappoint and wear out the sower, is brought forth so as to burden and grieve his heart. That is what is meant, when the Word of God tells, "They that sow in tears shall reap in joy." Without the toil, burden, pain and heart disappointments in the sowing, there can be no joyful harvest, and if the sower of God's word goeth not forth in bearing the precious seed, he will never experience the joy of bringing in his sheaves.

During the fifty years of her mission work Meneha became acquainted with the tests and trials of sowing the Word of God, the Gospel of salvation among the Cheyenne, but she held herself to God's promise namely that a joyful harvest would come, made sure and possible by Him.

Of what she sowed day after day, for many years, many a seed fell into the heart and life of this or that Cheyenne girl or boy, in this or that Cheyenne home and brought there something of Heaven, of God, which had not been heard nor known before to them. When the great day of God's harvest come it will reveal how the seeds grew and the sheaves were garnered. God's promise is as true as He is, and we have the guaranty of it in the Bible of Christian faith and life of young and older Cheyenne who became true Christians. In the course of the fifty and more years some were called to God's Home in Heaven and there we shall meet them again and praise God with them.

And today, as we celebrate Meneha's anniversary of fifty years' service in the Mission we rejoice with her and praise God for what she could sow and reap for Jesus, the Master of the harvest. We cannot wish her a return of another fifty years of activity, but we ask God to conserve her strength to further serve Him in the years He chooses to use her.

And may the Cheyenne, young and old, yea the tribe as a whole, recognize and appreciate that God cares for them in His infinite mercy has sent to them His message of salvation and eternal life.

NEW WORKER GOING TO MEXICO

The Home Mission Board is pleased to announce that on November 15 Rev. and Mrs. Frank P. Dick, Main Centre, Saskatchwan with his wife and child, started by car for their new field in Mexico. For some time the Mennonite Church, Cuauhtemoc Chihuahua, Mexico, has been without a regular pastor and for months the board has been seeking a minister who would be able to speak German fluently and who would also be able to do some teaching of German in the local school. Rev. Dyck has accepted the call, and he and his family are planning to go for a year at least, if the work goes well our hope and prayer is that they might even stay longer. The board solicits an interest in your prayers for this field. In Christian Fellowship, A. J. Neuenschwander.

MENNONITES THE WORLD OVER

By Cornelius Krahn

On Being Thankful. By the time these lines will be read we will, once again, have been reminded in a special way to be thankful to our Lord for all the blessings he has bestowed upon us. Generally it is comparatively easy for us to develop a semi-satisfied and thankful feeling at an occasion like this. We have been blessed bountifully with earthly goods. It is especially easy to be thankful when we compare our lot with the gloomy situation in Europe. Yes, we may ask, is there a feeling of thankfulness expressed in Europe today. Definitely there is. Many letters have reached this country that express that feeling.

Much Appreciated Packages Arrive. Holland was one of the first countries to which packages could be sent. France, Denmark, and other countries followed. For a number of months personal and CARE packages have been sent to Germany. Impatiently we waited for the acknowlegment of the receipts of these packages. In our eagerness to help we failed to realize how disrupted all communications were. But now the acknowledgements of the receipts are coming in. Here is one: "It is not only the material aid, which we will never be able to repay, but most of all, the realization that after a dozen years of isolation there is still some sympathy for us abroad which we were not entitled to expect. For this, indeed, we are very thankful." Thus we could continue quoting expressions of thankfulness.

Another Acknowledgement. Some weeks ago we mentioned in this column that a list of more than four hundred displaced Mennonite families had been received in order that Mennonite families here might establish contact with them and possibly send them Christmas packages. The response was most gratifying. Many families and congregations asked for addresses. By now most of the four hundred families can anticipate a package for Christmas. What a joy that will be for those poor people who once lived in abundance and now have nothing. May God bless you for this overwhelming response.

And thank you also for your interest and effort in providing many fine and much needed German books for our brethren in Mexico, Brazil, and Paraguay. You are doing a really significant mission work. It is especially gratifying to see that our conservative brethren of Mexico and the Menno Colony of the Chaco are beginning to ask for books. Thus far they have been using only the Bible, the songbook, the catechism, and the ABC book. If we have failed to acknowledge personally the receipt of books it is due only to lack of secretarial help. Within the next weeks large shipments of books will be sent to the MCC, Akron, Pennsylvania, whence they will be forwarded to their destinations. However, books for further shipments will be accepted throughout the winter.

A New List of Names. Elder Bruno Ewert and Rev. Walter Gering recently sent us, in addition to the above mentioned list of four hundred another list of some three hundred needy Prussian Mennonite families, now scattered throughout the British and American zones. How fine it would be to mail a package to each of them before Christmas! Who would like to help? Addresses of needy families and blanks for CARE packages can be received from the following places: Miss Katie Andres, 414 East 4th Street, Newton, Kansas; Mennonite Publication Office, 722 Main Street, Newton, Kansas; and Mennonite Relief Clothing Center, 220 Main Street, Newton, Kansas.

son, attend to your Bible reading, for here is where God speaks to you. Here are the words that have built the church, and have guided it through days of tempting triumph, but also through nights of dark defeat. Here in the Bible are the words that guide men to real freedom, to that freedom with which Christ makes men free. Here are words that had their power yesterday on man's soul that contact him today, and will do so tomorrow. Lay them up in your heart, Timothy, that you may not sin against God. Read these words, Timothy, with a prayer in your heart, that you may hear them aright and that you may not be a hearer alone, but a doer of them. God speaks to you in this book, my son. Attend to your reading."

Bible Study That Satisfies

by Jacob J. Enz

The Barrier

When one picks up a Bible he is much in the same position as many a service man in some far distant land or CPS camp who picks up his stack of letters from the home community or the homeland and sits down to read them. The letters are written by different people in different places at different times and under different circumstances, but they all concern him. Does he take the pile as it is handed to him by the mail distributor and read the letter that happens to be on top of the pile first and the others as they come? Seldom. Does he begin reading without noting the return address or signature? Of course not! Does he ignore the time and place of its writing? Usually not. Does he read them through at the rate of one page a day or even one sentence a day? Certainly not! Does he run to someone else to ask the meaning of the writing? Not if he can read!

The Bible is a collection of books which are called God's Word. All the books concern man in one way or another. They were written by different men in different places at different times and under different circumstances, but they all speak to man's common spiritual need. It cannot be said, however, that it is the usual procedure of the Bible reader to follow a simple procedure like the one implied in the questions in the preceding paragraph. This is true largely because a valid emphasis upon the uniqueness of the Bible has been abused to the extent that the Bible is used like magic.

Perhaps it is to overcome this attitude that the publishers of the recent Revised Standard Version of the New Testament have dispensed with the traditional black-covered, double column, fine-type, each-verse-indented volume and have given the world a book, which in its attractiveness takes its place with the other books on the shelf. People would be inclined to read such a volume as they would any other book. The various 'books' of the New Testament are comparable to the chapters of the ordinary book. The chapter and verse divisions in the traditional Bible fade into the background having value largely in terms of quick reference. This is as it should be, for diligent students of Scripture know that the paragraph and the book rather than the verse and the chapter are the basic units of study in the Bible.

All of this, however, must not be taken to mean that we can place the Bible's message on a level with the message of other books. Surely the Bible as it is interpreted to us by the Holy Spirit will ever hold the prominent place as the infallible rule for faith and practice. On the other hand it must never be forgotten that the Bible is like any other book in that it has employed words of various kinds, sentences of various kinds, illustrations, paragraphs of prose, stanzas of poetry, chapters and plots; in this it is exactly like any other book.

A failure to approach the Bible as one approaches any other books in the sense described above results in a barrier between the people and the Word of God. The Holy Spirit cannot make His full direct impact upon the soul or personality. The channels are blocked.

Surmounting the Barrier

What is it then that people do when they read other books than they don't usually do when they read the Bible? To ask such a question is to ask a still more basic question, "What is reading?"

Reading is the exact opposite of writing or speaking. In writing the great prophets and apostles of old started with some great revelation or idea or message from God that had impressed itself upon their minds. The Spirit of God impelled to share it. To do this they had to use the words, expressions, sentences, and forms that were familiar to the people. In other words the idea or revelation was translated by the use of language and composition (words and combinations of words) from something inward and restricted to one person to something outward which all could grasp.

Reading is the exact opposite of this process. The reader begins with the words, sentences, and paragraphs on the printed page; if the material is well written the reader will conclude by getting back to the same revelation or idea of the one who wrote.

December 8 has been designated as Bible Sunday, a Sunday set aside for special consideration of the Bible, its significance and meaning to the Christian life and the Church. In consideration of this special observance, Rev. Jacob Enz, of Nappanee, Indiana, graduate of Biblical Seminary, New York, and pastor of the First Mennonite Church, Nappanee, Indiana, has written on reading the Bible, giving some pointers, methods of approach, and concepts which have proven meaningful to him as he uses his Bible.

In light reading this is not a difficult process; but in heavy reading and especially materials of the Bible which are read repeatedly the process is more difficult. The comparison is similar to the appreciation of popular songs compared with symphonies.

If reading, then, is simply the reversal of writing, an understanding of what happens when anyone writes should be helpful. For example, one of the most important processes in writing is the selection of words. If the reader knows this then he will note the words used and particularly those that are repeated. This law of selection is a certain clue to the message of the writer. Outstanding examples of this are the words Holy Spirit in The Acts, the word life in the Gospel by John or the word faith in Romans. The thought of the entire book may be gathered up into one word. It is a worthwhile study to try to sum up the thought of each book in terms of a word or phrase. This is but one of a host of ways in which words are a key to understanding the Bible. Words that are names of great leaders of the Bible suggest character studies. Words that are names of places suggest maps which should be drawn. Words suggesting the central truth of the Bible such as salvation, faith, love, sin, etc. may be studied within a given book or traced through the various books.

Another important process in writing is composition. By themselves words mean little but put artfully together they become inspiring. Words are to the author what colors are to the artist or what notes are to the composer; process of combining them to produce beauty whether in art, music or literature is known as composition. Applying this to the study of the Bible it implies simply nothing how the various writers put words together to convey their message. Thus phrases, clauses, sentences and the forms that they take may provide clues to the author's message. The author may choose to express his thought in verse rather than prose; whether he writes in prose or poetry, however, his message is conveyed by units of thought called paragraphs in the case of prose or stanzas in the case of poetry. Each unit of thought is in some way related to preceding units and units that follow so that the entire writing presents one central thought. In careful Bible study, therefore, each paragraph is studied for its own thought and then related to its neighboring paragraphs; it will be found that groups of paragraphs will be related; then groups of groups of paragraphs are related to give the central thought of the entire book. In some books like The Acts the central thought is found in one of the verses (Acts 1.8). The same is true of John (20:30, 31). But in most books the task of finding the central thought is left to the reader.

It must be obvious by this time that this is not an attempt to advocate some new method of study; it is but a group of suggestions which will help one read thoughtfully; and what else is true study but just that—to read thoughtfully?

The Method Applied to Genesis

Applying this method to the first book of the Bible the results would probably be as follows.

Of course the words God and Lord are most prominent as in most every other portion of Scripture; God is Creator, Law-giver, Judge, Covenant-maker, Sustainer, Provider, and Redeemer. Yet other books of the Bible also incorporate these truths to a greater or lesser extent. How is Genesis different? A word that is repeated that gives us a clue is the word generation. This word suggests the central thread of Genesis (note likeness of the two words). There are "the generations of the heavens and the earth" in Gen. 2:4; the generations of Adam (5:1), of Noah (6:9), of the sons of Noah (10:1), of Shem (11:10), of Terah (Abraham 11:27), Ishmael (25:12), Isaac (25:19), Esau (36:1 & 9), Jacob (37:2). Gerneration then is the key word in analyzing this book.

This observation leads to several others. First, important as God's creation of the world may be, that thought is not uppermost in the thought of the writer; he is interested in people, and in a certain selected group of people. Of all Adam's posterity Noah is selected to carry on the story; then it is Shem, Terah and Abraham; then Ishmael is briefly mentioned while the story continues in Isaac; Esau is briefly mentioned as the story continues in Jacob; and, Joseph is the dominating figure among the twelve sons of Jacob. This observation in turn leads to a study of the characters to see why some are prominent while others are apparently cast aside; the prominent characters, especially Abraham, Isaac and Jacob are found to be in the "line of promise." The story of these three men takes up three-fourths of the entire book in sharp contrast to the many generations noted in the other fourth. In any case there is a single thread running from the promise to Adam and Eve of triumph over sin in chapter three to the final promise to Jacob in chapter 46; this is the thread of regeneration. Beginning with chapter three and continuing throughout Genesis, as well as the entire, the thread is God's regeneration for man's degeneration. Genesis, then, marks God's first working through the generations of men by means of regeneration to overcome man's degeneration; Genesis is the first chapter of redemption.

From the foregoing it is increasingly evident that the family, not a class, race, or nation is the basic unit of society in which God's program of redemption begins; the word family is prominent in the repeated promises. Though the family is the basis for the preservation of the promises, in almost every case it is noted that the heritage is not sustained by all the members of the family; the chief examples are Cain, Ishmael, Lot, and Esau. These stand in contrast to the faithful line and point out God's method of winning the world back to him. That method is finding a responsive and obedient man, giving him a vision of the glorious destiny of righteousness, and then giving him a son into whose life may flow this glorious hope and from whose life it will flow to his children and eventually to the ends of the earth. "In thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed." All hopes for bringing the world back to God spring up in the home.

Conclusion

In conclusion it should be stated that there are many methods of Bible study. This article is not a suggestion that any of them should be abandoned. It is merely a presentation of an approach to the Bible through efficient reading that will enhance any legitimate method that may be used. Without efficient reading—the kind in which we follow the common sense approach of the service man with his letters—the Bible will remain a locked book to us. If, however, we approach this unusual message written in ordinary words with an ordinary openness and alertness of mind, the Spirit of God will surely speak from the Sacred Page.

It Maketh Rich

"There is always a peculiar feeling in our minds when we listen to Solomon talking about happiness. We are sure that he knows what he is telling us about when he declares where happiness is not to be found. Much that was bright and pleasant he had found, but yet the sum of life for him was vanity. All the time he had been haunted by the knowledge that there was something better which he might have if he would. It is out of this experience that he bursts forth with this proverbs, "The blessing of the Lord, it maketh rich; and he addeth no sorrow with it."

"We talk of all this, but I think that Solomon knew it all better than any of us. He had tried life on every side. He was a man who knew what the world could give and how its gifts came always backed and haunted by a sorrow. He knew something else. He knew what God could give. He knew how God's gifts differed from the worlds gifts. "The blessing of the Lord it maketh rich and he addeth no sorrow with it." Do we not see how much these words contain? It is the purity, the freedom from mixture and alloy, the absoluteness and simplicity of God's blessings, that seems beautiful and precious to him. And oh, how often that is what seems so precious and beautiful to us! Not to be very rich, but to hold what wealth I have so purely that it shall do nothing to me or to my brethren; not to sweep across the world with my influence, but so far as it does reach, in the little circle which it does cover, to have it an influence absolutely for blessing and not a curse to any man,—that is the kind of desire which I think grows strongest in the true man's heart. Not greatness, but purity; not a vast range, but a complete sincerity,—these are what we want. And then Solomon says that those come only by God's gift, I think there are two different regions in which we can consider the truth of what he says. First, there are the things which men take from the world, and find to be haunted by sorrow. These same things, taken from God's hand, are robbed of these sorrow and become sources of pure joy. Second, there are the things which the world cannot give at all, which God must give and which, therefore must bring only happiness."—Phillips Brooks

Full Time Christian Service?

Frequently we hear the term "full time Christian service" used. It is meant to refer to those who devote their whole time to the work of the church as pastors, missionaries, educators or in some other similar task. Thus, it distinguishes between these workers and implies by inference that there are those in part time Christian service. Although not mentioned by name, these then would be the "lay" people who are active in one or another life occupation and are the supporters of the church as well as the ones who devote free time to various church activity.

Although used usually in a quite unaccusing and innocent way, there is reason for one to think about the use of this term. In church history the gradual development of the "clergy" and "laity" took place. In the first century, the church was a brotherhood with no differentiation of believers. Anyone who felt so moved could speak, read, exhort. The idea of a duly ordained minister authorized to officiate over the ordinances of the church had not yet developed. Anyone in the fellowship could officiate. The fact that there were varying talents and interests and those serving as leaders made way for different church offices.

Later, the need for duly ordained officials arose, and the "apostolic succession" resulted in which officials would trace their ordination back to the apostles. A result of this was the "clergy" ruling over the "laity" and thus the division of Christians into these two groups. The inference also carried that the clergy were of a higher order than the laity.

A similar development can occur in regard to the designation of Christians as being "full time" and "part time." When in reality regardless of occupation, one can and should be on a full time basis. It is not the occupation that makes the difference, it is the person. Let us ever give due emphasis to the individual and his spirit. Let us de-emphasize the outward things of employment, status in the social and religious organization, and give emphasis to the inner spirit which will result in outward fruits of the proper and desirable kind.

C. P. S. at a New Low

News comes that C. P. S. will soon be reduced to approximately 205 men when, on about December 10, the men inducted in 1945 will be eligible for discharge. The only M. C. C. unit remaining open will be Powellsville on that day. Gulfport, Bartow, the Material Aid work, and Puerto Rico, it is hoped will remain functioning. This comes as a rather significant day to some ten thousand men who at one time or another devoted their energies to this program.

It will be of great interest to see what a generation, a century or two will decree about this effort, so tiny and insignificant when faced with the accumulated might of the nations. Will such a tiny testimony to the will to love our neighbors to the utmost ever penetrate the hearts of men changing them and their brutality, replacing it with genuine love and concern for other men be they black, white, yellow or brown, and irregardless of their faith or lack of it? Some say such a hope is beyond the grasp of time and mankind. Others almost grimly cling to the hope that it will be realized.

It is hardly our position to decree the success or failure of an effort such as C. P. S. and the faith it represents. There are enough such judgments already made! Of far greater significance is our own spirit and attitude day by day, how well we measure up to our commitments, how we use our strength and influence in daily living, how we use each day. For if what we do today fails to take us toward the goal we so desire, but rather away from it, no matter how much we desire the goal, in reality we are denying it.

Looking back at history there is another consolation for those who put their faith in a power other than that of the gun and the bomb. For, although very imperfectly history shows that the first century Christians by heroic faith and martyrdom finally won out over the might and power of Rome. They did not have as their prime objective the crushing of Rome. Instead theirs was an effort to live sincerely the Christian faith that burned in their hearts.

Items of Interest

At a recent White convention of Baptists in Georgia, an invitation was extended to the Negro convention to sit with them. When the word reached the Negroes, a spontaneous parade through the streets resulted with joyous shouting. The Negro delegation marched into the convention hall, sat with the Whites in meeting there. There is reason for such joyous shouting on the part of all men's barriers are overcome and brother can embrace brother in Christian fellowship. It is hoped our churches would also extend the hand of fellowship to other racial groups if the opportunity presented itself.

Years ago prior to the Civil War, when most Americans were accustomed to the idea of slavery, Mennonites in the East are said to have refused to be slave holders. John Woolman, a Quaker, in his personal diary recounts an experience in which he met with some 'Mennonites' who, because of Christian principle, refused this practice. Today, it is said, that such pioneering is not so evident — the general attitude of the Church is pretty much the pattern of the Church in general on this point.

The challenge of so setting our inner spirit that we can in all honesty reach out and clasp the hand of our fellow men in a spirit of true fellowship be they rich or poor, debased or of beautiful character, or of any race is an opportunity for anyone devoutly committed to live as Christ called men to live.

It is said the leader of the Untouchable caste in India, Dr. Ambed Kahr, is thinking of leading his caste into Mohammedanism rather than Christianity, which he had seriously considered, because Christians have a caste system and the Mohammedans do not. It is because of such reason that the fact that Georgian Baptists at least were able to meet, white and black in convention is reason for shouting and rejoicing.

Recently a public business in a Kansas town advertised its business, including in the ad the statement that Mexicans were not allowed. This meant that Negroes, of course, were not permitted. It is not only the South that makes race distinctions. This particular town is in the heart of a settlement of Mennonites.

A poll recently conducted among 250,000 United Auto Workers gave the following testimony. The best safeguard for world peace, these auto workers said, is a "return to religion." Also suggested were "more tolerance" and "better understanding among men."

O Lord of Heaven Earth and Sea

By Christopher Wordsworth

O Lord of heaven and earth and sea,
To Thee all praise and glory be;
How shall we show our love to Thee,
Who givest all?

The golden sunshine, vernal air,
Sweet flowers and fruit, Thy love declare;
Where harvests ripen, Thou art there
Who givest all.

For peaceful homes and healthful days,
For all the blessings earth displays,
We owe Thee thankfulness and praise
Who givest all.

O Thou from Whom we all derive
Our life, our gifts, our power to give,
O may we ever with Thee live,
Who givest all.

RELIEF

"In school the malnutrition leads the children to fatigue quickly. The teachers complain that pupils lose their ability to concentrate even with short lessons . . . Anemia has made a sharp increase. The skin of a large portion of the children is flabby and pale . . . Especially the refugee children suffer anemia. Also startling are the many highly nervous children." These are the words of Dr. Druhlem in a report of CRALOG operations in Land Greater Hesse submitted to us by Robert S. Krieder.

Bro. Kreider states that "the misery among the refugees is so general that practically every refugee has to be cared for . . . Supplies are absolutely insufficient for all the persons requesting help . . . It is depressing to refuse help again and again because we just do not possess the means. One example speaks for itself: The Deanery Herborn has received 19 sacks of flour. With these 19 sacks we have to help 34,227 persons. This impossible. Therefore, we have to select only those cases where the need is most urgent. The community, for example, must assist 100 children of severely endangered health condition. But living in the same community are 50 old people who are sick and who are in danger of starvation without additional food. Who should receive the first help?" . . .

"Among the everyday difficulties of administering a district relief program are: The lack of office paper (Again and again there is not enough paper so that important work must be delayed) . . . the lack of gasoline and motor transportation (Places of need must be visited and the program personally supervised.) . . . the need for typewriters. The most urgent mail cannot be answered because, for example, the district office has only one typewriter."

"But it is not necessary to speak about all of these difficulties of the daily life. They cannot make us lose consideration for the essential parts of our work. In spite of the huge extent of the need we cannot forget that the material need is not the most essential, that the spiritual need is much more severe and cannot be overcome easily . . . . We cooperate on this material-spiritual problem not to gain people for any political or confessional attitude, but in the knowledge that the only way for the solution of this problem is 'the Christian-social deed' " . . .

THE HANDICAPPED WORKER

Surveys made of work records show that the handicapped worker and the disabled veteran match the output of unimpaired workers. In fact, the handicapped worker has a higher attendance record and a lower accident rate. From this has come the slogan, "Hire the Handicapped—It's Good Business." Elizabeth Carmain of the U. S. Employment Service calls upon employers to: 1. Hire a physically handicapped worker for a job which he can do. 2. Judge him by his ability—not his disability. 3. Survey your business to see where physically handicapped workers can best be used. 4. Match the job to the capabilities of the handicapped worker.

The Reader Says:

Editor, The Mennonite:

Under the "Reader Says' in the Nov. 19th issue, Rev. Stoneback gives the reasons for the disintegration of the Peace Testimony among the Friends. I think he is right that the same reasons apply equally to us Mennonites. But I trust that there is still a minority among us Mennonites who have sufficient spiritual depth to put a Peace program in action. At present I am distributing the pamphlet: "I'm an Ill-Adjusted Veteran" and the leaflet: "Choose you this day", both are published by the Fellowship of Reconcilliation, 2929 Broadway, New York 25, N. Y.

The pamphlet is written by a GI Edgar L. Jones, who has broken with the war spirit, has joined The Fellowship of Reconciliation, and who has told the story of his experience in a very effective way. He makes a very strong appeal to his fellow-Veterans to also join the F.O.R. and forsake the war methods forever. He did such a fine job of it, that I wish every one who reads these lines will order as many pamphlets as it is possible for him to distribute among the GIs. This man needs help in order to get his message to every GI in America. Will you help him dear reader by doing your part? Write to the Fellowship of Reconciliation, 2929 Broadway, New York 25, N. Y. 15 for $1.00; 50 for $3.00; 100 for $5.00; 500 for $20.00. Write for this literature today. Every churchgoer knows of church people who are uneasy about their part and the country's part in the war. It is important to give these people, many of whom know little or nothing of the pacifist position, an opportunity to face it and understand it, and consider its application to themselves.

Yours for Peace Action

College and Seminary News

BLUFFTON COLLEGE

Rev. Paul Kuhlman, Dean of the Grace Bible Institute, Omaha, Nebraska, was the chapel speaker Thursday, November 14. On Friday evening, November 15, Rev. Harry Yoder was the leader in the faculty prayer and devotional service. The coming Bible Lectures were especially remembered in prayer. The discussion centered around the question as to what the constituency expects of the college. Bible Lectures during the week of November 17 were well attended. On November 22, 23 President Ramseyer represented the MCC and the Council of Mennonite and Affiliated Colleges at a National Conference on International Educational Reconstruction, held in Washington, D. C. The meeting was attended by representatives of the leading educational and service organizations of the nation.

FREEMAN JUNIOR COLLEGE

The first quarter ends this week and Thursday and Friday are the days for final examinations. The second quarter begins on the second of December. Some adult education evening classes will be offered during this quarter. Among these; classes will be offered in commercial subjects; problems in church music and choral conducting: Vacation Bible School and Sunday School teaching methods; and mechanical arts courses in forging, welding, and woodworking. Rev. H. J. Brown, who expects to return to China soon, was a chapel speaker on Monday. Rev. Emerson S. Schwenk, the Mid-west Secretary of the Fellowship of Reconciliation, was on the campus for two days conducting conferences with interested groups. The Students' Association decided to commemorate another "white Christmas" this year. They plan to make the Grace Childrens' Home the recipient of their gifts this year.

BETHEL COLLEGE

Coinciding with the close of the first quarter, Thanksgiving recess began Tuesday evening, after two days of final examinations. The second quarter opens December 2 with an increase of forty students. The annual all-school Thanksgiving dinner, with places laid for 350, was held in the dining hall on November 20. Throughout this quarter faculty members have been filling speaking engagements in local churches and in more distant communities. In the past weeks President Kaufman, who will teach at the Biblical Seminary next quarter, returned from California; Harry Martens from Oklahoma; Willis Rich from a field trip into the Northwest; Dr. Fast from Iowa, where he addressed the National Convocation on the Church in Town and Country; and Dr. Krahn from Pennsylvania, where he illustrated his week of lectures with slides from among the thirty sets in the Historical Library, a service used ever more extensively by the churches.

MENNONITE BIBLICAL SEMINARY AND BIBLE SCHOOL

The first quarter of the term ends November 27. With its end several students are leaving the fellowship and study at the seminary to enter the fields of service to the Lord and the brotherhood to which they have been called. Rev. La Verne Rutschman completes his seminary work and will devote his full time to the pastorate at Comins, Michigan, the Central District Conference church to which he has been called. Mr. and Mrs. Ernst Harder are leaving preparatory to going to South America and Paraguay. Prior to leaving for Paraguay, Ernst will be ordained into the ministry. Ernst has spent six years in the States preparing himself for greater service with his people in Paraguay. His many friends in the States will wish him God's blessings until they meet again.

Dr. A. Warkentin spent the week of November 10-14 at the minister's conference of the Northern District held at Freeman, South Dakota. Rev. Ed. Miller spent the first part of November in the Eastern District.

A Foodless Banquet was held November 8 sponsored by the Bethany Boarding Club. The purpose of the banquet was to meet and think and share of substance and prayers with less fortunate brethren of the world in these times. Four Dutch students with Dr. Miller of Goshen College partook of the banquet consisting of a small bowl of thin soup.

Meintze Kuitze, one of the Dutch students, talked about the '"Mennonite Youth Movement in Holland." Jan Matthyssen, missionary candidate to the Dutch East Indies, told of the "Relief Needs in Europe." His account of personal experience and the great challenge for Christians to share of their wealth, thus sharing of the spiritual treasure of Christ's love deeply, moved the banqueters. Dr. Glen Miller introduced the speakers. Immetze Terwey and Lenze Meinsma were the other two Dutch students present.

On November 18, thirty-five people gathered at the Seminary for the monthly meeting of the Mennonite Student Fellowship. This fellowship includes all Mennonites studying in the city. A period of hymn singing, talks and visiting made the afternoon an enjoyable one.

". . .in the city of David a Saviour,"

"But thou, Bethlehem Ephratah, though thou be little among the thousands of Judah, yet out of thee shall he come forth unto me that is to be ruler in Israel; whose goings forth have been from of old, from everlasting." Mich 5:2.

Salvation is something that all people want even though it may not appear so and even though some in their search for it turn their backs upon it. Today, as in the days of Micah, men want the gift of life and they want to be saved from the evil which threatens and destroys life. Men are very much interested in salvation, but generally it is not referred to in religious terms. The peoples of the world sense the evil of the hour and they dread the destruction that may be loosed upon the morrow. They are convinced that humanity must find the answer or else perish. There seems to be a growing conviction that there is a Way above man's ways of today that must be found and obeyed and that there is a power to which he must re-

From the editor's point - of - view:

THE NOBEL PEACE PRIZE is something that ought to be thought-provoking to Mennonites. The 1946 prize for "notable service to peace" has been awarded to Dr. John R. Mott, a Methodist, and to Emil Green Balch, a Quaker. Thus one of the Historic Peace Churches is represented in this award, but not the other two. This raises the question as to how Mennonites should stand in regard to this award. Certainly the award has significance and represents some good thinking. It reminds one that the peacemakers are blessed. But how great a peacemaker is any individual Mennonite? Ought there not come out of the Mennonite Church a man whom the world would recognize as having contributed a great deal towards more harmonious human relationships? Have the Mennonites not been practical enough in their efforts? Has their intense divisiveness handicapped them in their peacemaking? Have they run away from the world instead of bringing it a message? Maybe the Mennonites have done more sound work for peace than is evident on the surface. Yet the award of the Nobel Peace Prize raises some questions.

A CHRISTMAS AMNESTY for objectors to war should be announced by Mr. Truman as President. The Constitution of the United States places great emphasis upon the right of the individual conscience. "It is inconsistent with the spirit of our laws and Constitution to force tender consciences." So said Thomas Jefferson speaking about paroles. In the prisons of America there are today from five hundred to a thousand men "whose only crime is that they obeyed their consciences rather than the state in the recent war." The 5,000 or more "other men who have been released after serving prison terms for placing their convictions above the law still suffer the civil disabilities which normally are inflicted only on felons." The United States has been freeing thousands of Germans and Japanese who once fought against it. Some of these former enemies have been put in positions of influence. They are looked upon as "victims of circumstance." The men of conscience imprisoned by Hitler, if alive, are free today. Most of the major church bodies which have met in recent months have asked for such an amnesty. Mr. Truman does not hold back from standing forth as a Christian layman. That coupled with his Baptist heritage ought to help him see the rightfulness of a Christmas amnesty. One writer asks, "When will this action come? Is political expediency the point of judgment rather than justice or Christian ideals?" Another editor asks, "What has happened to the American sense of justice, to our respect for minority rights, to our regard for freedom of religious opionion, that we should for so long allow those to rot in prison whose only crime is that they conscientiously refuse to participate in carnage? We rightly hold the Germans to be accessories to nazi guilt because they did nothing when their rulers sent men like these to concentration camps. But are we not tarred with the same stick when we do nothing about our own prisoners of peace?" Two leaders of the Commitee for Amnesty state: "We hope also that prayers for amnesty may be included in the Advent devotions of all Christian people."

THE BIENNIAL MEETING of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ, held in Seattle, Washington, Dec. 4-6, was significance to a great many Christians of America, for the Council represents twenty-five denominations which have a total membership of 27, 749,967. Denominations belonging are: National Baptist Convention, Northern Baptist Convention, Church of the Brethren, Congregational Christian Churches, Disciples of Christ, Evangelical Church, Evangelical and Reformed Church, Friends, The Methodist Church, African M. E. Church, African M. E. Zion Church, Colored M. E. Church in America, Moravian Church, Presbyterian Church in U. S. A., Presbyterian Church in U. S. Protestant Episcopal Church, Reformed Church in America, Russian Orthodox Church of North America, Seventh Day Baptist Churches, Syrian Antiochian Orthodox Church of North America, Ukrainian Orthodox Church of America, United Brethren Church, United Church of Canada, United Lutheran Church (Consulative Body) and the United Presbyterian Church. Among the scheduled speakers were: Pastor Martin Niemoeller of Germany. V. K. Wellington Koo, and John Foster Dulles.

DIVORCE is something which about one out of every three couples in America now experiences, but it is also something which a great many of them never meant to live through when they promised to be true "until death do us part." A great many who come to this tragedy ask "How did this happen to us?" It must not be forgotten that the war did not help happy marriages along very much. It handicapped American youth of marriageable age tremendously, and the results are showing up today. To do something about divorce, it is also necessary to keep in mind the evil of war and the complex evils out of which war comes. People want to make the mark of a happy marriage; they need help toward that end.

Christ the Savior as I Know Him:

a symposium

A. J. DYCK, Elder of the Hoffnungsau Mennonite Church, Inman, Kansas, for many years:

In this joyous Advent season we hear anew the words of the Angel: "Fear not, for behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people. For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Savior, which is Christ the Lord."

And as I think on this message of the Angel, I at once feel that it is one thing to know, that Christ is here, but quite a more joyous, more significant, more far-reaching fact to know that He is here as my Christ, the annointed of God; my Jesus, that is my Savior; or my Lord, to rule and dominate my life and living. To know that He is true God, virgin born, and true man.

This Jesus is mine not only as God's gift to me and to all believers, but is to be mine in me with the whole of God's essence. If this Christ Jesus is in me old things are passed away, behold all things are made new—body, mind and spirit. In Him I realize higher responsibilities in life; I have joy, joy of being reconciled to God, joy in service for Him, yea, even joy in tribulation and misunderstandings from others. He is my salvation, my light, my life, my joy.

We thus recognize Him as a personal Savior. The philosophy of this world has an utter contempt for individuals and individualism. It concerns itself with masses. God rules the universe, but the individual is a part of the masses. We are, on the other hand, so often told that the danger of society is in centralization. And certainly the danger lies in aggregation. But we as Christians emphasize a personal attitude and personal belief in a personal Savior. As such I know Christ, I accept Him. Only as such can I accept Him also as a world central power. In Him only can the world become one and remain one.

" 'Tis not enough that Christ was born
Beneath the star that shone,
And earth was set that holy morn
Within a golden zone,
He must be born within the heart
Before He finds His throne
And brings the days of love and good
The reign of Christ-like brotherhood."

J. C. KAUFMAN, pastor of the Emmaus Mennonite hurch Whitewater, Kansas:

Jesus Christ is, as our topic suggests, the Saviour. He ound me lost in sin and saved me. I know him as the ne who reconciled me unto God, through His blood ed on Calvary, given as a ransom for my soul. He gave me the assurance that all my sins, past, present, future are atoned for by his substitutionary, sacrificial work. This sacrificial work is a work in three aspects.

1. Through His death on the cross I am free from the penalty of sin, which came upon me through the sinfulness of the entire human race. Through the fall of Adam all men are sinners, and death the penalty is the consequence. Ezek. 18:20. The soul that sinneth it shall die. Rom. 6:23. The wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord. According to the last statement Jesus Christ did not only die for me and give his blood as a penalty for my sin, He rose again from the dead and thus became the source of eternal life to me. Rom. 8:11.

2. I know Christ as my Saviour, because He ascended into Glory, with his own blood, where he appears in the presence of God for me as my High Priest to make atonement and redeem me from the power of sin in my life now. Where the judgment seat of God became a mercy seat for me.

3. I know Jesus Christ the Saviour as the one who will some day save me from the presence of sin by the appearing for his own. I know my Saviour now has redeemed my soul and spirit. I am now a redeemed soul in an unredeemed body, but I know that he will one day, when he shall appear for His own, when the "blessed hope" will become a blessed reality, redeem this now unredeemed body and thus take away from the presence of sin. I John 3:2.

Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be, but we know that when He shall appear, we shall be like him for we shall see him as He is also. I Tim. 2:5,6. Therefore, I know Jesus Christ as the one who saved me from the penalty of sin, by paying the penalty with his own precious blood. I know him as the one who saves me from the power of sin as my High Priest and Advocate. And, lastly, I know him as the one who will save me from the presence of sin by His appearing for his own.

HUGO MIERAU, pastor of the Bethany Mennonite Church, Freeman, South Dakota:

The earliest Christians in their initial message of Christ did not include details. It was a sheer announcement that "He Lives" coupled with the faith that the resurrection was not an isolated event but the total of a historic process ("according to the scriptures"). It was guaranteed by the appearances to trusted individuals. What was the nature of these appearances? From the records—apart from the Gospels—we gain only the scantiest information. Acts records three times the experience of Paul on the road to Damascus. According to these accounts, Paul was overwhelmed by a blinding light, heard a voice commissioning him, and was convinced that it was the voice of the risen Jesus. Paul himself, in his own writings is even more silent: "it was the good pleasure of God . . . to reveal His Son to me, that I might preach him among the Gentiles" (Gal. 1:15, 16). Words seemingly could not express just how these Christians knew Christ as their Savior. Christ was to them an ever-present, living and indwelling experience.

When you and I commit ourselves to Jesus as our Lord and Master, His AGAPE love takes the place of all that has been bad and ugly and false in us (our SIN); and he helps us to want and to follow the Way of Life Eternal.

Of all the wonderful words that Christians have used to describe Jesus, the greatest is "Savior." Its meaning becomes richer as the years go by. Here are three things that anybody can know and understand:

(1) Jesus shows us that the Father loves us enough to FORGIVE us when we sincerely are sorry for our sins and confess them to him.

(2) Jesus shows us what God wants us to be like. That is, he is our PATTERN for the way God wants us to act living as His true children and as brothers of one another. Jesus saves us by making us want to live his way and to bear bravely whatever ills we suffer from others.

(3) He saves us by giving us the POWER to do what is right. People usually want to do right, but fail because they are not wise enough and strong enough. They are like hikers who miss the trail and get lost. Full commitment to Christ helps them to stay on the trail. We share his strength and purpose, so that we can live more abundantly.

Furthermore, if we are to experience the "Living Christ" we must have a religion of persons and not only of books, as do Islam and Mormonism. We want to experience that Spirit of the Living Christ and declare to all the world that "He Lives," as did the earliest Christians and hold forth Christianity as a universal, living religion.

ORLO KAUFMAN, pastor of the First Mennonite Church, Paso Robles, California:

I know Christ as a Person who confronts me in a Person to person relationship. It is unlike a person to person relationship only in that He is beyond space and time and in that He speaks with absolute authority. This authority is His because He is the Son of God, He died for the sins of the world, and is the hope of eternal life.

In this Person to person relationship I know Him as one who called me to repentance from sin. "Except ye repent ye shall . . . perish." I know Him as the One who confronted me with His great love, His power to cleanse from sin, and to give eternal life. "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life . . . " Being confronted by Him I either had to accept Him in faith or reject Him in unbelief, and having accepted Him and daily living by faith in Him, now, as a Christian I know Him as Savior, Lord and Master, and Companion and Friend.

I know Him as Savior for He saved me from the power of sin, made me a new creature, and gave me a new spirit, with new attitudes, interests, desires, and ambitions.

I know Him as Lord and Master who with authority commands, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God . . . . Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." "Seek ye first the Kingdom of God . . . " "Be ye therefore perfect . . . " "Go ye therefore, and make disciples of all the nations . . . " His words of authority are not limited to those He spoke on earth, but include those which He spoke through His apostles and faithful servants through the centuries.

I know Him as a Companion and Friend who is ever with me, "Lo, I am with you always . . . " As the One who through His Spirit guides into truth, "when he the Spirit of truth is come he will guide you into al truth . . . " As the One to whom I can turn in need ". . . ask what ye will (if you abide in me) and i shall be done unto you." And as the One in whom have hope of eternal life, "I am the resurrection and th life . . . "

The Usher -- Host in the House of God

by Ellis Graber

The role and mission of the church usher is that of a host in the House of God. In this high calling one of his chief concerns is that of his guest who has come to worship. He holds his guest in high esteem and strives to make him comfortable so that he may realize that worship experience for which he has come. He wants to make his guest feel truly welcome, at home in the House of God, and eager to return.

Meeting the guest—The guest should be received graciously and courteously, with sincere warmth and friendliness. The way a person is met at the church door will often set for him the mood and temper for the entire worship service. Simple acts like the following are meaningful: 1. Look into his face as he is greeted. 2. Offer a pleasant, genuine smile. 3. When advisable a handshake or friendly word is effective. 4. Call people by their names as they are greeted. 5. Learn and use the names of strangers who come through your door.

Seating the guest—Having welcomed the guest the host-usher must attend to his comfort. This must be done quietly, efficiently, worshipfully. Considerations such as the following should be kept in mind: 1. The keynote of an efficient usher is forsightedness. He is familiar with the area in which he works and knows every seat available. Thus he will plan ahead at all times. 2. Guests will be usered to their seats at such times as will least interfere with the worship service. The time of ushering in guests should be agreed upon in consultation with the minister, but never should they be ushered in during scripture reading, prayer, special musical numbers or responsive reading. 3. The usher should gauge his stride to that of the guests. Awkwardness often results from an usher racing ahead of his people. This can with little care be easily avoided. 4. Conduct a guest to his place, never direct or point. The usher should stand by until everyone is comfortably arranged in the pew. 5. If there is indication of preference in location of seating, that should be complied with, if advisable. Older people should usually be seated toward the front. (Gentle assistance by the arm is often appreciated by a feeble guest) 6. Strangers can be made to feel at home by seating them in front so that they must mingle with people as they go out; or else they should be seated in a pew occupied by the church members, and if fitting, introductions should be made. 7. A late-comer may be helped by indicating to him the point of procedure in the order of service. 8. The guest is the usher's responsibility for the entire service. He should have everything he needs—hymn book, program or order of worship, fan, proper ventilation and other necessities for his comfort.

The guest leaves—The pronouncement of the benediction does not necessarily mean that the usher's work is done. The farewell may mean as much as the initial greeting. In rural churches where the congregation is as a family mingling after the worship service, the work of the usher is greatly minimized, yet in every church visitors and strangers are often present and these should be sought out and spoken to. To such people a friendly word at departure may mean much. "Glad to have had you with us this morning." "We hope you enjoyed the service," We hope you can be with us again soon," are some typical expressions that may be meaningful.

Church Hospitality is indeed a goal for which we should strive. Every member in every church should make that his own personal mission. Any group of people who leave the work of welcoming and receiving strangers to the ushers alone will never be a warm, inviting church. It may be said, however, that in many cases where such hospitality is lacking the ushers can be a great influence and help in improving such a condition by their own personal example and by making people conscious of their obligations.

Finally, it must be said that the work of the usher is not simply that of attending to various duties. Undergirding these duties should be the ever-conscious thought that he is leading men and women into the presence of God. Everything about him and everything he does should be motivated by that underlying goal. His personal appearance—well-groomed, neatly but simply dressed in white shirt and dark suit; his bearing and manner—quiet, calm, dignified but friendly, are all significant, not to attract attention to himself or for personal glory or demonstation, but to create an atmosphere of worship and together with the pastor and the musical ministry lead men into communion with God.

Being a host in the House of God is a noble calling. Let no one be unworthy or unfaithful in his mission.

ELLIS GRABER is pastor of the Zion Mennonite Church, Souderton, Pa. The ushers of this church meet monthly to work out their tasks and to have a social hour together.

Mrs. Bertha E. K. Petter's Letter to Her Friends

(Mrs. Petter wrote the following letter to her friends very shortly after the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of her entry into mission work. For program of celebration see next page.)

September 24, 1946

Dear Friend:

My day is over. My husband and our guests have retired for the night. The house is quiet. I sit alone with my thoughts, and my brief case of more than eighty heart-stirring messages that came to me thru the mail . . . God is near and I am blest. Tho it is almost midnight, I open and read the last that came today and for which I have not had time. A telegram came from Chicago, one from Ft. Wayne and another from Freeman S. Dakota, just as we were going over to the church for the morning exercises. One phone call came in.

It is indeed worth fifty years of service among a heathen people to live thru a day like this. In such an hour of bliss, all the wearinesses of the years, the labors, disappointments, yea, even the sins drop as by magic into a sea of oblivion, and only the high lights of victories, and the privilege of thus having served as an ambassador of Christ stand out in bold relief. However, the Psalmist put the right word in my mouth when he says, "Not unto us, O Jehovah, not unto us, but unto thy name give glory, for thy loving kindness and thy truth's sake.

September 27

I continue now. The fall equinoctial rains had been unusually heavy. The ground was thoroughly soaked. Jack Frost threatened and we held our breath as it were. However he relented, and all the gladioli, snap dragons, asters and other fall flowers in the Lame Deer gardens stood erect and expectant. Kind ladies from government circles here at the Agency brought huge baskets of plants, flowers, vases and doilies on the day before the celebration, and completely transformed the little old log chapel of sacred memories into a bower of unusual loveliness and charm.

Tuesday was a perfect day. The sun shone in all its glory. It was warm as a summer day. The morning exercises were in the Cheyenne language, and addresses were made by missionaries and Indian Christians. It gave me inner joy to face this audience and again tell them,"Etovevo nanooto navohestoto. Naoxhoneta oha zenesetanotos Maheo. nahesse-nethozeohe Zestano" . . . "For your sake I left home, friends, relatives, even tho they sought to hinder me because God called me to this work. I now feel more at home here among you than anywhere else in the wide, wide world. You have become as kin to me, especially those of you who have accepted the Lord Jesus Christ as your Saviour." A prominent old Cheyenne chief in Oklahoma often said to me, "Meneha my Cheyenne name) nizesta, nizessinisz, nieszesta" which means: "Meneha, you are Cheyenne, you speak Cheyenne and therefore you are Cheyenne and belong to us."

An ample noon meal planned by the mission workers, to which others contributed was served on the lawn around the outdoor fire place, as we all sat, Indian fashion, in a semi circle on the ground. We especially enjoyed the "vizcevhano" or "Indian bread" which one of the Christian Indian women had baked.

The evening service was entirely in the English language, and was also well attended both by whites and Indians. After Mrs. Wenger's fine musical prelude on the piano, the opening song by all assembled, "Praise Him, Praise Him, Jesus our blessed Redeemer Sing oh earth, His wonderful love proclaim" struck the key note of the service. Praise, prayer and thanksgiving rang thru every message and we were blest.

The solo by Milton Whiteman, our native evangelist, "My Jesus I love Thee, I know Thou art mine" was so fittingly chosen, and found a deep response in my heart as I accompanied him on the piano as I have done so many time thruout the years.

When called upon to review the activities of my fifty years among the Cheyennes before this kindly audience it was just natural to stress the call of God heard while I was a student at Wittenberg College, Springfield, Ohio, where the entire course of my life changed. In that fine cultural and spiritual atmosphere, the claims of the heathen mission fields of the world were often very effectively presented, and I just could not escape their appeal. After a long struggle, I was graciously led to say very definitely in the words of these beautiful hymns.

"My life, my love, I give to Thee.
Thou Lamb of God, who died for me,
Oh may I ever faithful be
My Saviour and my God.

Oh Thou who died on Calvary
To save my soul and make me free
I'll consecrate my life to Thee
My Saviour and my God.

I'll live for Him, who died for me
How happy then my life shall be
My Saviour and my God.

I'll go where you want me to go dear Lord
Over mountain and valley and sea
I'll say what you want me to say, dear Lord
I'll be what you want me to be.

Since the above was written, the mail has daily brought more heart-warming messages, and I take this way of thanking you who sent them, thus also giving you a brief report of my day until fuller accounts appear in our church papers.

Sincerely,
Bertha E. K. Petter

MENNONITES THE WORLD OVER

By Cornelius Krahn

Overwhelming Joy is the main note in many letters received from Germany for the receipt of CARE and parcel post packages. This is a portion of a typical letter. "My, what a surprise and great joy it was to receive two packages! I wonder if you can possibly imagine what this help means to us. We, my husband, my youngest son (the only one left) and I were deeply moved when we unpacked them. How understandingly each item had been chosen! How useful to us in greatest distress! I wish you could have heard the exclamations of joy when we unpacked shoe soles, shoe strings, thread . . . soap, powdered milk, the plastic water glasses, the honey, and the many other items with which we were no longer familiar. Dear Friends, a person has to have experienced real need in order to be as over-joyed about material things as we are. But above all we cherish the feeling that we have good friends in a strange land who remember us and help us and express their Christian love on a plane far above hatred, struggle, and misunderstanding. Let me thank you for the help in physical need also for the spiritual strengthening."

In the Ruins of Emden. The above lines were written by Mrs. Fast, whose husband is the pastor of the Mennonite churches of Emden, Leer, and Gronau. The following is a description of their losses. "We were bombed out several times. Our homes burned down. And just before the collapse we lost all personal property including my husband's library and that of the congregation. It is a miracle that we were saved. The church of Emden is burned down and that of Emden destroyed. Our family has dwindled. The oldest son died in a hospital and the second was killed in Sicily. My mother was killed in an air-raid . . . . Thus our ties to our earthly life have considerably loosened . . . We often faced death and sometimes it seemed easier to die than to continue to live. At present, to provide ourselves with the necessities of life takes almost more strength than we have. Last winter it was above our strength. I underwent two operations and my husband was ill because of too great strain. During the summer we recovered a little and now we hope to gain our strength again."

. . . . The Houshold of Faith. It is being reported that around Emden, Ostfriesland, there are some two thousand Mennonite refugees from Russia and two hundred from Prussia. There are considerably more in the vicinity of Hamburg. All of them call on the Mennonite ministers of these areas for help. Rev. Schowalter from Hamburg writes: "The desire to migrate is like an epidemic around here." It effects not only the displaced persons, who have no home, but also our local young men who see no future here." And Mrs. Schowalter writes concerning the few packages that have reached them: "We have started to distribute the food packages but it is very difficult to select the needy from the most needy. There are some two thousand five hundred Prussian and some five hundred Russian Mennonite refugees in this vicinity . . . . Inspite of all our attempts we have not yet been able to secure any aid or help from Ev. Hilfswerk for our Mennonites. CRALOG does not operate here even though Cornelius Dyck has arrived here as its representative. . . . . The need among these families is very great. Especially needed are shoes and warm clothing. These items still do not get through to us through official channels . . . Therefore we are so thankful for everything that comes directly to us. But so far we have received no clothing. Would it not be possible to send us parcel post packages with clothing to be distributed among the most needy refugees?"

The homeless, cold, and hungry refugees mentioned here are those of whom we have lists and whom many of our readers and congregations have sent CARE packages. By the time these lines will be read some eight hundred families on the list may have received one CARE food package. What about starting the list over again and sending these needy people a package of warm clothing and shoes. Thousands of tons of clothing have been shipped to Europe by Mennonites, but because of the complicated conditions over there little of it has reached those of "the household of faith." For addresses and information about the packages write to Miss Katie Andres, 414 E. 4th St., Newton, Kansas. "As we have therefore opportunity, let us do good unto all men, especially unto them who are of the household of faith." (Eph. 6: 10)

College and Seminary News

FREEMAN JUNIOR COLLEGE

The past week there was no school. The first three days the faculty attended the South Dakota Educational Association meeting at Sioux Falls. It is interesting that at the annual sessions of this organization in recent years the outstanding speakers have been men with deep religious convictions who did not hesitate to give fine spiritual messages to their audience. It is encouraging too that the teachers of the State have shown their appreciation of this type of message. Thanksgiving Vacation occupied the rest of the week. Thursday evening Rev. Sam Goering gave a report of his relief work in Germany and of conditions in that country at the present time. The Gym was filled to capacity to hear his message. Sunday evening the Swiss Choral Society of the community will again present the "Messiah" in the Gym.

BLUFFTON COLLEGE

The Bluffton College Choral Society will present the Messiah in the Bluffton High School Gymnasium, Sunday afternoon, December 15, at 3:00 o'clock. This is the forty-fourth season for the Choral Society, and the Messiah has been given annually since 1913. It is Mrs. Mann's thirty-seventh season as pianist, Mr. Hauenstein's thirty-fifth season as director of the orchestra, and Mr. Lantz's eighteenth season as conductor. Soloists for the occasion are Mildred Agner Hilty, Soprano; Opal Berry Stauffer, Contralto; Herbert Baehr, Tenor; and G. A. (Dad) Lehman, Bass. The concert is to be recorded by the Findlay radio station and will be broadcast on Christmas day from that station. Miss Annetta de Graaff, student from Holland, will give a concert Tuesday evening, December 10. She will be assisted by Lawrence Burkhalter and Elizabeth Waterstraw. Proceeds from the concert are to go toward the Student Auditorium-Physical Education building fund. The original goal for this fund was $1000.00, but more than $1,300.00 has already been turned in.

BETHEL COLLEGE

The annual meeting of the all-Mennonite Bethel College Corporation was held on the usual day, the Friday after Thanksgiving, in Memorial Hall, with a good attendance. After a devotional period conducted by Arnold E. Funk, secretary, the president of the Board of Directors, J. M. Regier, gave an opening address on the contribution made by Bethel College to our church life and program. A major part of the sessions was devoted to President Kaufman's report of the school year 1945-46, with supplementary remarks, when requested, from various faculty members. Attention was repeatedly focused on the generally crowded conditions on the campus — in classrooms, the library, and dormitories — and on the urgency of an immediate, forward-looking building program, in which the Farm-Shop building stands foremost at present. A goal has been set to equip the College to serve five-hundred students by the sixtieth anniversary in 1948. A. J. Dyck and Sam Goering were elected to the Board of Directors from the Western District Conference, and Phil A. Wedel and Max Smith from the Corporation.

MENNONITE BIBLICAL SEMINARY

Central in a school's academic life is the library. It is through the books telling of the thoughts, lives, and experiences of countless lives and generations that the students become acquainted with his field of interest. This is particularly true of the seminary student. His growth in knowledge and understanding comes through the riches offered in the books in the library.

The Seminary has at present a small library of about two thousand books. Many additional books are needed to round out and complete the different areas such as doctrine, theology, history, Bible, ethics and so on. There are two ways in which these additional books can be obtained. One is by purchase of new and second hand books. The other is by the donation of books from the libraries and shelves in the homes of interested supporters of the school.

There are very likely many books in the homes which are no longer being used. The seminary would appreciate receiving such books with the understanding that they would be used in a way most beneficial to both the church and the school. In case of duplication, or for any other reason, those books are not usable by the seminary library would either be sent to Europe or Paraguay wherever they could be of genuine usefulness or in other ways handled in order to serve the seminary and the church to the best advantage. Donors interested in making presentations of books in this way are encouraged to do so.

Why I Wouldn't Want To Be a Missionary

by Mary Becker

How many young people have said, if not to others then to themselves, "Missionary? No, sir, that's one thing I wouldn't want to be!"

"Why? Most of them probably have never defined their motives, at least not their real motives. If they did, perhaps they would find that they are very unworthy ones. For instance, when I was very young I used to think that missionaries could never wear clothes any more recent than those of a decade ago. Nothing about them should suggest any modernity, and I hated to think of being outstanding in that manner. Of course, that was a foolish idea. Closely allied to this was the idea that a missionary could not be a normal person—he had to be almost perfect for one thing, and he had to talk and "walk" sanctimoniously. How many young people are there who have this erroneous idea today?

Why I wouldn't want to be a missionary. If you, young people, would write out your reasons, would they be something like this?

1. I don't want to be a missionary because I would have to leave my home and family and go into a far country—and, of course, going into a far country means living among less civilized people with very few conveniences and really with no challenge to a normal life.

As far as leaving home is concerned—there aren't very many young people who don't have to leave home to continue their studies or to take up their work; and with the development of air travel, there really are no points in the world that are very far removed from each other. As far as living among uncivilized people and having few conviences is concerned—this may have been true in ages gone by and may still hold true in some secluded areas; in general this would not hold true now; but maybe you have to go to the mission field to realize this. Why, missionaries can be normal people and live normal lives; in fact, often the situations are more ideal than at home.

2. I don't want to be a missionary because I would have to learn a new language and I could never do that. It is a difficult task to learn a language and speak it acceptably, but with the Lord's help it can be done. And, to tell the truth, this feeling of inadequacy and incapacity is an assest in the learning of the language, for it makes for greater diligence and care; and to learn the language poorly, of which even missionaries have been guilty, is unworthy of the great work of our great Lord.

3. I don't want to be a missionary because I wouldn't be satisfied with wasting my special talent or my specialized training in doing generalized work or on people who couldn't appreciate it. (And, of course, I wouldn't tell anybody this—but, I just couldn't refuse the higher bids here in the homeland.)

Wasting your training, your talent! Where is there more need for it than on the mission field—regardless of what your talent or training may be?

Are you an architect? Architects or constructors can render an inestimable service on the mission field if their interest is to be of service and not mainly to earn a lot of money. Your name may go down in history of a people as having shown them new and better methods of building, or be engraved in the more durable structures that you erect; and what is that service compared to a few paltry dollars more earned without real service rendered, and this in competition with many others of the same occupation who may need those dollars worse than you do?

Are you a trained farmer? Perhaps Jesus would make a parable of you if He were on earth today—"Behold, a farmer went forth to farm," showing the revolution brought about by the example of a Christian farmer who considered the land as the "Lord's Acre" and tilled it as such, utilizing the power the Creator has laid within the earth to give the undernourished, malnutritioned, and underclothed "his daily bread" too. What a sermon can the farmer preach here!

Are you a doctor or a nurse? Endless is the service you can render—often in spite of the fact that there are many doctors around—doctors who do not have the vision and the ideals and the desire to serve suffering humanity, and who prefer a cup of coffee in the cafe' or a week-end at the country home to service they can render. Oh, you have visions of becoming one of the great surgeons of the States? In competition with a lot of other excellent surgeons? Of course, that is a noble motive. But, consider again, when here it is a matter of life or death with no one to care. How short our lives are to make unworthy or selfish motives the dominating factors in our lives!

Mary Becker is serving in Colombia, South America, as a missionary.

Are you a teacher? Why flood the market some more when the competition is so stiff already? Why not pull out and give your place to someone almost as capable of handling it as you are and dedicate your talent where it will really be needed and appreciated, and where you can put your initiative to work to the nth degree? Whereas at home your years of service might be remembered by, "Oh, yes—Let me see, he (or she) was a pretty good teacher;" here many generations would rise up to call you blessed because you were the first one to open new vistas and put new meaning into life for them, and who introduced them to a new and abundant life in Christ.

Can you still say, "I wouldn't want to be a missionary because . . . . "? Every consecrated young Christian must ask himself the question, "Why shouldn't I become a missionary?" letting the burden of proof rest upon him in this manner rather than by asking himself. "Why should I become a missionary?" For the need is known, and the amount of service to be rendered far surpasses that of the homeland.

If the Lord shows you through your convictions or in any other manner that you should become a missionary. (somebody with a mission) and not lose your talents or training among many with as much talent, be ready to say, "Here am I, send me."

Asia and the Gospel

by P. W. Penner.

India outside of Burma bosoms 389 millions according to the last census. Of these, 270 millions are Hindus. Population increases about 5% annually. In some sections there are 2000 per square mile. A good many have turned to Christ since Carey landed in India. Nevertheless many still wait the message to reach them. Roughly speaking, there are now 8 millions Christians, 3 millions Protestant, the remainder Roman Catholic. There are some-what over 2,000 ordained Indians and some ten thousand officially recognized as ministers to the 21,000 congregations.

Some quite alarming facts loom up distressingly. Let us point out a few.

1. Out of a total of 552 native states, only partly under Britain's control, almost 500 are still closed to the Gospel, because the ruler of the state does not wish his people to become Christian. Some of these have not yet been penetrated at all. Out of the 655,000 villages about 500,000 villages have not been as yet reached.

2. Lands to the north of India—Soviet Central Asia with 17 millions, Afghanistan 9 millions, Tibet with 3 millions, Nepal with 6 millions, Bhutan with one fourth million are entirely closed to the Gospel, because of the opposition of their governments to the Word of God. In a certain area of India are living 41 millions who have no resident missionary among them.

3. Only 12% of India's population—47 millions—can read or write. This percentage is a trifle higher among Christians. There are though 14 literacy committees working ardently to make India literary.

4. Acrosse a, sub-continent which it takes five days to traverse from north to south one experiences many different types of climate. The worst is the over-bearing heat of the desert areas which preclude work at a certain time of the year when precipitation is entirely nil, the thermometer registers so-to-say daily above 115.

5. The small missionary force for evangelistic work available. One time the number of missionaries peaked way beyond 6,400. The decrease came after 1933, reached its lowest point in 1936, since then a gradual increase was noticeable, nevertheless the working force is only about 3,350. There are 3,050 institutions, nearly all of them under personal supervision by European missionaries. There are 14,655 primary schools. Direct evangelistic missionaries are comparatively few. On the average about 9 missionaries among a million people. Where will this end?

Looking over this situation the challenge of the hour is evident, namely, to return to widespread evangelism in the power of the Holy Spirit (Zech. 4:6), to reach the unreached wherever they may be spotted, whatever that might cost, and disseminate the Gospel far and wide.

This is India at large. Our General Confernce Mennonite Mission field is needy to limit as this year's composite discloses again.

Hold Fall Rally in Eastern District

by Mrs. Robert M. Landis

The Fall Rally of Eastern District Young People's Union was held in the Saucon Mennonite Church. Incidently this church celebrated its 211th anniversary two weeks ago.

The speaker of the afternoon was Rev. Wayne Soliday from the Hilltown Baptist Church. His message was based on Colossians the second chapter. The theme of his message was the "Wobbling Christian."

The Projects reported by the individual societies were mostly connected with relief, one society reported giving Bibles to negro migrant workers in the vicinity.

The President Ralph Lewis presided and the Lansdale church had charge of devotions. Rev. Herbert Fretz had charge of the song service, and The Souderton Church and East Swamp Society furnished the music.

There is no common cold; it is really at least two different diseases. So reports the Pathfinder. The cold which travels from nose to throat may really be a pair of colds, caused by different viruses. Experiments with guinea-pig C. O.'s showed that nose colds could be produced in twenty-four to forty-eight hours, but that throat colds might take as long as five to seven days for incubation. Throat-colds seemed to give a temporary immunity against reinfection. Nose-colds did not.

The Evangelical Youth Fellowship

by Raymond M. Veh

(This continues a series of articles presenting the organization and activity of youth in other denominations. Ed.)

History was made for the youth of the Evangelical Church when an equal number of leaders and youth met in Chicago, Ill., Februray 23-27, 1944. During that period the council of the new Evangelical Youth Fellowship was organized. Programs and materials were outlined. Far-reaching steps to insure the voice of youth being heard in the Evangelical Church were taken.

For twenty years there had been agitation for a single, strong, unified work for youth in the Evangelical Church. With the approval of the General Conference of 1942, the boards of education and of missions through a Committee of Fourteen on Unification developed constitutions on the general, annual conference, district and local church levels for a work to be known as the Evangelical Youth Fellowship. The statement of purpose as outlined in the constitution is as follows:

1. To lead youth to an understanding and appreciation of Jesus Christ and the acceptance of him as Savior and Lord in all areas of life and conduct, and into a progressive development of well-rounded Christ-like character.
2. To unite all youth of the church in one fellowship.
3. To provide opportunity for youth to serve the purposes of the kingdom of God through the Evangelical Church.
4. To unite youth for Christ and the church and unify their activities into a comprehensive, integrated and cooperative program based upon the interests and needs of youth.
5. To make youth useful in the service of God by training them in all forms of Christian work.

On the local level the Fellowship is an inclusive program. The constitution carefully provides for this, specifying that all young people are "potential members of the Fellowship and become actual participating members not by "joining," but by subscribing to the purposes in its activities. The age limits, 12-24 years or grades 7 through college in educational grading) are fixed, but provision is made to interpret these flexibly and to departmentalize the organization of the Fellowship according to the experience of the age grouping. Thus there are intermediate, senior and young people's departments within the Fellowship for churches that have sufficient youth for these several divisions. Churches with smaller groups of youth may have one or a combination of these departments.

The former Evangelical Leagues of Christian Endeavor and the Young People's Missionary Circles have now become the Evangelical Youth Fellowship. The church school as a school is still responsible for the instruction of the young people's classes, but the organizational activities of such church-school departments and classes are thought of as integral parts of the total Youth Fellowship program. The evening devotional-discussional meetings, the through-the-week youth recreational and service activities are now included in one effective, strong program.

In the past two years the Evangelical Church has found a transition from several youth groups into one Evangelical Youth Fellowship to become a satisfying reality. The Fellowship has joined thousands of young people into unified loyalties, permitting them to think and work as one body. It is meaning much to the cause of Christian education. There are four commissions in each of the levels—the Commission on Spiritual Life, the Commission on Missions, the Commission on Recreation and the Commission on Social Action. Worship, study and recreational programs are similar to those of all fellowships.

Probably the most unique phrase of this denominational Fellowship is its missionary work. Dr., Paul H. Eller in the History of Evangelical Missions states:

> "Jacob Albright, the founder of the Evangelical Church, was fundamentally a Christian missionary, assuming as every missionary does, that men need God more than they need anything else in the world. Albright's ministry not only conformed to a sensible and ecumenical conception of Christian missions, but his faithful service was undergirded with all the motives which continued to inspire Christian missions and missionaries."

The Commission on Missions plans a program to interest young people in the missionary program of the Evangelical Church and in the Christian world community by imparting missionary information, cultivating interest and participation in missionary activities, sponsoring reading of missionary literature and promoting study classes in missions. It also promotes the interests of the World Service Fund. This Fund has the following objectives.

Miss Wasser is completing the term of Mrs. Ernst Harder, formerly Ruth Ewert, who is leaving for South America with her husband to serve in the work in the Chaco, Paraguay, among the Mennonites there. The Harders will be leaving early in 1947.

Miss Wasser's home is Bedminster, Pennsylvania, and she is a member of the Deep Run Church. At present, Miss Wasser is a student at Bluffton College, being a Sophomore. She will finish out the term of service Mrs. Harder is unable to complete.

Spend-a-Day plan	$15,000.00
Appreciation Offering	10,000.00
Self-denial Offering	5,000.00
Lincoln Pennies Offering	1,500.00
Special Mission Projects	12,000.00
Kentucky Hospital Fund	2,500.00
Memorial Gifts	2,000.000
Kingdom Service Fund	12,000.00
Denominational and Interdenominational Relief Projects	5,000.00
	$65,000.00

Spend-a-Days at two dollars each are solicited from young people to help support missionaries in the field. Every annual conference E.Y.F. has one or more Evangelical missionaries assigned. The other offerings help maintain missions abroad and in the homeland.

One of the developments of the last meeting of the Fellowship Council held in Chicago in September, 1945, was projection of youth service on a subsistence basis. This will call young people to render service in home mission areas and in overseas areas. The plan is presently in the process of development.

In recent meetings of the General E.Y.F. Council, church-wide objectives have been established, an emblem, colors and motto adopted, and many materials developed. The General Fellowship itself will meet quadrennially when a great Convention of Christian Education is held for the denomination in the summer of 1946. The Council, composed of ten young people and ten adults, meets annually. For the twenty-four annual conferences of the church across the United States and Canada a similar set-up is maintained. This utilizes many youth.

This denomination now looks forward to the union with the Church of the United Brethren in Christ which will take place late in 1946. Its organization may be altered somewhat, but there is belief that young people will find real challenge through the program and activities of the youth work developed for the new denomination—Used by permission of Youth.

Items of Interest

In several places in the country, the question of the relations of church and state have been raised in the form of proposed legislation that parochial schools use state funds to finance bus transportation of school children. In twenty-two states such legislation is reported to be enacted. In Wisconsin a referendum on such legislation was decisively defeated by a sixty-seven thousand plurality. This legislation, supported and naturally wanted by the Catholic church, looks quite innocent on the surface, but actually challenges a basic position the reformation movement took which is the separation of church and state with no state funds being used in support of the church. It is expected this issue will arise in other ways again.

A number of individuals, churches, and other interested groups have been urging that President Truman grant amnesty to conscientious objectors in prison and Civilian Public Service Camps. It has been pointed out that the President has granted full pardon to several thousand ex-convicts who had served in the armed forces. C. O.'s continue to reside in prison—at present one thousand are reported in prison.

The state of Alabama, in the recent elections, empowered the legistlature to enact legistlation which would discriminate against Negroes in such a way that they would be unable to vote. Reports out of the South indicate that the race issue is a heated one. Likely it will be for some time in the future.

An interesting and challenging report comes out of Europe about the work of Phillipe Vernier, a Belgian minister in a small mining town tucked away in a corner of Belgium. Vernier, who faced many trials because of his C. O. position during the war, is now working with German war prisoners as well as with his own church. The prisoners are mining coal and the little Protestant church, under Phillipe Vernier's charge, strives to serve them. Those that work in the mines take extra lunches for them. The prisoners sang in an Easter Day program at the church. An aged miner, suffering from the dreaded and fatal silicosis, continues to go down in the mines against doctor's orders because he feels he can keep the foreman from being so cruel. The miners, after working in the mines all night, go to church on Sunday morning.

The Zondervan Publishing House Grand Rapids, Michigan, has announced an "international Christian fiction" contest. There are to be three prizes awarded for "evangelical Christian material," the first of $7,500, the second of $2,000 and the third of $500. The deadline for manuscripts is December 31, 1948.

THE SPARROWS

I have found great solace in the sparrows
That chirp their tuneless songs upon the air:
Their little, drab, inconsequential flittings,
Their busy stirrings are a cure for care,
As I recall the gentle words of Jesus
To His disciples on that far-off day:
"Are not two sparrows sold for a farthing?
And are ye not more valuable than they?"

And "Not one falls except the Father sees it."
I draw strange comfort from these simple words,
For often through gray days I am companioned
By these watched-over, numerous small birds.
It comforts me to know that day and night
I, too, am kept within the Father's sight.

FOUNDERS DAY AT FREEMAN JUNIOR COLLEGE

Dr. Ralph C. Kauffman, Professor of Psychology and Sociology at Bethel College, will be the guest speaker at the annual observance of Founders Day on Saturday, December 14. Dr. Kauffman is one of our own graduates, has an enviable reputation as a teacher, and has proved to be a most stimulating speaker. His recent two years experience as a relief worker in India will enrich his presentations, and we are anticipating a record attendance. The plan for the day is to have Dr. Kauffman speak twice, in the morning at 10:30 and again in the evening at 7:30. His subjects will be (morning) "Education for Character," and (evening) "Relief as an Aspect of Missionary Work."

The afternoon program will begin at 2:00 o'clock and will be in charge of Ernest Lichti, Director of Music at the College. It will be a musical program. The customary lunch during the noon hour will be served by Miss Ratzlaff and her Home Economics Department.

MENNONITE CHURCH DONATES 100-TONS FOOD TO A. R. I.

To help overcome the tremendous food shortages so apparent today on all sides among forty-five million people in Italy, the Mennonite Central Committee of the Mennonite Church, of Akron, Pa., is contributing thousands of pounds of foodstuffs to American Relief for Italy.

As a part of its relief program, the Mennonite Central Committee has already shipped through A.R.I., the following essential food:

From its warehouse at Silver Spring, Pa., a total of 32,270 pounds of canned goods including vegetables, dried vegetables, meat, whole milk in powdered form and flour.

An additional contribution of 1,231 cases of canned foods that were collected by the Mennonites at Reedley, California.

A third contribution represented by six hundred bags of flour that came from Baltimore and was consigned to the New York warehouse of A. R. I. These generous donations represent the combined efforts of Mennonites in various parts of the United States to share with the starving people in Italy their food supply.

These shipments are a part of the relief program which the Mennonite Church has organized to fill a quota of 100-tons of foodstuffs to alleviate the hunger and distress of the Italian people.

late himself. Internationally, politically, economically, man is seeking for salvation. This is also true of the individual. Note the wide-spread interest in the application of psychology to personal problems. Consider the millions which turn to the cults. The people of today want life; they want it abundant and eternal; they are looking for salvation. In general the Church seems to be comparatively ineffective in the situation. Men of government and business make the news which excites the readers. The Church seems to determine little of that which so vitally affects the daily and future welfare of the multitudes. And so the millions of the earth look for salvation. God grant that the time in which we are living may be the Advent Season of a great salvation through Jesus Christ and His Church.

Deutches Weihnachtsprogramm At Bethel College

For a number of years the German Department of Bethel College, assisted by the French and Spanish classes and the Music Department has been giving a German Christmas program. The singing of old familiar Christmas carols and the playlet have found favorable reception with young and old. This year the playlet will be given by our Dutch students who will portray a Christmas celebration in Holland. The program is scheduled to be given Thursday, December 12 at 7:30 P. M. in the chapel of the administration building at Bethel College Everyone is welcome.

SASKATCHEWAN MINISTERS CONVENE

About forty ministers, a small percentage of all those in Saskatchewan, attended the Ministers' Conference held at Herschel, October 23, 24. Dundurn, Hanley, Drake, Watrous, Leroy, Saskatoon, Langham, Rosthern, Glenbush, Rabbit Lake, Rhineland, Eyebrow, Superb, Fiske, Osler, and Hague were represented. A service on the evening of October 22 was designed to prepare the hearts of all present for the conference. Rev. H. T. Klaassen of Eigenheim preached on Acts 1:1-8 and Rev. H. T. Klassen of Rabbit Lake on Hebrews 12:1-3. They dwelt upon the unfinished work of the Cross.

Chairman of the conference was J. J. Thiessen, and J. J. Schellenberg and H. T. Klassen acted as secretaries. A conference sermon and prayer preceded the business session. Reports were given on mission work in the home, the church, and in the schools. There still is a shortage of teachers for the Junior College and for the Bible schools at Swift Current and Rosthern. Much has been done to fix up the Bible School at Rosthern, but Swift Current is in dire need of a new location. Nothing definite is known about the new Bible College, "but plans are being made to locate a position in Winnipeg for the purpose. The location is desired in Winnipeg so that it might be well centered so students from other provinces may attend." The report on home missions by G. G. Epp of Eigenheim showed but few workers active in the area now, whereas in the summer months all districts were contacted and five men served the outlying districts. The community of Prince Albert Region is starting out on its own.

Rev. J. G. Rempel is again in charge of a minister's study course for the coming year, and all "ministers are requested to attend and refresh themselves with new methods and ideas of the work."

The report on foreign missions, by P. Schroeder of Drake, emphasized that more missionaries on furlough should visit the Saskatchewan churches.

In the evening service those present were "admonished to prepare for the coming of Christ . . . ."

It was agreed that there should be no canvassing of old people for the homes for the aged, that "wherever possible they should be cared for by their children.

H. W. Friesen reported on the work of the Youth Farm and the Youth Organization. The organization may soon be debt free.

The two-day conference closed with a treatment of the topic "The Reward for Faithfulness" by Rev. J. J. Friesen.—The foregoing is a summary of a report by Ferd. Ediger —Grace Church, Lansdale, Pa. Stewardship Sunday was observed in our church on Sunday, November 24. Forceful messages on tithing were given at the morning service by a guest speaker, Capt. This money will go into the fund for a new church building. Thanksgiving Day in our town is celebrated annually by a union service in the Methodist Church in which all of the churches participate with the exception of the Roman Catholic. The Thanksgiving message this year was brought by our pastor, Rev. Plenert.—Ruth E. Fretz, Corr.

NOTICE

The General Conference Peace Committee very much appreciates the support our churches have given the C. P. S. project. Men have now been discharged rather rapidly. Camps have been closed from time to time.

The quota basis for the support of C. P. S. camps was 25 cents per member for the two months of October and November. We would encourage those churches wishing to contribute unpaid balances to do so.

At its last meeting the MCC Executive Committee decided "that in view of declining C. P. S. and the balance on hand, the C. P. S. quota for December be suspended and the matter of future C. P. S. financing be referred to the annual meeting (January 2 and 3, 1947)."

Any extra funds can and will be used for special projects.

November 13 the Native Indian Missionary Family gave a program in our church. Rev. and Mrs. Daniel Schirmer and the lovely girls Ruth and Elaine contributed, stirring our heart with the need and a desire to help in the work in Hopi Land. Nov. 28 Missionary and Mrs. Aron Jantzen from India were with us in our Thanksgiving Services. Mrs. Jantzen spoke to the boys and girls about thanksgiving in India. Our Sunday School children than brought their special thank-offering. Then Rev. Jantzen gave a challenging message, presenting the need and asking for more workers. Christ Christians Christmas

Christmas festivities in the little church above must be a happy occasion for the Swiss Christians who live in the valley where it stands. But there was a time when there were no such festivities in this valley; there was no singing of Christmas songs, no reading of the Christmas story, no giving of Christmas gifts, no Christmas joy shining in the eyes of young and old. The mountains towered up towards the blue as they do today, but there was no quaint little church nestling in the valley below.

Before there could be Christmas in a church there had to be the Christ. And in the fullness of time it came to be that men could declare: "For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given: and that government shall be upon his shoulder: and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, The mighty God, The everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace." Christ was born, but it took more than his birth to make Christmas possible.

It took Christians. Before there could be a Christmas, Christ had to be born in the hearts of men and women such as we are. Only as these Christians embodied the Spirit of the living Christ, the same yesterday, today, and forever, could there be the joy of Christmas among an ever enlarging circle of mankind. It takes Christians full of the Holy Spirit to make possible to others a Christmas full of deep meaning. The birth of Christ alone never insures a joyous Christmas for anyone.

(Next page, please)

"Though Christ a thousand times in Bethlehem be born,
Is he not born in thee thy life is still forlorn."

Before Christ could be born in any one of us, He first had to be born in someone else who made The Way clear to us. The meaning of Christmas today depends upon how well Christ is embodied by those who are named after Him. The person who has been helped to release, peace, joy, and power finds the birth of Christ in his own life, a very joyous fact. For it he may thank Christ and one or more people named after Him.

"Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid which is Christ Jesus"

From the editor's point - of - view:

THE BLEAKEST CHRISTMAS since the Middle Ages may be the experience of the people in Central and Eastern Europe this winter according to an MCC worker who writes, "From all reports, Central and Eastern Europe will have perhaps the hardest winter since the Middle Ages. With continued malnutrition, together with hopelessness, the door for widespread disease is wide open. April and March are now thought to be holding the prospects of being the worst months. Germany and Austria, as well as Hungary, Poland, Roumania, Bulgaria, and also the Baltic states are in a very sorry plight. The same thing is true of much of Russia we believe, and Italy is having difficulty getting back on her feet. What miserable and sorry stories come from Europe!" While America prepares for a super Christmas much of Europe may face its bleakest. Once American Christians could not help the starving of Europe because the doors were closed. Now the doors are open and aid can be sent through church contributions through the MCC through CARE packages, through personel parcel post packages, etc. Was Herbert Spencer right when he wrote,

No one can be perfectly free till all are free;
no one can be perfectly moral till all are moral;
no one can be perfectly happy till all are happy.

Can there be a perfect Christmas for anyone as there is a "bleakest" Christmas somewhere?

THAT CHRISTIAN LOVE is a very inclusive matter is readily evident in that great proclamation that begins, "For God so loved the world . . . " That includes everybody. Yet as Christians we are sometimes puzzled as to how we can love everyone. How can we have a feeling of intimate affection for those who have little use for us, for those who seem to make colossal mistakes at the expense of the welfare of one or more nations, for those of a different religious faith, for those who advocate a different economic and social system than we believe in, for those who seem to make it harder for us to obtain the necessities and luxuries of life, and for those unseen millions who are not of the Christian faith? One renowned minister points out that such inclusive intimate affection is not expected of the Christian. He makes clear that the term "love" as most used in the New Testament means "understanding, redeeming, creative goodwill." We cannot bring about intimate affection by the exercise of our will power. But it is plain that we can choose to understand every individual and all people in such a way as to offer good will that reveals the good where others see no good and that makes for a solution of the problem by taking into consideration the welfare of all concerned. Such inclusive loving is one of our Christian opportunities and duties.

" '. . . PEACE among men with whom he is pleased!' " This is the way in which Luk 2:14 ends in the Revised Standard Version of the New Testament. Throughout the bloody centuries the world has depended very much upon military men to bring about those conditions that would make for peace. Wars were fought and then the "peace" was concluded. In general the world has regarded the warriors as being the peacemakers. Even now face to face with the atom, many are still insisting that the way of military preparedness and might is the way to peace. The atomic bomb is treated as "just another weapon." Strategists, who seek to be realistic plan future wars along the line of atomic might and destruction. For many peace is still to be found among men who are well armed. But there are indications of a change of thought. It is now being pointed out that there is no defense against the atomic bomb. Dr. W. A. Higginbotham, administrative head of the Federation of American Scientists has stated in The New York Times Sunday Magazine:

"There is no defense against the atomic bomb. In a future war one atomic attack could do as much damage to Europe's capitals as was done in six years of the last war. J. R. Oppenheimer, who helped to develop the bomb, estimates that atomic weapons might kill 40,000,000 Americans in a single night.

"Will our military leaders be able to say to us: 'At last we have perfected measures which will prevent destruction of your cities and homes.' The answer of science is that they will never be able to say this. No scientist sees any possibility of defense, for two main reasons:

"(1) Because atomic energy is the basic energy of Christmas Preparations

by J. N. Smucker

We are in the midst of Christmas preparations. We are sending our greeting cards, selecting our gifts for friends and family, planning how to spend Christmas day. Our homes will undergo preparations too. We will set in order cluttered rooms, dust and clean the house, and perhaps add various decorations or Christmas trees to give it the atmosphere of the season.

Let the preparation be complete. May it be not only an outer decoration for the observance of a certain day, but also an inner preparation of heart and soul that we may joyously welcome again the Christ-child into our lives. May the tragedy of the Inn-keeper of the first Christmas,—"no room,"—not be repeated again in our own lives.

The weary keeper shook his head,
There was no room, no humblest bed;
In after years, all he could say:
"I turned the Baby Christ away."

Now it could easily happen that we might be so busy and our lives so crowded that the Christ would find no room. So it is important to make inner preparations as well as outer, and so enter into the real joys of the Christmas season. To help us in this preparation we need a humble mind, a repentant heart, and an awakened life.

A Humble Mind

We are inclined to be a proud, self-sufficient, over-confident people. We trust too much in machines and material things. But a proud mind is usually a closed mind. This is a time to put up the shades of our minds that the light of God's love may flood in and drive out the darkness of negligence and selfishness and greed and doubt. We have been stubborn and self-willed and followed our own whims and desires. But Christmas is no season to be haughty and snobbish. We need to bring humble and receptive minds before God and invite Him in to take complete charge. We need to be keenly aware of our own nothingness apart from Him, and our great need and dependence upon Him. This does not mean degrading ourselves, it simply means that we have learned our place. We are aware that apart from Him we can do nothing lasting. Our wills have veered to and fro with the winds of the opinions and wishes of men. We need to anchor them in the greatness and goodness of God. We are made humble by laying our little minds along-side of the great mind of God. We should be humble and receptive and teachable as a child, that God may enter in and find room to fill us with His completeness.

A Repentant Heart

Not only our minds but even more our hearts need preparation. For all the darkness of sin we need the light of His forgiving love. From all our selfishness and greed and hate and prejudice, we need his cleansing. We need to pray in the words of Phillips Brooks great Christmas Hymn:

"Cast out our sin, and enter in,
Be born in us today."

Our hearts need adjusting. Even as a violin needs constant tuning so our hearts need constantly to be brought in tune with God. Christmas is the time to let the melody of the celestial music sweep through our hearts and set them singing again the great theme of peace and good-will. How easily our hearts become cluttered up and over-crowded with second-rate things. This is the time to bring repentant hearts before God that He may cleanse us from all unrighteousness. Then will our hearts be pure enough that we may see God in this Christmas season. Perhaps our hearts have become hard and unresponsive. May God sensitize them so that we may be quick to respond to His love and accept His great Christmas Gift as our personal Savior and Lord. For He came into the world to save those of repentant hearts and to make His abode with them.

An Awakened Life

We need to prepare for Christmas with a humble mind, a repentant heart, but also with an awakened life. How easily we become dull and listless and indifferent to Christ and His claims upon us. The Bible has numerous references to the importance of being awake and alert to all true values. May not this Christmas day be observed only as another Holiday but let us be awake to its real meaning. We are celebrating the Lord's birthday, not merely another occasion for self-indulgence. We need to be awake to the wondrousness and the joyousness of the true Christmas. We must recapture its awe and beauty and thrill again to its good news. Let us awake out of our indifference and be alive and sensitive to the great message of "Glory to God, Peace on earth, Good-will toward men." Let us waken to our responsibilities and opportunities as Christians; be sensitive to the world's needs all about us; alert to the will of God for our lives.

May we really prepare for Christmas with humble minds, repentant hearts, and awakened lives, that the Christ may find room and come in and make His permanent abode with us.

MENNONITES THE WORLD OVER

By Cornelius Krahn

The Mennonite Press

In Holland. For many decades the Mennonites of Holland published a weekly paper entitled De Zondagsbode which was the offical organ of the brotherhood, in addition to many local and district papers. During the war this weekly was discontinued and de Noodbrug served as a small emergency substitute. Along with many other re-organizations of the brotherhood the press has also been affected. A few issues of the new weekly called Alegmeen Doopsegezind Weekblad, of which Rev. S. H. N. Gorter is the editor, have appeared. The editor has had ample opportunities heretofore to prove his literary and editorial abilities. For many years he served as pastor of the Rotterdam Mennonite Church and headed the Dutch Mennonite relief agency.

The new weekly gives a very attractive impression both in content and format. Well written articles in the realms of devotion, religious instruction, missions, worship, conference organizations, young people's work, and theology appear in this four-page weekly. According to plans, items from local churches will be added in order to eliminate the necessity for printing many local papers. Holland, in its emphasis on quality rather than quantity in religious journalism, sets a good example for other countries to follow.

In Germany. All Mennonite publications of Germany were discontinued either before or after the collapse of the country. Mainly because of lack of paper, they have not been able to resume any of them. The official Mennonite periodical of Germany for many years was Mennonitische Blaetter. Steps have been taken to revive its appearance as soon as possible. Rev. Otto Schowalter of the Mennonite church of Hamburg has been appointed editor. He too is well known for his literary abilities and will do his best to provide the Mennonite congregations with the much needed spiritual nourishment and medium of contact. He writes: "We would get the permission to publish the periodical if only there was some paper available. Recently we had an English church delegation in Hamburg under the leadership of the Bishop of Chichester. Representatives of all churches begged for paper. The Jugendwarte can also not be resumed as yet. . . People are starving for good literature and above all, for a good Mennonite periodical. So much could be done now in re-education and handing proper information to our churches." What a mission American Mennonites could perform by helping our brethren in this very significant project as soon as possible.

DUTCH MENNONITES AT WORK

Significant Meeting in Holland. It has been previously reported that the Algemeene Doopsgezinde Societeit of Holland General Conference) in process of reorganization lost its capable chairman, Rev. C. Nijdam. In a recent meeting of the executive committee this vacancy and others were filled. Rev. J. Dozy, the vice-chairman, opened and addressed the meeting pointing out that our day demands leadership and authority but that we should not lose sight of the typical Mennonite characteristic of individual responsibility.

Dr. W. F. Golterman of Amsterdam was chosen the new chairman. Previous to this he was one of the pastors of the Mennonite church of Amsterdam and has also recently been appointed professor of the Mennonite Theological Seminary and the Theological Department of the University of Amsterdam. Among the new committees to function are those that will enable the organization to put greater emphasis on spiritual leadership and to coordinate and absorb the existing movements such as Gemeentedagbeweging with its center in Elspeet as well as the Youth Movement.

Liturgy in Worship was the topic on which Dr. W. F. Golterman spoke at his inauguration as instructor at the Mennonite Theological Seminary and University of Amsterdam. According to the speaker worship consists in spoken words and actions through which the congregation expresses her faith with the purpose of leading to a deeper and closer fellowship with God. The order of such a service is called liturgy. In a very interesting way the speaker pointed out that there is a general revival of liturgy even among those churches that were historically opposed to it, including the Mennonites. One of the points made reads thus: "A Mennonite liturgy would put greater emphasis on the preaching of the Word of God and would avoid the tendency toward mere moralistic preaching in worship."

the universe and its crushing force is all-powerful.

"(2) Because man will always make mistakes in the operation of any defense system.

"Neither of these factors will change. There can be no defense against the atomic bomb."

A group of General Staff experts recently "advised that the only sure defense of the country is political." Had the world not better find out with what kind of men God is pleased?

NEW MISSION WORKERS ARRIVE IN MEXICO

For sometime the Board of Home Missions has been searching for a couple to take up the work in the Hoffnungsau Church in Cuauhtemac, Chihuahua, Mexico. Rev. Frank P. Dyck, Main Centre, Saskatchwan, accepted the call to be the leader of this church.

On November 15 Rev. and Mrs. Dyck and daughter set out by car for Mexico. They arrived at their destination on November 28. Although that day is not regarded in Mexico and in Canada as official Thanksgiving Day, we feel certain it was a day of thanksgiving that they arrived safely, giving thanks to God. It is expected that Rev. Dyck will do some teaching in the school in addition to his religious work.

We request our mission friends to remember these new workers and their new field in prayer at the throne of grace.—A. J. Neuenschwander, Sec.

Shall We Compete or Plan Together-- Which?

by Walter H. Dyck

It is commonly said, "Competition is the life of trade." But is it also a worthy Christian virtue when applied by conference boards and committees in soliciting financial support for each of the various phases of our mutual task? Should we not be looking to a Christian answer to this question?

We must frankly face the fact that the providing of an adequate support for our many worthy avenues of service presents certain problems. We who come to the church service week after week sometimes wonder: "Will there be enough Sundays in the year to make possible a regular offering for every cause that asks and deserves support?" Someone has said, "Why do all of the drives have to come one right after another?" And still anothers, "How urgent is this need?"

There is a sense in which appeals do compete for attention. And it is the sacred right of each individual to designate how much he wishes to give, also where his gifts should be applied. But how is the donor to judge the merits of any particular appeal? There needs to be some guidance in this matter.

Occasionally our office receives a letter, with check enclosed, requesting, "Apply where most needed." Are we, at the headquarters office, to designate the area in which gifts are most needed? Invariably we then write a letter listing a number of pressing needs, requesting the donor to decide. It can be stated frankly that missions and relief have had the stronger appeals in our constituency, and, no doubt, rightly so. This bleeding world needs food, clothing, and shelter for the body; it needs, and will continue to need, first and foremost, the Bread of life. But are we fair to other needful areas of service?

From the angle of the conference we should be careful lest strong appeals seemingly complete for the giving power of the churches. District conference causes may sometimes be overshadowed unfairly by General Conference or M. C. C. appeals. Besides missions and relief, there are the hospitals, the schools, the homes or the aged, mutual aid, ministers aid, Bible distribuion, the Christian Peace witness, the need for mental est homes, missionary rest homes, student exchange, he publication work, and many others. All these require noney in varying amounts. We are now well able to do ll this, and even more. But lack of planning either y the General Conference in cooperation with district onferences, or on the level of the local church and individual donor, has sometimes made it seem that we are attempting more than we can carry out.

In the current issue of the "Gospel Herald" the editor makes a worthwhile suggestion under the heading "Coordinated and Planned Giving" as follows:

"All of our boards believe in the work which the others are doing. Their causes are all interrelated. They do not wish to appear as competitors. But in order that they may not appear to compete, they need to plan together. There would seem to be small reason why one special solicitor should closely follow another in any one community. Budgets of necessary expenditures need to be made, and then properly related to the giving budgets of our congregations. Some representative committee needs to study this whole question, and present to the church a workable plan. The church should undoubtedly give more than she is now giving, and can be stimulated to do so. The war years have opened our eyes to the possibilities. But our hit-and-miss methods of asking for support are against our highest giving efficiency. The time is here for coordinated budgeting, both in what we ask and in what we give. The Lord's work deserves something better than mushroom methods . . . ."

At our last General Conference (June, 1945), a plan was adopted calling for an Annual Union Meeting of all Boards and Standing Committees "to provide clearance for common problems, to review the work of the Conference as a total effort and to decide on budgets . . . . ." This Council of Boards, endeavoring to "seek ways of cooperating with one another for their mutual advantage," and wishing to sense the needs in local churches, includes the presidents of district conferences. It is sincerely hoped that such meeting may help to bring us nearer to an answer to the question raised above.

We are now in the season of the year in which most of the churches plan their offerings in 1947. Last week we addressed a letter to the pastor or leader of each General Conference church, calling attention to the need for remembering each of our various confernce enterprizes proportionately. We trust that the Lord may honor such efforts toward careful planning.

God's provision of the manna in the wilderness, I believe, has a lesson for us in this respect. In Exodus 16:18, we read, "He that gathered much had nothing over, and he that gathered little had no lack; they gathered every man according to his eating." The individaul needs varied, but each had enough. Those who had selfishly gathered too much, found that this unshared portion witnessed against them. Those who had gathered less, found that their needs were still met. It emphasized their dependence upon God, as well as their interdependence upon each other.

Know that the Lord was anxious that all of the various needs in the early Corinthian church be supplied, the Apostle Paul refers to the above incident as he tells them, "For I mean not that other men be eased, and ye burdened: but by an equality, that now at this time your abundance may be a supply for their want . . . . ." (II Cor. 8:13-15).

An illustration of our interdependence which might be applied in some way to any of the other boards and committees is this: Our Foreign Mission Board is becoming increasingly dependent upon our hospitals for well trained doctors and nurses, upon our colleges and the seminary for ever better prepared missionaries, upon the relief agencies for desperately needed supplies in famine areas, and upon each of many auxiliary organizations which help to promote missionary interest in the home churches in our home land.

You have assigned representative men from the various districts with the responsibility of promoting the missionary, the relief, and the educational phases of our mutual task. May it be that "now at this time your abundance may be a supply for their want?"

Christianizing Christmas

by Ernest J. Bohn

Nothing shows more how thin our common Christianity has become than the wholesale paganization of Christmas. The way we Christians go about observing a holiday of such great religious significance as that of Christmas tells the world we really think of it. Something has happened in the history of Christmas which biologists call reversion to type. It went something like this: Although it is very doubtful that Jesus was actually born on the twenty-fifth day of December, it seems to be not at all doubtful that the church began very early to commemorate His birth on the day of Saturnalia, a day of rank debauchery for the superior and well-to-do. But it was always a happy day for one class in that rotten old society—the slaves and the submerged folks who on that one day of the year were free to follow their own devices. And those whom Christ had touched took it to celebrate the coming of him who had set their spirits free all the year around.

That apparently is how Christmas was born. It was an old heathen holiday born again, rescued from the bondage of corruption by the transforming power of Christ. Alas! that it should have backslidden into that old slavery and have become a thing not of the spirit but of the flesh, a gross, vulgar sort of business. In a materialistic age when paganism always thrives best, it is reverting to the pagan holiday from which it once had been freed.

What we write here is specifically for Christian people who desire to live Christian lives. If only non-Christian people in America were responsible for the paganization of this Christian holiday, there would not be much point in talking to Christian people about it. It is to our church people to whom this article is being directed; at least that is what the editor of this paper must have had in mind when he requested an article on the subject. For a very negligible few outside of the regular readers of The Mennonite will ever read these lines.

We believe that our readers will be mostly people who are interested in the Christian way of life and are seeking to live it as consistently as they know how. But occasionally Christian people are almost unconsciously sidetracked by certain subtle influences so that they are taking part in some of the pagan practices about them before they are aware of it. May we then think of some of the positive things Christians may do to make Christmas more Christian.

They will be the things that are most fully in accord with the spirit of him whose birthday we celebrate on Christmas day. It goes without saying that we will need to give Him the first choice of room in our hearts. If we have given Christ a large enough place in our thinking we will relate him to all of our every-day living. We will reflect Him in all that we do. That then will be the key to the whole approach of our problem—begin with Christ in our hearts. That may seem trite to some, nevertheless, it is there where we must place the emphasis. It would be useless to talk of making Christmas a more meaningful holiday unless we could build on that experience in our lives.

May we observe then how such a Christian would be led to give expression to the Christmas season. We, of course, do not expect to give a certain rigid pattern or blue print which tells us just what to do. God save us from such spiritless legalism! But surely we can observe characteristics in a Christian's Christmas that will remind us of the spirit of Christ who guides us in all of our activities in such a way that they would most truly be in accord with His way if He were here in the flesh.

We will think of him first in the home. The home seems to be the most natural place to manifest the Christmas spirit. The Christmas spirit manifests itself in love, and the home should be a place where love is most evident.

Most certainly then there will be family gatherings, and most naturally they will eat together. What sweet memories it brings back to grown-up children, now married with children of their own, to gather around the old family table whenever that is possible. What better time than at Christmas. And if there can be traditional turkey or goose, cranberry sauce, plum pudding, and pumpkin pie, well and good. They are God's gifts. When grace has been said by grandpa thanking God for all needs supplied and asking His continual guidance; for His gift of love in the Christ child in Whose honor they have gathered; and they sing a song which recalls the great Scripture passage, "Unto us this day is born a Savior which is Christ the Lord," and the Angels' song, "Glory to God in the highest: on earth peace: good will toward men" it binds all the family closer together with ties of Love. Such family gatherings with that kind of spirit pervading the atmosphere are of priceless value in what it does to all present from the youngest tot to the oldest grandfather and grandmother.

The first Christmas (although unofficial) was in the family. There was joy and happiness there as the shepherds came in their rustic simplicity to worship the Christ child, and as the Wise Men came to bestow upon Him their adoration and gifts of love. Here was the expression of hearts of love in the best way that they knew how to manifest it. Christmas has ever since been a time of the expression of love to God and man. Thus the true Christian spirit has always been to make someone happy with a much needed and useful gift. With the gift has gone the giver—an expression of friendliness and love for the one to whom it is given. Thus parents, because of the natural love for their children, express it in the giving of useful gifts to them. Children, when they have arrived at earning age, remember their parents with gifts of love.

It is at this point that we would advance a word of caution. For another spirit has often crept in which has taken out of Christmas its original spirit of love and joy. It is a selfish spirit that caused Christmas to revert to a pagan holiday. Even Christian people have been affected by it. Much is made of buying gifts, but they are not for those who need them most. They are for a circle of friends from whom we expect to receive as much as we have given. When this circle is quite large, as it is for many, it literally becomes an economic burden. For most ordinary income families it becomes such a burden in expenditure of time, money, and worry less they be not able to keep up with the Jones' that the end of the Christmas season leaves them almost a nervous wreck. Yuletide of all the seasons of the year is a time when Christians may spread cheer to those people who need the interest, concern, and love of those who have been more fortunate in life than they have been, and who may never yet have learned to know the meaning of the love of Christ in their lives.

Certainly in those post war years, when nearly half of the world lies in ruins, physically, morally, and spiritually and many thousands actually starving physically and spiritually, we will have an eye on that part of the world while we do our Christmas shopping. With Christ in the heart Christmas shopping will be directed in a way which will bring the greatest blessings to those who need them most.

Then there is the manner in which we spend our time during this season. Needless to say that the people, who think of Christmas only as a time of revelling and satiation of fleshly lusts, characterized by a certain type of cheap entertainment, cocktail parties, and night-clubs, do not celebrate the Christian Christmas but only a pagan holiday. Instead of giving vent to all sorts of animal desires, with the inevitable hangovers, the Christian quite naturally turns to other ways of enjoying the birthday of our Lord. He will take advantage of the many opportunities that come to him through the radio and our churches to hear the programs of Christmas music and recitations by the children. The worshipping services with their Christmas carols and sermons, and the great Christmas music, such as Handal's Messiah, will all give inspiration for better and nobler living. They help to put Christ in the center of Christmas. And if we put Christ at the center of this season and day it will truly be a season of blessing and joy.

SPECIAL SERVICES AT PAINT ROCK NORTH CAROLINA

On Dec. 8 to 15 Brother Andrew Holliman, Cordell, Oklahoma, will hold special meetings at Paint Rock, North Carolina, Miss Elsa E. Grantland has labored there for some years and has gathered a nice Sunday School together. Recently there have been a number of converts that have asked for baptism. The Board of Home Missions took this as an indication from the Lord that we should look forward to establishing a more permanent work on this field. The Board has asked Rev. J. J. Plenert to go to the field while Brother Holliman is there.

Brother Holliman and his wife have indicated an interest in mountain mission work. We trust and pray that early in the new year the Hollimans might move to Paint Rock and assume the active leadership.

All those interested in mountain mission work are kindly requested to remember this work in their prayers. —A. J. Neuenschwander, Secretary, Quakertown. Pa.

College and Seminary News

BETHEL COLLEGE

Thirty-two teams from thirteen colleges entered the annual pre-Christmas debate tournament held on the campus December 6, under the direction of Dr. Gingerich. Bethel I (Roland Bartel and Dean Stucky) was one of the three undefeated teams, while Loris Habegger and Ralph Bargen (Bethel II) won three out of five rounds. A good representation from the Conference churches around Hillsboro has been meeting Thursday evenings for courses under the Adult Education extension program, in charge of Erwin Goering. Classes dealing with the development of Christian character, techniques of Christian education, and the Life and Letters of Paul are being conducted by Professors R. C. Kauffman, D. C. Wedel, and H. A. Fast. R. C. Kauffman who recently returned from Souderton, Pa., is also filling speaking engagements in Mountain Lake, Minnesota, Freeman, South Dakota, and Beatrice, Nebraska. D. C. Wedel has been visiting churches in western Kansas.

BLUFFTON COLLEGE

The Men's Gospel team will travel through the Pennsylvania church territory during the Christmas vacation. Rev. Harry Yoder is working in the Indiana-Illinois territory in the interests of the building fund. The Christmas vacation begins at noon on December 20 and continues to January 7. The fuel situation is serious in Ohio. Unless the coal strike ends there is doubt concerning the length of time that schools in this area can continue to operate. The Faculty Club met in the Lincoln Hall lobby Monday evening, December 2. A high school group presented a Christmas play, and members of the club sang Christmas carols. Students, on their own initiative, have raised a fund of over $1,400.00 for the building program. This was raised through individual contributions, by a student work day, and through benefit programs. Dr. Harry M. Gage, formerly president of Lindenwood College and Coe College, was on the campus December 4-6. He was invited to the college to act in an advisory capacity.

FREEMAN JUNIOR COLLEGE

A number of new students have enrolled for the Winter Quarter. The Academy Basket Ball team won its first conference game against Northwestern of Orange City, Iowa. Miss Kaufman, Mr. Graber, and Mr. Neufeld attended a meeting at Hull, Iowa, to make plans for this years Inter-State Forensic and Athletic Meet. Two new kitchen sinks were installed in the Foods Room. Miss Ratzlaff and her Home Economics students have been very busy during the pre-Christmas season. Several boys are again enrolled in this department. The beginners' class in Foods has just finished the breakfast unit. The Home Economics II and III classes will prepare and serve the noon lunch to the Founders' Day guests. The latter class will also prepare and serve the annual faculty Christmas dinner.

MENNONITE SEMINARY NEWS

The winter quarter began December 3 with two new students joining the student body. Leonard Lawrense, student from Holland arrived from Amsterdam. He has had three years of work in the University at Amsterdam for his candidate for theology degree. He has come to America to continue his training for religious work. Arthur Isaac from Aberdeen, Idaho, has joined the students in the Bible school.

Dr. Ed. G. Kaufman of Bethel College has joined the faculty for the winter quarter teaching a course on Modern Missions. The course will first survey the Biblical basis for mission work, the mission activity of the church through its history, and center mainly on present day motives, needs and approaches to the church's work of spreading the Gospel. With the new and rising interest and zeal in mission needs and work, the course promises to be of special interest.

With the Christmas season approaching, the school will have its vacation from December 13 to 30 convening again on the thirty-first. There will be a certain solemnity to the season's joy over the coming of the Saviour for in our land of plenty, there is the realization that people in other lands will observe the joyous season of the Saviour's birth with hunger and want as their lot.

How Far to Bethlehem?

"How far is it to Bethlehem town?"
Just over the Jerusalem hills adown,
Past lovely Rachel's white-domed tomb—
Sweet shrine of motherhood's young doom.

It isn't far to Bethlehem town—
Just over the dusty roads adown,
Past Wise Men's well, still offering
Cool draughts from welcome wayside springs;
Past shepherds with their flutes of reed
That charm the woolly sheep they lead;
Past boys with kites on hill-top flying,
And soon you're there where Bethlehem's lying,
Sunned white and sweet on olived slopes,
Gold-lighted still with Judah's hopes.
And so we find the Shepherd's field
The plain that gave rich Boaz yield;
And look where Herod's villa stood.
We thrill that earthly parenthood
Could foster Christ who was all-good;
And thrill that Bethlehem town today
Looks down on Christian homes that pray.
It isn't far to Bethlehem town!
It's anywhere that Christ comes down
And finds in people's friendly face
A welcome and abiding-place.
The road to Bethlehem runs right through
The homes of folks like me and you.

"Glory to God"

"Glory to God in the highest, and peace on earth, good will to men." These were the words of a celestial choir on the birthday of our Lord. They epitomize the spirit of Christmas. They hold the promise of fulfillment for the deepest yearnings of the human soul. Centuries before the angels sang, Micha had prophesied that "this man shall be our peace." The angels here added a divine "Amen." And from that distant day to this there has been peace for the hearts of "men in whom God is well pleased." Across the centuries star-gazers, shepherds, tentmakers, kings and rulers have gathered to look upon Bethlehem's babe and departed "all glorious within." And not these alone, but humble folk of our own ilk—uncertain, incompetent, and oftentimes afraid—have found their lives remade as wonderingly they stood before the miracle of God-incarnate. Those were not idle words the angels sang; Micah's prophesy was not the "baseless fabric of a dream." Truly, the Christ-child brings with him peace, and the hope of peace. He brings the peace of understanding for those who desperately seek a purpose and a meaning for their lives. He brings the peace of goodly hope to those who fear that there is to be no bright tomorrow. He brings the repose of spirit that comes from the knowledge that here is One who is able to save us from ourselves and make us better than we know. He brings the peace that comes to all who behold the Divine and know it for what it is. When Christmas broke upon Simeon of old, he spoke;

"Now lettest thou thy servant depart, Lord,
According to thy word, in peace;
For mine eyes have seen thy salvation,
Which thou hast prepared before the face of all peoples;
A light for revelation to the Gentiles,
And the glory of thy people Israel."

So let it be.

A Christmas Party

Once we had a party for negro children. It was a special Christmas party for little five to ten year olds. It was lots of fun for everyone, and we felt it helped to prove to everyone that in Christ there is no East and West.

We invited a large group of children to the party. First we checked at the welfare office to find which families were the most needy. We discovered that the negro population was in much greater need than the white people. So we decided to have this Christmas party especially for the negro children. Invitations were extended personally to the children of each family.

On the evening of the party, we went around and picked the children up in our cars and brought them to the party. They were all very excited and happy. When we drove to a home, we would see somebody peeking out from behind the curtain. Sometimes we couldn't even get to the door — the children were out and ready to get in the car and go. When we got loaded, there were eleven children in our car.

At the party, we played a number of group games together, sang Christmas carols and had Santa Claus give presents. One tiny girl was frightened at Santa Claus and had to be taken to the far corner of the room until he left. After the party, everyone was happy and went home feeling they had had a rich experience.

There is one unfortunate thing about such a party. It was good because it gave an opportunity to cut across social barriers and, worse of all, racial barriers. But, it was so impermanent. The influence possible upon the life and condition of the new friends could not be great. The Church needs despartely to prove by its acts that it is not bound by race, or color. It needs to live the universal message it has. A Christmas party is a small thing, but a start in the direction of living out the inner conviction.

Source of Inspiration

By Ruby Chown

Most people have to live some time before discovering for themselves that inspiration is not so much something for which they must wait as something for which they must work. Inspiration and perspiration are said to go hand in hand.

Inspiration does not descend solely from above, but often comes from within. The subconscious mind is steadily at work. Therefore, keep mentally alert; be receptive to new ideas which should serve as springboards, starting us off on new chains of thoughts. Simply because an idea is strange or unfamiliar doesn't mean that there's nothing in it. Consider anything rather than sit still and vegetate. Even false ideas are not necessarily final. They can be changed, and frequently are. It is really remarkable, when you come to think of it, how our ideas can, and do, change. It is appalling, also, to arrive at the stage where one never acquires a new idea and never abandons an old one.

Imagination, the power of seeing with the spirit, is a prolific source of inspiration. Music, art and literature, too, are never-failing sources.

Treat reading as a stimulus to original thinking. Serious study and meditation, both in and out of school and college, prove stimulating and inspiring. Meditation in China is considered a privilege, not a penalty, and all Chinese children are expected to have times of thoughtful solitude. Occasionally we all need to withdraw from everyday activities and take time to think.

Cultivate new interests. Sooner or later life is sure to wear an altogether different face, so that unless we are to find ourselves helplessly at sea, we must become interested in new people and new things. Keen human observers see things entirely overlooked by those who are self-centered.

Bothe success and failure hold germs of inspiration, while lives of devotion of those about us afford continual stimulus, spurring us on to higher endeavours.

Reading the Bible Thoughtfully

But there is danger of reading merely for the sake of reading. There is no particular point in having read the Bible through twenty times if nothing was going on in the mind while one read. That is the danger in measuring our Bible reading by numbers of chapters and numbers of complete readings. Some people get more from reading the Bible once than others do from reading it a dozen times. Here is a course where one may not race. Ground covered is not significant, but rather ground sowed and reaped. The farmer does not talk about how many times he walked round his farm; he does measure his success by the value of the crops he is producing. The whole purpose of reading is to get meaning. Running the eye along line of type and turning pages is not reading. We read when the thoughts symbolized by the printed signs become our thoughts. This is a relatively slow process. It is not a matter of how much you have read, but how well. Great literature deserves careful thought, and the Bible is the greatest literature of all. One should proceed in his Bible reading, thought by thought, rather than chapter by chapter or page by page. It is not good to be driven to reach a certain goal. Some tourists must go so far in a day that they haven't time to see the interesting things along the way. And so it is with some marathon Bible readers. If one verse gives one enough to think on for a day, one verse a day is what we ought to read. Thought is what we want—human thought awakened by divine thought.—Christian Doctrine, October, 1946

The West-Hill Services of Aalsmeer, Holland

by Adriaan Zwartendijk

(In a previous article, we had the privilege of learning of the activity of the young people in Aalsmeer, Holland. In this article, Adriaan Zwartendijk tells of another phase of their work. This time it is Sunday School work, and the ambitious program being conducted is worthy of wider knowledge.)

In a former article I told you something about the Mennonite Youth of Aalsmeer of sixteen to twenty-seven years old. This time I want to tell you something about the West-Hill, the organization for the Mennonite youth from one to sixteen years old.

The West-Hill is a graded Sunday School and has a special system for its services. There are eight grades of age. The first is the "cradle roll" for children in the age of one to five years. From the registrar of the civil administration we receive a statement of the births and to the children, whose parents are not a member of another church, a card is sent. Every year a card is sent on the child's birthday. When the child has become five years old, it gets an invitation to come to the beginners department — for five and six years olds. In this way we get many children of people who are not Mennonites. About 50 per cent of our children are of parents who are not members of a church. When the children are seven years old, they go to the primary department (seven to nine years), and then to Junior - 10; Senior D - 11 and 12; Senior C - 12 and 13; Senior B - 13 and 14; Senior A - 14 and 15.

When the young people are sixteen years old, they visit the youth church about which I already spoke in my former article.

You see that in this way it is possible to teach each child about our Lord Jesus Christ in a way it can easily understand because children of the same age are together. To a child of five years old we must speak in a way different from the way we speak of a fourteen-year-old.

What is the order of such a service? All these services have the same order, but the younger the children, the simpler the service. Every department has some leaders who have each about six or eight children in their groups. And every department has one main leader. The main leader begins with a prayer, and the group then sings a song. These songs are quite different. The seniors have a song book called "Young Are Our Hearts." The juniors and other departments have a book called "Children's Songs," with songs that children from six to ten can understand.

After the song, the main leader asks: "Which of you thought of the sick people?" The children often take an apple or a pear or some flowers with them for those who are ill, and bring this fruit to the main leader. The children who know a sick person may then take one of the gifts to that person. Thus the children are learning that they must do something for those that are ill.

The different leaders now tell a story, each in his own group, a Biblical story or a story of someone who tried to be a real Christian. Then the main-leader gives a short explanation of the story and tells something about the persons in it. Then the children give their own impression of the story either by a drawing, by answering questions, or in several other ways. With a prayer and a song the main leader ends the service.

The children like very much to visit these services. Even Roman-Catholic children visit them, although they must go to their own Sunday School in the afternoon. For this reason we have twenty-one departments in all. They are located in Aalsmeer and east, south and west. For all these services, we need many leaders. At the present moment we have about 120 leaders who are mostly sixteen to twenty-one years of age. They are working in the West-Hill services with great enthusiasm.

These leaders do not have a special training. One day a girl or a boy is asked to be a leader in a beginners or primary department. When they prove to be a good leader, they become a leader in a junior department. Sometimes they prove to be a good main-leader. The service is their training.

The services need much preparation, and every department meets an evening a week to prepare the service. The minister and the two teachers of religion lead these meetings.

Now I want to tell you something about the foundation of the organization. The founder of the West-Hill work was George Hamilton Archibald. who was born May 12, 1858, in Halifax. He became a Sunday School worker in the United States and later on in Canada. He went to England later on and here he organized the Sunday School in the way we now know as West-Hill. It is called West-Hill because Archibald, together with some English friends, bought a house with the name "West-Hill" on the gate. This was in the neighborhood of Birmingham, England. He named his school the "West-Hill Training Institute for Sunday School Workers." Today it is a large college and from there West-Hill came to Holland.

In Aalsmeer, it is a very large organization. Because so many children attend the services, it is the basis for our congregation. The children are brought nearer to God and to the Lord Jesus Christ in a way they can easily understand. Not only children of religious parents, but also children of parents who do not believe come. So, our West-Hill is doing missionary work in our own country, and children, who would not come to God perhaps now do come to our Father. We hope that we still will be able to do this work as well as people can do it, though we know that only God Himself can give us the strength and the power.

THE BIBLE IN JAPAN

Toyohiko Kagawa, who is now chairman of the Post-war Relief and Rehabilitation Committee of the United Church of Christ in Japan, has written the American Bible Society a letter of thanks for the gifts of many thousands of Bibles in both Japanese and English. He says that there has never been a deeper desire for the Word of God or a deeper interest in the studying of it. This is especially evident among non-Christians. For example, in the little village of Yose, near Tokyo, "about one thousand non-Christian young people bought the Bibles, and they have organized by themselves study groups and secured teachers to teach them the Bible twice a week, paying three yen a month tuition." Some day we shall see the fruit of all this.—The Presbyterian

HELP NEEDED TO REHABILITATE MENNONITE WAR REFUGEES

A Statement Of The Problem

General Conference Mennonites will have noticed the MCC release in The Mennonite of November 19 relative to the 10,000 European Mennonite refugees who look to the Mennonites in America for assistance in finding new homes in new lands. In this release mention was also made of the newly created MCC subsidiary organization known as Mennonite Resettlement Finance, Incorporated. The new organization is created especially as a MCC agency to deal with the financing of the refugees' transportation rehabilitation expenses.

The 10,000 refugee Mennonites are scattered in the American, British, and French Zones in Germany and in government maintained refugee camps in Denmark. These people are in a very precarious situation. They cannot possibly return to their original home and the country where they now are is unable to absorb them. Many would like to go to Canada or to the United States to begin life anew and to find relatives and people of their own spiritual kinship. At present the opportunities for settlement in Canada and the United States are very limited. Opportunities for migration to Mexico and Brazil are being investigated now. Paraguay, however, has opened her doors to an unlimited number of these refugees. Many of them want to go to Paraguay at the first opportunity. The Mennonites in Paraguay on their part have offered to take care of 1,000 refugees. The MCC, therefore, is now completing arrangements for the transportation of about 2,000 refugees on a chartered ship of the Dutch government. The movement of these immigrants will not likely get under way before the middle of January.

What Will it Cost

Our people in the United States and Canada have often demonstrated their deep desire to assist these European brethren in their suffering and need, not merely by furnishing them with food and clothing but also by assisting them to a new start in a new land if necessary. How much will this cost? According to present estimates it may cost in the neighborhood of $400,000.00 to transport and settle the first contingent of 2000 refugees. It is the desire of the MCC to raise about ¾ of this in outright gifts and ¼ on a loan basis. In proportion to membership, the General Conference should contribute about $50,000.00 in gifts and $13,000 in loans. The average cost per person for the ocean voyage from Europe to Buenos Aires will be around $135.00. To this must be added the cost of transportation up the river from Buenos Aires to Paraguay and also the costs of rehabilitation which includes such items as land, building material, livestock, and minimum household utensils.

The Method of Raising Money

General Conference representatives from the Emergency Relief Board and the Board of Mutual Aid have met with representatives of other MCC constituent groups to discuss ways of providing assistance to the refugees. All were agreed that the same general methods of raising money should be used as were employed in raising funds to finance CPS. That is, each constituent Mennonite body would raise funds through its existing boards and committees. These representatives thought it best that 75% of the money be raised as outright gifts and 25% be secured as loans. These loans are to mature in 10 years bearing 2¼% interest.

In harmony with our Conference set-up, it is the responsibility of the Emergency Relief Board to receive and administer cash donations to the cause of relief. The Mutual Aid Board is to receive money for loans which it is to administer in accordance with its plan of operation.

Knowing the serious and desperate plight of these unfortunate European victims of war, we urge people in our churches to contribute a little extra for this special purpose so that our brethren may be helped to a new start in a new home. Please send cash donations to the General Conference Treasurer, Rev. Walter H. Dyck, Newton, Kansas, indicating clearly that the gift is intended for the Refugee Resettlement Fund. Contributions of money for loans should likewise to so designated but should be sent to J. W. Fretz, Executive Secretary of the Mutual Aid Board, North Newton, Kansas. Both of these Boards are setting up a special fund to be used in this resettlement program.

Since a good share of this money should be available by January 15, we hope our churches will give this appeal for special contributions their urgent and early attention.

In behalf of the Emergency Relief Board, H. A. Fast, Chairman; J. C. Mueller, Secretary.

In behalf of the Board of Mutual Aid, H. M. Detwiler, chairman; J. W. Fretz, Exec-Secretary.

FOREIGN MISSION BOARD MEETS

The members of the Foreign Mission Board met with the India Workers in the Kansas State Bank, December 7, with the following present: board members D. J. Unruh, A. P. Waltner, P. A. Wedel, Howard G. Nyce, and the Treasurer, Walter J. Dyck. Missionaries present were: Rev. and Mrs. P. A. Penner, and Mrs. J. R. Duerksen, Dr. and Mrs. H. E. Dester, Rev. and Mrs. Aron Jantzen, Rev. and Mrs. Lubin Jantzen, and Rev. S. T. Moyer. The following members of the Women's Organization were also present: Mrs. Frieda Regier Entz, Mrs. A. M. Lohrentz, Mrs. W. C. Voth, and Mrs. Rudolph Goerz.

This meeting gave opportunity for all board members, as well as missionaries, to meet the new workers, Rev. and Mrs. Lubin Jantzen, who are to leave for India shortly. The Secretary read a letter just received from Rev. Kreider, Chairman of the Board, who wrote from Calcutta, India.

The noon meal was served at the First Mennonite Church, and after the dinner Rev. P. A. Penner spoke on what the new workers might find in India compared to what they found forty years ago. The Board agreed that in the future we would recommend 35mm cameras to take pictures of the different fields and that the slides should be uniform 2x2 so that the same projector could be used to show pictures of all the fields.

The meeting adjourned about 3:30 and then the Board held a session until 9:15 P. M. and again Monday until 3 P. M.—Howard G. Nyce, Secretary —Mennonite Church, Butterfield, Minnesota: Our annual church meeting took place November 25. Rev. Alvin G. Becker, Field Representative of the Northern Bible Society, spoke here on Thanksgiving eve, in the interest of the Society. The women have been sewing for relief lately and have cut blocks and sent them to the Arizona mission.—Mrs. Gust. Miller. Corr.

—Mrs. Rodolphe Petter writes. "On April 7 of this year, the Lame Deer, Montana, church had the joy of receiving five new members by the rite of baptism. Last Sunday, December 1, seven more were baptized in the presence of a large congregation. One was a war veteran, who spent most of his three years of service on the Island of New Guinea, though never in actual combat. He is a stalwart Indian, over six feet tall. His parents and two sisters are Christian, and a younger brother intends to join as he gets older."

—Dr. and Mrs. Rodolphe Petter celebrated their thirty-fifth wedding anniversary on December 3. Present at the anniversary dinner were all the Montana missionaries and Rev. Howard Nyce, Secretary of the Foreign Mission Board.

—C. H. A. van der Smissen, who stays at the Bethel Home for the aged, Newton, Kansas, celebrated his ninty-fifth birthday on December 4. Three of his grandchildren who are attending Bethel College visited him that day. Brother van der Smissen reports that his sister Hillegonda, who is ninety-eight, still goes for walks with him.

—First Church, Aberdeen, Idaho: The Missionary Conference from November 24 to December 1 proved a great blessing to those who attended. Every meeting was very well attended. Our speakers were: Mrs. W. C. Voth, Missionary to China; Mrs. J. R. Duerksen, Missionary to India; and Rev. Howard G. Nyce, Secretary of the Foreign Mission Board. This is the first time a full week of missionary conference has been tried in our Conference, and I believe it will be well worth any churches time to try it. The offering for Foreign Missions November 24 was $378.68. The offering for the same purpose on December 1 was $1,028.13.—Arnold E. Bartel, Corr.

—First Church, Nappanee, Indiana: Last Sunday evening we had a half-hour showing of slides on "The Beginning of the Mennonite Church in Switzerland" and messages by two Dutch students attending Goshen College. They have organized a ladies chorus and will present a short Christmas cantata, and a play entitled "On Holy Night." Missionary Daniel Schirmers were with us on the evening of November 7. Sunday morning, November 24, Rev. Frank Wenger, a member of the M. C. C. was the guest speaker at our Harvest-Thanksgiving Festival. The Portable Relief cannery was at Moundridge from November 14 to the November 18. We took the opportunity to can apples and meat for relief. The First Mennonite Church of Christian and our church united in a school of missions. We studied India on four alternate Sunday evenings. The ladies of the missionary societies served a light lunch in the basement of our church at each meeting. Following the meal there were three different group discussions, one for the children, a class for the young folks, and another for the adults. Following the class periods was a general assembly. The guest speakers were: Dr. R. C. Kauffman from Bethel College; Missionaries J. R. Duerksen and Milton Vogt from India; Dr. Fred Brenneman from Hesston and Mrs. Mariam Penner Schmidt from Newton, Kansas. Some beautiful flowers were placed in the sanctuary Sunday morning, Dec. 1st in honor and appreciation of Brother and Sister Jacob Isaac who observed their sixtieth wedding anniversary on Thanksgiving Day. The ladies of the Mission Workers entertained their husbands and guests at a delightfull meal in the church basement on November 21st. Mrs. J. R. Duerksen, a missionary home on furlough from India, was the main speaker.—Corr.

We were glad to have Missionary Moyer and Rev. A. P. Waltner, a member of the Foreign Mission Board, with us for this service. In the evening of the same day the people of this community enjoyed the eighteenth rendition of "The Messiah." We are again starting our midweekly prayer meetings the first week in December. We are looking forward to the return of all our boys that served in C. P. S. Some have already returned and others are expected within a week or two. The Ladies Mission Society held their monthly meeting on December 5, at which they had a lunch and program in honor of Mrs. H. J. Brown. They also presented her with a small gift.

So Shall I Enter . . .

My strength is small,
My weakness is so great . . ..
Yet New Year waits for me
With open gate,
With voice commanding
Bidding me to go
To paths untrod
And tasks I do not know.
O God . . . In weakness
Seeks my soul Thy throne:
Tell me again I am Thy very own,
That in me live not I
But Thy strong Son
Through whom Thy will in heaven
And on earth is done;
Tell me once more —
As in the years before —
That in Thy hand I am engraved,
That by Thy love I'm still enchained!
Whisper again
That in my weakness Thou art great . . .
So shall I enter boldly,
Unafraid,
This New Year's gate!

"Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid which is Christ Jesus"

From the editor's point - of - view:

CHRISTIAN UNITY is one of the most encouraging factors in present-day church life. Churches are uniting. Several years ago the great Methodist Church became one. Just recently the United Brethren in Christ, with 454,000 members in thirty-six states united with the Evangelical Church of America, which has 260,000 members in thirty states, to form the Evangelical United Brethren Church. The union of church groups makes for a significant harmony, which carried out widely enough, should in the end have an influence on non-church groups which find it difficult to get together. How can nations get together if those in whom there is supposed to be the living Christ cannot get together? Every getting together of churches makes peace between larger groups of people just that much more likely, provided the uniting churches are full of the Holy Spirit. And at the present time it seems that much church union could never come about if it were not for a remarkable working of the Spirit. Furthermore, in the light of the fact that Jesus was so greatly concerned that they all might be one, it is very encouraging to note the growing conviction upon the part of Christians that this is something so important that it should overshadow the things which have prevented cooperation. Undoubtedly, some sincere Christians have not yearned for church union because they have not been made conscious enough of Christ's desire for unity. Then again such unions are very inspiring because human nature is of such a kind that harmony does not come easily to it. It is difficult enough to get a group of men to harmonize in a quartet; it is often more difficult to get men to harmonize in Christian worship. There is hardly anyone who can throw a stone at those who hesitate at church union when it is considered how hard harmony and cooperation come in such close and intimate areas as the home, the larger family the neighborhood, the community, etc. In fact, it is an achievement for any individual to be united within himself. Contemplating the difficulty of achieving unity may also suggest where it should perhaps have its beginning. Let church unity begin with integrated individuals. The individual who is at peace within himself can also be at peace with others, and his peaceful influence spreads through family, community, church, etc. Church unity, brought about by integrated individuals, who have been born of the Spirit, is inspiring.

THE WEEK OF PRAYER, which is to be observed by the churches January 5-12, will probably be significant to the extent that those who participate in it observe fifty-two weeks of prayer every year. The prayer of the other weeks of the year will largely determine the quality of this one week of prayer. One of the most helpful aids to spiritual growth is found in those periods of quietness when the heart is opened up to God in confession and searching and the ear of the Spirit is attuned to His voice. Yet in hurry-worry, Western America quiet, calm periods of prayer every day do not come easily. A good deal is made of formal prayers in worship services, the home, etc., but the more difficult type of quiet, hungering, personal prayer is something comparatively uncommon. A Methodist weekly paper carries an article on prayer in each one of its issues. This seems like a wholesome emphasis for those who ought always to pray and never faint. A week of prayer based upon weeks of prayer ought to be a week of significant experience.

A NEW YEAR ought to hold out the promise of maturing growth in the Spirit. There is satisfaction in growth. The individual feels that he is getting somewhere. Therefore the New Year is an appropriate time for a spiritual checkup. If life is not abundant, if one cannot feel "full of life," if conditions are pretty much as they were a year ago, then one may well ask as to whether there is growth, and if not why not. Life is bound to go stale for the individual who has an experience similar to that of a school teacher who had a record of "twenty years of experience," that is the skills and methods of one year repeated nineteen times. Growth means change. Change means seeing conditions as they are and as they ought to be. To see oneself as one is and as one ought to be is a most difficult spiritual achievement. However, it is also one most productive of growth, and consequently of joy and saticfaction. The prospect of a New Year should mean hope for growth.

A New Year's Message

by Elmer Basinger

We have now entered upon a New Year. The old year with all its joys and sorrows, successes and failures, anxieties and struggles, is now behind us. It's record is made and we can not change it. Doubtless there is much in it we would like to change, some things that we have done that we are ashamed of, some left undone which we regret, but the page is turned, the year is gone, and its record stands for good or bad, for weal or woe, to shame or blame or praise as the case may be. But we have received a new sheet, we have an opportunity to make a new start, because we have not passed this way heretofore. Its record is still to be made. Its pages are still to be written. We should have profited by the mistakes we have made and with firm resolve go forward determined to do better this year.

As we stand on the threshold of this New Year, we do not know what it has in store for us. None of us knows whether we shall see its close. We know that some who are here today will have passed the portals of eternity before another New Year comes around. I suppose we can all be thankful that the future is hidden before our eyes, but of one thing we can rest assured that if Jesus is our Guide and Leader all will be well with us. How are we going to meet the tasks and responsibilities, the trials and burdens of the new year? Are we going to start out in our own strength or are we going forth in the strength of our Lord God like the psalmist of old? Can we say with the Apostle Paul: "I can do all things through Christ who strengtheneth me?"

We may prefer to choose our own path without consulting God or commit our way to him. God will not force his leadership upon us, but by bitter experience we shall sooner or later find out that our supposed wisdom is full. Only when we have the consciousness of the nearness and presence of God are we able to face the tasks and trials which loom before us. Only as we go forward in the strength of our Lord God shall we be able to cope with the trying problems that we will have to face this coming year.

Is it not a sustaining and comforting thought to know if we put our hope and trust in God as we face the trials, temptations, suffering, and difficulties, that he will be able to sustain us and that he has promised to supply all our needs. His grace and love is sufficient to keep us through all the trials and vicissitudes of life. We may not have an abundance of power on hand now, we may feel weak and insignificant to face the tasks and trials which are before us, but God has promised to supply our needs from day to day. Jesus taught his disciples to pray for their daily bread. God sent the manna to the children of Israel fresh every morning, and his promise to us is that his blessings shall be renewed to us day by day.

The locomotive generates the steam to drive it as it runs along the shining rails. If the effort were made to put into the boiler in the beginning of the journey sufficient steam to send it to its distant goal, I suppose the locomotive would be blown into a thousand pieces. And so God deals with us on the day by day basis and the hour after hour plan. Lord for tomorrow and its needs, I do not pray, just give me the strength, O Lord, that I need for this hour and this day. For I know that tomorrow will bring me a new supply of what I need to accomplish my task.

Have you ever thought how merciful and good God is to us in not allowing us to know what tomorrow or the future will bring to us? If for example, we would definitely know what blessings we are going to enjoy the coming year, would not the tendency be to spoil us and to make us indolent, careless and indifferent? Or if we definitely knew what griefs and sorrows were before us this year, would it not mar all our days?

When Rudyard Kipling, the great English poet, visited America some years ago, he played on the deck of the steamer on his way over with his daughter, Josephine. They had a most enjoyable time crossing the Atlantic. But shortly after their arrival at New York, Josephine was taken seriously ill. Soon afterwards his own illness became alarming. During its ealier stages, he frequently asked, "How is Josephine getting along?" Then his own illness became so serious, that for a time, the consciousness of his daughter disapppeared, the high fever made him delirious. When he was recovering from his illness, he again asked, "How is Josephine? Why does she not come to see me? "His friends hesitated to tell what had happened for fear he might get a setback and become worse again.

Finally, however, they had to tell him, that Josephine had gone home, not to her earthly home but to her heavenly home, that she had passed away through the dark valley of the shadow of death and that her body was now resting under the snow of an American winter.

Was God not merciful and kind that he hid these coming sorrows from father and child during their joyous days on the deck of the Atlantic steamer?

In view of the fact, that life is a discipline, a school in which the lessons of life and building of true character must be learned, would it not be to our advantage to adopt as our motto for the year, "I will go in the strength of the Lord God," and "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me."

Trials and sorrows are not a novelty in this world. This is a vale of tears, but "they who sow in tears, shall reap with joy." "Think it not strange," writes James, concerning the fiery trials which are to try you. Remember that the gold must be purified in the refiner's fire.

We know that Christ Jesus himself was made perfect through suffering. Shall the disciple expect a different career than his Master? We must enter into the kingdom of God through tribulation. "For whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth." Heb. 12:7 The psalmist confesses: "It is good for me that I have been afflicted; that I might learn thy statutes." This is the testimony of many of God's children who have passed through many fiery trials and severe hardships but by faith and the help of God were able to gain the victory. May the spirit of God lead and direct us, so that we may do his will and fulfill his purpose in our lives the coming year.

By Cornelius Krahn

Russian Mennonites in Western Europe. By now it is a generally known fact that the main Mennonite settlements of Russia no longer exist. Their formerly prosperous inhabitants are scattered all over the globe from Asiatic Russia to Western Europe. It is estimated that some 8,000 of them live in the American and British zones of Germany and some 10,000 in the Russian zone. Dr. B. H. Unruh, Karlsruhe, who has been the representative and spokesman of the Russian Mennonites for more than twenty-five years has compiled these statistics. He has been aided by many German Mennonites such as Crous, formerly Berlin now Goettingen and the leaders of the refugees themselves, and more recently by the MCC workers.

Living conditions. Most of these Mennonite refugees are women and children who live on farms and estates, only smaller groups being found in camps such as UNRRA camps. Those located on farms work for the farmers. Among them are some fortunate ones who receive board, but most of them receive only a mere pittance in addition to the ration alotted to them by food distribution authorities. Thus most of them are undernourished and become easy prey to disease. For the most part they use up their only clothing and shoes working for the farmers. A few have received some clothing from America.

Spiritual Fellowship. Scattered in a strange country among strange people who consider them "Russians," they long for fellowship with each other. Thus they have been organized into districts that are visited by ministers from their midst. Outstanding among them are Julius Kliewer. Heinrich Wiens, Franz Froese. David Klassen, and others. These men contact scattered families, help locate their relatives, and minister to their physical and spiritual needs. Hans Rempel, a young minister, is reported to be very successful in making the principles of Christianity acceptable to young people who have received an atheistic-communistic training in Russia.

Baptismal Services. The visiting ministers have been baptizing a great number of young people who received religious training. According to statistics sent in, these services, scatterd all over the British and American zones, were attended by nearly 2000 people. More than 1000 attended the Lord's Supper and 196 young people were baptized. Everywhere choirs sang, and the Mennonite women even managed to cook meals for 300 people at a time in spite of all the handicaps. At such an occasion in a camp north of Nuernberg while the congregation was eating "Borscht" and Grette Malk", Rev. Sam Goering walked in. Everybody was most eager to see and hear him and longed to hear the words, "Everything has been arranged for your trip to America." He could, however, not yet give them this good news. Again and again they are being asked to be patient. However, this visit by American Mennonites strengthed their faith and hope of a better future.

A New Year in a New Country. These poor homeless people had hoped to be in America, preferably in Canada, before the winter would set in. It is evident that they will spend at least a part of the winter in Europe, and very likely, only a limited number will reach Canada. It is possible that the majority will have to go to Paraguay. We can imagine that families of women and children who have close relatives in Canada, who would be glad to help them, are very reluctant to choose to pioneer in the Chaco. But the constant fear of being sent to Siberia will make them prefer the Chaco. These are the conditions under which many Mennonites from Russia will head for a new country early in 1947. They are in need of our prayers, fellowship and help. (Based on reports in Der Bote Nos. 44 and 49)

A Traveler's Tale

A traveler was crossing mountain heights of untrodden snow alone. He struggled bravely against the sense of sleep which weighed down his eyelids, but it was fast stealing over him, and he knew that if he fell asleep death would be inevitable. At this crisis his foot struck against a heap lying across his path. Stooping down, he found it to be a human body half buried in the snow. The next moment he held him in his arms, and was rubbing and chafing the frozen man's limbs. The effort to restore another unto life brought back to himself warmth and energy, and was the means of saving both. The same law obtains in the realm of the soul. In order that our spiritual vitality may quicken into new life, we must help others in highest matters of faith and hope.

Rev. A. E. Kreider Writes from Calcutta

(Rev. A. E. Kreider, who is visiting M.C.C. relief centers throughout the world, wrote the following letter from Calcutta, India, on November 15. Rev. Kreider, who is Chairman of the Board of Foreign Missions, addressed the letter to Rev. Howard Nyce, Board Secretary.)

It is ten days since I arrived. The Lord has been wondrously good. The journey so far has been without any great difficulty. It is a great joy to be here in India. This is a land of multitudes. Everywhere one goes there are people. The need and wretchedness is seen on every hand. India needs Christ. It has been my great joy already to see the evidence of the power of the gospel to lift men and women up out of their sin and heathenism into the new life with Christ. "The Gospel of Christ is the power of God unto salvation." That is abundantly proven on the mission field. The first part of this week was spent at Champa. I met all of the workers except those at Jagdeeshpur. Mrs. Isaac and the Wengers had been to Korba and stopped at Champa for the first night that I was there. Mrs. Isaac bears her sorrow with great fortitude of soul. The Lord is sustaining her wondrously. She plans to remain on the field for the present. It was decided to have the Wengers move to Mauhadih, so that they may be on the station with Mrs. Isaac. That I feel was very wise. There is no missionary at Korba now. Brother Wenger plans to go to Korba every few weeks. An ordained elder is stationed there from the Indian brethren. Brother Penner is up and about and feels remarkably strong for him. He is able to complete his term as secretary and treasurer of the mission. By January 1, Dr. Bauman will take over the duties of secretary and treasurer. Orlando Waltner is the new chairman of the mission. There is a pressing need for additional workers. The illness of Brother Penner will make it necessary for him to lighten his load. Brother Isaac is gone on to his heavenly reward. There is no one to take his place. Brother Moyer had to return before his furlough time was due, and now Mrs. Moyer will follow him some time early in 1947. The workers are eagerly awaiting the return of Aron Jantzens. They are to go to Janjgir. In the southern end of the field, where there have been over six-hundred baptisms since the first of the year, the village work is under the supervision of Brother Ratzlaff. He has his helpers in Indian elders and evangelists. But the task and the extent of the area to be covered is too much for one missionary. The seed sowing of the past is bearing fruit. Thank God for the harvest. It is an inspiration to hear the report. Last Sunday a Brahmin and his wife, living in a village just east of Champa, were baptized. He has taken his stand for Christ, in spite of persecution and in spite of the possibility that he may lose his position, upon which he has depended for the livelihood of his family.

Early in December thirty-five lepers will make their public confession of faith in Christ and seal their vow by water baptism. The work in the Leper Home is growing. Brother Waltner spoke again of the urgent need for a missionary doctor who can give all of his time to the leper work. The Leper Home is efficiently managed. Joel Asna is a full time pastor in the home. Of the 560 lepers four hundred are confessed believers. The simple, yet beautiful, church which Brother Isaac built stands in the center of the Leper Compound. When one begins he hardly knows what to leave unmentioned.

This next week I will spend with Martin Schrag in Bengal, visiting areas in which the MCC is still carrying on a much reduced program. The period of the emergency is largely passed, yet there is continuing need. Then after that I will visit the following stations and areas: Korba with Bro. Wenger, Dhamtari; Jagdeeshpur; Mauhadih; Champa; thus aiming to visit all stations and as many out-stations as possible. The Church Conference will be held January 3 and 4. According to present plans Brother Schrag and I will leave for Java by about mid-January.

You might be interested as to the placement of the MCC personnel here in India. One nurse at the Mennonite Brethren Mission in Hyderbad; one nurse at Dhamtari and a second nurse will be placed there by December; Two men doing emergency work in the areas where the recent riots had been. One woman to go as teacher to the Woodstock School; one woman at Champa to assist Dr. Bauman in clerical work of the treasurer; one man to assist Brother Waltner in the management of the farm in connection with the Leper Home; one woman in the office here in Calcutta, and Martin Schrag the director. —Faithfully yours, A. E. Kreider

RESOLUTION BY HOME MISSION BOARD

The Board of Home Missions has adopted the following resolution on the matter of restitutionism. The Board asks that this be published in our church papers.

"With the Mennonite and other evangelical churches, the Board of Home Missions of the General Conferences of the Mennonite Church of North America, acknowledges as solely Biblical the teaching that salvation is by grace upon the forgiveness of sin and faith in the atoning sacrifice of the Saviour Jesus Christ, the only-begotten of God the Father; and therefore holds the doctrine of Universalism or of Restitutionism as unbiblical." —A. J. Neuenschwander, Secretary of the Home Mission Board

The "Live Wire" Sunday School Class Celebrates

The "Live Wire" Suday School class made up of young men of the West Swamp Church, Quakertown, Pa., observed the hundredth Monthly Meeting Tuesday evening, December 10, 1946, by a special program and a social. The families of all the members were included, and fifty-nine persons, including children, were present.

On February 6, 1939, the class was organized and twenty men attended the first monthly meeting. Warren Weiss, Quakertown, Pa. was the teacher at that time. The first officers were: Wilmer Rush, Pres. Ray L. Eisenhart, Vice Pres., Dan F. Meas, Sec. and Paul Mohr, Treas. For almost eight years the group met regularly. A resume of the activities as reported at this special meeting, showed that the class has been active in many directions, promoting social, benevolent, and religious activities.

Activities or Expressions of Interests

1. Naturally emphasis was always put on regular attendance at Sunday School and church, and active participation in class discussion. 2. During the years the class sponsored a number of musical programs at the West Swamp Church for the community. 3. The social life of the class found expression in annual picnics when the friends and families were invited and picnic dinners were enjoyed by all. 4. Skating parties sponsored by the class furnished wholesome social contacts for many young people of the community and the class members. 5. For more than three years the class furnished transportation to a large family of children, the men taking turns by the month to get the children for Sunday School and after church taking them home again. This was kept up until gas and tires were so hard to get that it was impossible to continue it. 6. The class furnished the Upper Room and the Quakertown Free Press, regularly for all the boys of the church in all branches of service. 7. The swings for children and the drinking fountain at the Eastern District retreat ground, "Men-O-Lan," were installed and are kept in repair. 8. Many members of the class were chosen as substitute teachers and in this way were "broken-in". They now serve as regular teachers and officiers in the School. 9. Annual program and "carry in" dinner for Guests of the Home for the Aged, Frederick, Pa. by class members and families.

The class received offerings at each meeting, and the total income recorded shows that a total of $681.94 contributed in eight years. The expenditures show a wide range of interest. Here are a few items: Toward drilling well on church property, $15.00, Holder and paper cups, $10.00; Quakertown Free Press, to boys in service, $100,24; Upper Room devotional booklets for boys in service, $19.34; Y.M.C.A. Dues for C.P.S. boys at Norristown, Pa.; State Hospital, $9.00; Dr. Harvey R. Bauman, India, $50.00; toward erection of "Over-Shell" Cabin at Men-O-Lan Retreat ground, $37.00; Honor Roll and Names for boys in service, $22.81; Summer Bible School, West Swamp Church, $35.00; Community Children's Home, Inc., Quakertown, Pa. $32.00; Fountain at Men-O-Lan, Retreat Ground, $34.36; two collection plates, $7.00; help to colored itinerant workers when they had a fire, $5.00. Naturally there are many other smaller items.

The Secret of Success

The class fills a religious and social need. Monthly class meetings are held with great regularity, and these consist of hymn singing, devotions by different members, business, discussion, and refreshments. The discussion period is the heart of the class and all members take part. Subjects used are: 1. What are the benefits of public worship as compared to private devotions? 2. How can religion be vital and attractive in the home? 3. Are "white lies" ever justified? 4. What kind of recreation truly satisfies? 5. What does the Live Wire Class mean to me? 6. What place does the Jew have in America now and after the war? 7. Is it right for a Christian to be a member of a radical Labor group? 8. Discussion on "Tithing." 9. Why do some churches make more progress than others? 10. What should our attitude be toward the Negro?

For the past six years Howard Shelly, East Greenville, Pa., R.R., has been the teacher of the class. Rev. A. J. Neuenschwander, Pastor of the church, belongs to the class and attends Sunday School sessions and class meetings when possible. Present Officers are Joseph M. Bast, President; Warren Sell, Vice President; Paul Mohr, Secretary; Samuel Myers, Treas. — Mrs. Earl Schmeck, Corr.

Condition of Displaced Mennonites in Berlin

Bro. Peter Dyck reports on the conditions of the several hundred refugees being cared for in Berlin. He states that health conditions are improving. Two to four funerals were held each week for several weeks when the camp first began. Of the twelve houses in the camp one is used for a hospital and comprises thirty beds, a first aid room, and several trained refugee nurses. A refugee doctor from an UNRRA camp spends the morning of each day at the camp. The group has its own school with some 300 children under 15 years of age and eighteen teachers are giving instruction. Bible school, church services, prayer meeting, and choir practices are held weekly. Sister Dyck has charge of the internal affairs of camp such as conferring with the house-fathers, the kitchen workers, the nusing staff, the teachers, and the cleaners. She is also responsible for working out the ration system of the camp. Bro Dyck says, "It is not possible to have a great deal of variety in the camp diet, but none of the people have hungered, although many of them would like to eat more." A typical menu of the day consists of:

Breakfast:	Tea (substitute) without sugar and milk Bread—three pieces and dry
Lunch:	Bean soup (one plate full only) Bread—one piece and dry.
Supper:	Milk soup with one piece of dry bread or three pieces of bread with minced meat.

Active Group at Caldwell, Idaho

It is now four months that we have been on this field of service, and they have been four busy months. We have enjoyed the fellowship with our Mennonite people here. As for actual progress in the work, I do not know if we can report any; however we hope that we may have grown spiritually as we have fellowshiped together around God's Word on Sunday mornings and some evenings. Since it is so far out to the place where we have our services we have not had many evening services. We have evening services once a month and Christian Endeavor once a month besides our regular services on Sunday mornings. Our C. E. programs have been excellent with good interest in them.

This gives promise of a strong new church.

We are still at work on the writing of a constitution in preparation for the organizing of the church. We will soon have it ready to present to the group for acceptance. After this we will be ready to organize formally as, The First Mennonite Church of Caldwell, Idaho.

We are happy to report that a lot has been found for the location of the church here in Caldwell. It is a beautiful location and I believe one that the Lord chose for us. A church building that would fit our need will be for sale soon, and we hope that we will have the successful bid on it. When once we have a meeting place here in town we believe our attendance will increase. Most of our own people live in close vicinity of town; then also some other families have expressed a desire to attend our church. Even though Caldwell has a good number of churches we believe here is a field of service for a Mennonite church. Our attendance at present ranges between thirty and forty.

We herewith wish to express our thanks to those who have remembered this field and us at the Throne of Grace. We desire your continued interest and prayer in behalf of the work here. As at other places so here too there are difficulties and problems, but by His grace we shall overcome them. —Yours in Christ, Menno and Selma Kliewer, 315 Grant Street, Caldwell, Idaho

Dears Misters!

As a mennonite woman I beg your pardon, if I, in spite of small knowledge in English language, I write you, for ask an advice, by what manner I can get the addresses of my relationship in U. S. A. My grandmother, Miss Anna Franz, born 28. 9. 1851, with her maiden name Franz, married first with Heinrich Goertz and later with Leonhard Franz, saw this addresses, but she died few years ago, in her 92 years of life, since to give us those, because we were separated by the terrible war. Now we found in her heritage the pictures of the relationship which were going to USA in the years 1870/71.

My mother remembers only, that this were:
Heinrich Schroeder, from Montau, district Schwetz, from Ouestern-Prussia, with his wife (uncle and aunt of my grand-mother) and the children:
Elisabeth later married with Mr. Lucht
Marie later married with her brother-in-law Lucht
Heinrich
Johann
Gerhard and Wilhelm Schroeder
all living in Newton, Kansas—USA

Probably now is living only the 3. generation and for this it may be very difficult to recover the addresses, but because all the man and woman were mennonites, I hope, that you can help me.

Perhaps they have not the picture of their grandfathers and grandmothers which I will send them. I may get news from the relationship and I hope, this news is better, than I can give from my family having lost by the furoius war and the mazisme all our fortune, business even our country, as very many other Germans.

I will be glad, if you can me give an advice and I say you many thanks for your troubles,

What Is Starvation?

by Lester Glick

What happens to the personality and what is one's religious outlook on life in a semi-starved state? How much weight does one lose in six months on 1,600 calories daily or one half the amount of a normal American diet? What happens to muscular strength and coordination? What are the changes that occur physiologically in respect to heart function and size?

These and related problems have been the subject of much concern to those who have been attempting to minister to those in starvation areas. Consequently, in the fall of 1944, thirty-six conscientious objectors went to the laboratory of physiology at the University of Minnesota to participate in a starvation experiment. The diet for the nine months consisted of foods found in the deprived areas of Northwest Europe. These foods were primarily potatoes, turnips, macaroni, and cooked cereals. The same foods were repeated in almost identical diets during the six months of semi-starvation, and again in the three months of rehabilitation except that various nutritive supplements were added in the latter phase.

After six months of starvation, the subjects were quite a spectacle in contrast to the previous pictures of normal, healthy youths. The amount of weight loss varied from about thirty pounds to sixty-five pounds. The actual weight loss was even greater considering a condition called edema which had developed already in the second month of starvation. In nutritional edema, water takes the place of tissue in the cell and disturbs the water balance in the whole system. This increased hydration has a tendancy to move from one part of the system to another so that if one walks much during the day his feet become so swollen that he must loosen his shoe strings for comfort. Upon rising in the morning the cheeks and face often showed definite swelling. From these observations one can easily see the fallacy in attempting to determine a worthy recipient of relief by a weight observation and a quick periphearl examination. The apparent fair nutritional appearance of an individual may be merely an adema state of water having replaced body tissue.

The skin became cold and pallid despite repeated attempts of the subjects to get a "good color" by lying in the sun. The body temperature dropped from the normal of about 98.6 degrees to a low of 95.8 degrees. The heart decreased in size appreciably and the pulse thereof diminished from a normal of seventy pulsations per minute to the low thirties. As a result of the afore-mentioned factors, the "Guinea Pigs" often complained of being cold. Even in July they sometimes wore top coats. The temperature of the room had to be in the high seventies or low eighties for comfort. If proper clothing would not have been available, the subjects no doubt would have suffered much from exposure.

Another result of the retarded body functions was that the system could not fight off infection or disease as readily as previously. If a finger was accidentally cut or if a blister developed from a rubbing shoe, the injury had a tendency to fester and become very irritating rather than to heal in a normal fashion. One can easily understand why many in deprived areas have sores over their bodies. In addition to their lowered resistance, many can only get one small bar of soap a month, thus increasing the likelihood of infections and disease.

Fainting was quite common due to the slowing of heart activity. Attacks occurred during a varied number of activities from that of hurrying to catch a bus to that of standing up too quickly after having been seated for a period of time. During the war particulary one heard many reports from the fields of stress of people fainting at their jobs. In the case of enforced laborers, these 'black-outs" may often have been mock faints to get out of work, but established data from the experiment would indicate that they could often have been genuine.

When the men volunteered for the deficiency diet, they expected to be hungry. Therefore, when they developed a goodly appetite they were not surprised or disturbed. However, when their strength began to wane and their powers of concentration were lost, the subjects began to feel that they were losing their grip on their personalities. At this point the subjects experienced an acute frustration. This frustration invariably brought on an intense preoccupation with thoughts of food. The extent of this interest varied within the group, but usually became so intense that nearly all the subject's time was consumed in visiting grocery stores, walking past bakeries, studying cook books, or day-dreaming on some subject related to food. Many took up the hobby of studying foods and collecting recipe books. One man had accumulated over sixty cook books plus several good files of recipes by the conclusion of the experiment.

A prerequisite to being chosen as a subject in the experiment was that the individual must have had an interest in relief work. Gradually the language books, area study books, and other material pertaining to relief began to disappear, and were replaced by lighter literature including comics, cook books, and miscellaneous fiction.

Many of the subjects were quite secure in their vocational interests upon arriving in Minneapolis. Nevertheless, their interests changed in many instances during the semi-starvation period. All became interested in

A New Year Begins

Last year, the following quotation was used in the January 1 issue, the New Year Issue of Mennonite Youth.

"I said to a man who stood at the gate of the year, "Give me a light that I may tread safely into the unknown, and he replied, 'Go out into the darkness and put your hand into the hand of God. That shall be to you better than a light and safer than a known way'."

—M. Louise Haskins

This statement was used by King George VI on New Year's Eve as 1940 was being ushered in. That was the time of foreboding and uncertainty for the war then was four months old. Little was known what the next year and years would bring. The future looked black. Men were despairing. This sublime plea for faith in the face of everything, faith that by putting ourselves into God's service and trust Him, we would not need to know or see what is ahead, bears much weight as the basic spirit everyone must have in order to find life.

But, a word of caution is in place. The beauty of this thought and plea may cause us to dodge certain responsibilities. We cannot and must not become lazy and feel we have done all that is expected or needed by putting our hand in the hand of God. For God expects us to walk with Him. We will not move if we don't walk. He won't carry us. We must go and to go we must walk. We have responsibilities.

Let us look at our responsibilities. What are they? Elsewhere in this issue are recorded facts and information about the experiences other people are now undergoing. The 'nothingism' or Nihilism of 80 per cent of the German prisoners in a Belgian camp — how they have given up hope in any and everything, the church, democracy, God, the nation, everything has lost hope for them. In Germany the facts come out about the state of things, lack of food, the high T. B. rate, no industry, economy, all is crushed. The same stories come forth from Japan. China, India and much of Europe all bear countless tales of the despair of these days.

Of what significance is all this? Won't the bitterness of these hours pass and the future bring hope? Why should I worry about it, I am happy and well supplied?

Ah, if we only were. We all recognize the insecurity of these days. Not only is mankind suffering from the agonies of its madness, but the future offers little in the way of security. The atomic bomb has many highly skilled scientists and interpreters convinced that the future is one great uncertainty. Religious leaders speak of a sudden end coming to mankind. Scientists say the first hour of an atomic war would destroy ten per cent of the population. Other fantastic predictions appear in the news. The future is one of gloom and, for many, the future contains all the elements of bitter despair.

What, then, is the Christian's approach and answer to an age of insecurity and uncertainty? An age in which the future, instead of being one of bright optimism is one of abject pessimism?

Young people entering into a world such as this with the outlook prevalent face both immense opportunities and keen problems. They need to take the world for what it is with the conditions existent and work in such a situation in a practical manner. Here are some suggestions.

1. What does Christian faith have to say? In order for us to be solidly based, we need to build within those assurances and realities that sustain in the face of all conditions of life. A faith, centered in the person of Christ, has done this for millions throughout two thousand years. This is not the first time Christian people have looked out upon a world of despair. In some ages Christians have been more severely tried than today. Certain great Biblical passages such as "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world" seemingly written for these conditions. We need to find what sustains, supports, and inspiries.

2. Should we do anything? Indeed we should. Even though Paul repeatedly in his letters stated the consummation of the age was at hand, he did something. To this day, he is the oustanding missionary hero. There is much to do. In the midst of the cruel and horrible Roman persecution of Christians in the third century, the Christians, during a severe plague, went about helping the sufferers from the plague. Often the very sufferers they helped were the very men who were persecuting them. And through it all, they were praising God. Such a spirit is always in place. The Good News of Jesus is one of ever ready helpfulness. All sufferers are helped — spiritually, physically, mentally. Sometimes in the midst of our comfort and wealth, this is forgotten. But, regardless of what the future holds, the Christian strives to help and to serve. Thus is his love shown for God and man.

It is impossible to wait until all conditions are desirable and right before we do anything. It is impossible to ask for better conditions and expect them without translating our faith into action.

So, although youth faces a future with all too much gloom and despair, they also face a future packed with opportunity. Opportunity to live and do in the face of adversity, the ever sustaining hope and faith in Christ, the constant assurance that God ultimately rules. As the new year begins, let us be kneely aware of the obligations and opportunities of the hour.

A Look at Conditions in Europe

As the New Year begins, a glimpse into the conditions about us is in place. These brief reports come from individuals on the European scene of relief work. They are reports that appeared in European Relief Notes and were collected this fall. As we think of the New Year, the conditions of people the world over need to be in our minds and hearts.

A Prisoner-of-War Camp in Belgium

by Delmar Wedel

I'd like to share with you some observation about the reactions of the youth, who now form the largest percentage of the population in the Belgian prisoner-of-war camp. Yesterday I had a conservation with two prisoner-of-war chaplains, who made the startling statement that they have no influence whatever with 80 per cent of the prisoners. There are those, they said, who are faithful, whose faces are seldom absent from divine worship. The tragic fact is that this group of faithful does not grow. In some camps the attendance at service is better, in others more discouraging. The important thing is that in general, the youth are not searching. They are defeated in spirit and in morale.

One chaplain defined the problem by saying that many of the youth are more Nazi now than ever before. Not that the youth are still ardent followers of Hitler, but that they have no principles, no faith in life other than that summed up by that most diabolical philosophy of all—Nihilism. In brief, there are no Christian ethical principles of right and wrong. Life has no particular meaning other than their conviction that their future personal life depends upon employing the principles of expediency and opportunism. It is the philosophy that might make right. It is the annihilation of hope.

It is significant that early in the days of their imprisonment their feelings and thinking were beginning to grow in another direction. The chaplains report that the youth were seeking. They were earnest enough in their search to seek the counsel of chaplains. Theirs was the search for a more meaningful philosophy of life. Then followed one blow after another to their incipient faith and morals. The Potsdam agreement, reports pouring in from all sections of Germany reporting the mass of suffering, reports of a pattern of evil being perpetuated by the liberators nearly as viscious as the Nazi crimes, and above all the imprisonment which has lengthened from day to day, and from months to years. The total impact has resulted in the annihilation of hope. It is not alone a despair of self, but far more terrifying, it is a total despair of the whole creation and the Creator.

For us, who are members of a land of plenty, a land which still offers opportunity, it is difficult to understand how much a despair could grip the souls of men.

Though the picture is dark, there are some, even those who were in the heart of the Hitler youth movement, who are thinking and searching and turning to the Church. In several camps there are groups of youth who call themselves "Friends of the YMCA." Such groups come together as often as four or five nights a week for fellowship, prayer and Bible study.

A Russian Mennonite Meeting in Holland

by Magdelene Friesen

At Grouw (in Holland) about two hundred Russian Mennonites had assembled for the services in the meeting house. It was a simple but impressive service. A choir made up of Russian Mennonite girls and led by one of the Dominies sang beautifully some of the German songs these people know so well. One's heart strings were drawn at the sight of these people who had gone through so much suffering. The women looked bent and worn. Many of them were visibly touched by the singing. Close attention was given to the German sermon given by one of our workers.

After the services a meal was eaten in fellowship with all, and after that everyone, young and old, went for a boat ride. Old Sol did not cooperate with the afternoon and hid his shining rays. As a consequence it was rather chilly and many of the children shivered as they were but thinly clad.

The young people were all in a smaller boat attached to the larger one. To pass the time they sang many of the lovely old German Volkslieder telling of lost homes and lonely wandering. These "heimatlose" young people had lost the carefree look of youth, and though they enjoyed this day of relaxation, they did not have the gaiety and exuberance that a similar group in America would have.

Conditions of Existence in Germany

by Robert Kreider

Public Health. Reported cases of tuberculosis have been increasing since the first of the year, reaching their peak this summer. Tuberculosis remains a greater cause of mortality and disability than all other communicable diseases combined. The shortage of hospital beds for isolation and treatment of tuberculosis continues to be major obstacle to control of this disease. The average weight of the German population continues to decline and in late summer reached the lowest point since the beginning of the occupation. The nutritional status of the population is now so low as to entail excessive morbidity and mortality from infectious diseases in general and respiratory diseases in particular. The increasing rate of the tuberculosis is due to food deficiencies and to overcrowding.

Public Welfare. There are approximately 600,000 disabled persons in the U. S. zone. The majority of these persons were injured in the war and are more than 50 percent disabled.

Schools. In June the ratio of teachers to pupils was one to eighty. In July there was one teacher, on the average, for every seventy-five pupils.

Food and Agriculture. In the American zone food rations for August 19,, to September 1 period were 1,210 calories per day and for the cities of over 20,000 population, 1,295 calories per day. On July 22 the ration scale for normal consumers in the British zone was increased to 1,137 calories per day . . . . A special feeding program for coal miners was established on August 1 to increase coal production . . . During July the U. S. supplied about 165,000 log tons of food for German civilian consumption in the U. S. occupied zone. Milk deliveries are 27 per cent below their 1941-'44 average. The average production of milk per cow is 20 per cent smaller than the 1941-44 period. For lack of feed and fodder, the slaughtering of livestock is to be greatly increased.

General Economic Conditions. Industrial production is dependent upon an increase in the supply of coal and such an increase is not in sight. Transportation facilities are not improving rapidly enough to support any large increase in commerce for a long time to come . . . . The shortage of skilled labor is another limiting factor. Conditions of life in present-day Germany are not sufficiently good to produce vigorous workers. Housing and sanitation are dangerously inadequate. Most important, food rations are below the minimum subsistence level. No economy can prosper without a sound currency and the financial situation is still very feeble.

How Shall the New Year Be Brought In?

As each New Year's eve comes, many different ways are observed in bringing it in. For, along with the great variety of people and the differences in customs, New Year's Eve is used in many different ways.

For many it is an evening of revelry climaxing with wild tumult as the clock strikes twelve. For many, there is no better time than New Year's Eve for much imbibing in strong drink and boisterous drunkeness starting the New Year with a splitting headache and the traditional hangover.

Other ways observed are parties, socials, friends gathering together in a home and playing games waiting until the minute hand reaches twelve. And, many people simply go to bed and sleep as they do any other night of the year.

The interesting thing is that around the New Year's Eve Festival there have accumulated so many different attiudes and practices. For that matter, the same is true of Christmas. Many of us are rather rudely shocked at what some people conceive New Year's or Christmas to be. Their conception is so foreign to the one to which we are accustomed.

Around the New Year's Eve festival, the church has an opportunity and almost an obligation to give it its spirit and outlook and approach. Rather than permit this festival to "go to the dogs," the church can take it and use it in a spirit that will be valuable, unlifting, and inspiring.

At one church this was done by providing for an evening of fellowship for all ages at a watch night party. Games for young and old were at hand, and a place was available for small groups to gather in circles and sit and visit. At 11:30, a brief program of hymn singing was started. Then a candle light service at which the one candle, the light of the world, was burning. From it four persons lighted their candles representing the four corners of the earth. Then, each person in the gathering lighted their candles. All of this symbolized the spread of the gospel and the obligation of the individual to be a light shining in the darkness.

As the clock approached midnight, the New Year found the group kneeling together praying the Lord's Prayer thus beginning the New Year on a high spiritual note of dedication and devotion to the one sustaining Lord and faith and hope of man.

The church is the place were young and old are alike welcome and wanted. By providing for all ages, New Year's watch night services can be rich, inspiring exercises of devotion for the fun loving youth and the meditative aged as well.

Conditions in Belgium

There are still instances where people are killed by the land mines as they walk through the fields or forest writes Cleo Mann, director of the relief unit in Belgium. He reports that the Rocherath community lost 3,700 cattle and horses during the war period. Many animals died in the barns because the people were unable to feed or water them while the conflict was on. The people are attempting to rebuild their homes and many have patched the corners and windows of their homes with blankets and other temporary material to keep away from the cold and rain.

Bro. Mann writes, "We often wish that our people back home who have given so much time and effort to preparing these things to be sent to Europe, might have the privilege of handing them out personally, and to receive the thanks and the smiles which our representatives receive from these people. Such a community needs more than just clothing of food. It needs encouragement and hope to rebuild a community which is still in such a mess. Sometimes one thinks that it is almost hopeless, and again some of them say, 'We'll scarcely get it built up again and have nice streets, and gardens and yards, until another war comes and destroys it all again. ' "

It has been found that "the brain uses a bigger concentration of energy than any other organ." The metabolism of the brain is exceedingly high. It is reported to use calcium as something of a "lubricating" element. Catatonic schizophrenic mental patients show a marked deficiency of this calcium in their brains, according to post mortem examinations. Research also suggests that since the pituitary gland contains more bromine than any other body part, doctors may be able to regulate this gland by the intake of bromine. Owing to its position in the brain the pituitary of the living person cannot be reached. It is this gland that makes for gigantism when it is overactive and for stunted growth when it is not active enough.—Facts taken from the Pathfinder.

Arrangements are under way to hold the annual Young People's Union Council meeting on February 10, 11, and 12 at Newton, Kansas, in cooperation with the General meeting of Conference Boards to be held at that time. A representative from each district is asked to attend this meeting. Plans and the projects of the future are discussed at this meeting and, also, a sharing of experiences and problems as well as the inspiration of worship and discussion together makes this an inspiring meeting.

Suspicion may arise from naught
But malice, envy, want of thought.

"Thy say!"—but why the tale rehearse,
And help to make the matter worse?
No good can possibly accrue
From telling what may be untrue,
And is it not a nobler plan
To speak of all the best you can?

"They say!"—well, if it should be so,
Why need you tell the tale of woe?
Will it the bitter wrong redress,
Or make one pang of sorrow less?
Will it the erring one restore,
Henceforth to "go and sin no more"?

"They say!"—oh, pause and look within,
See how thy heart inclines to sin;
And lest in dark temptations' hour
Thou, too, shouldst sink beneath its power,
Pity the frail, weep o'er their fall,
But speak of good or not at all.

What Is Starvation?

rural economy and particularly in channels of raising enough food for their own consumption. One man who had originally been quite satisfied with carrying mail in his prewar job began to idealize his uncle's big ranch out in Texas, for he could then at least have all the beef he desired at any time. The engineer who had previously worked in a refrigerator factory looked forward to the time when he would be released so that he could build a food freezing unit out in the country to help the farmers preserve their food. The teacher became increasingly interested in agriculture and therefore accumulated a small library of books on that topic.

All the subjects became more occupied with past experiences and especially their previous home life, for they associated good food and security with these memories. Relief workers report that in deprived areas people also idealize countries where much food is available, and day-dream of foods that they used to eat and hope to eat again.

IN MEMORIAM

REV. D. J. EDIGER

Our husband and father David J. Ediger, son of Jacob and Katherina Harder Ediger, was born August 29, 1880, in McPherson County Kansas.

He received his education in the elementary schools of that time and in a preparatory school near his home.

At the age of seventeen years he found peace with his God, and through all the years he never wavered in his faith regarding his standing with God. He was baptized by Elder Dietrich Gaeddert on November 21, 1897, and was received as a member of the Hoffnungsau church, where he faithfully labored as a S. S. Superintendent, S. S. teacher, C. E. worker and song leader for many years.

Even as a young man before his marriage he was active in conducting a Sunday School with Missionary Lizzie Neufeld on Sunday afternoons and a song service on weekday evenings.

In the year 1901, on September 17, he married me, Annie Martens, and for forty-five years we have shared life's joys and sorrows.

To this union were born two daughters and nine sons, of which two preceded him into the great beyond. Mrs. Katherine Kasper on March 14, 1937, at the age of 32, and little Raymond on August 26, 1927, at the age of 2½ years.

In November of 1915 father purchased a farm at Greensburg, Kansas, and we made our home there for five years. Father and mother transferred their church membership to the Greensburg Mennonite church where he also tirelessly helped along in church work. Here he also was elected into the ministry of the Gospel. He found great joy in this work all through the years and considered it a great privilege to do so. In the year 1920 he sold our farm at Greensburg and bought another farm close to Meade, Kansas. Here we attended the Nebo church where he also helped along as opportunities were offered. A few years later we joined the Bruderthal church. Here father was ordained as a Minister of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, in which capacity he served until we sold our farm there in 1925 and bought a farm a mile north and one-half mile east of Buhler. Here father and mother joined the Buhler Mennonite church were he remained a member until his death.

During the last twenty years he was often called upon to help out in various churches in the community and in surrounding communities as Moundridge, Goessel, Burrton, Halstead, Kingman, and Tampa.

It afforded him much joy to proclaim God's word and when sometimes because of weather, or ill health or circumstances in the home he refused an invitation to serve he was most unhappy about it, and invariably changed it and served to the best of his ability.

For at least thirty-two years he served the various communities in which we lived, as a member of the school board. The education and religious training of his children was close to his heart, and he spared not time, money nor effort to give them the best he could. His wish was to give all of his children at least a high school or professional education. This he realized last spring when the youngest son finished high school.

Although father worked hard all his life, his physical body was not as strong as we would have wished. He underwent two major operations, and one foot amputation. He also suffered of cancer of which however he was apparently healed. Also in the family he had to look upon much suffering, which sometimes almost crushed him. Through it all he had a strong hold on God, and never lost faith in God's love and goodness. His favorite songs were, "All the Way my Saviour Leads Me" and "Near to the Heart of God."

He was a loving, praying husband and father. His deepest concern was that he be a living example of a Christian life. Although he was never rich materially, we feel that he could not have been richer spiritually. His tact and counsel with us led us to comply with his wishes.

His grandchildren gave him much joy. His prayers in the family circle, which will be a sweet memory were to this effect: "Father grant that someday when we shall stand before Thy throne, we may be able to say, 'Here are we and those whom Thou hast entrusted unto us'."

Though the path was often rugged, he fought a good fight, and as a weary child he longed to be released from his earthly abode, to be forever with his Lord.

At noon on October 17, 1946, he went to work in the Buhler Mill as usual as cheerful as ever. About 3 o'clock in the afternoon he suffered a cerebral hemorrhage in which condition he was found by his fellow employees. He was rushed to the Grace Hospital, where in spite of everything the doctor and nurses did for him he never regained consciousness. He passed to his heavenly home peacefully with not apparent suffering.

His sudden departure is mourned by me, his widow, one daughter, Mrs. P. B. Voth of Buhler, eight sons, John H. of Hutchinson, Art, Dave, and Leo of Buhler; Albert of Moundridge; Elmer of Akron, Pennsylvania; Roland and Irven of the home; six daughters-in-law, and one son-in-law, fourteen grandchildern of whom one preceded him, two sister, Mrs. John D. Martens of Inman; Mrs. Henry Friesen, Walton, five brothers Jake B. of Clinton, Oklahoma; John J., Henry J., and Herman K. of Newton; Gus J. of Woodward Oklahoma, and many friends and relatives.

He attained the age of 66 years, 1 month, and 19 days.

We mourn but not without hope.

Mrs. D. J. Ediger and children.

Abraham E. Schowalter was born Sept. 21, 1855 in Assenheim, Palatinate, South Germany. He came to America, spent some time with his uncle, Jacob Leisy in Illinois, and then in 1880 came to Halstead, Kansas, to learn American farming with his brother, J. L. Schowalter. He returned to Germany to visit his father. In 1886 he married Katherine W. Risser of Friedelsheim, and they came back to the farm near Halstead. Four children were born to them. Mr. and Mrs. Schowalter retired in 1915 and moved to Halstead. For twenty-five years he taught the Men's Sunday School class in the First Mennonite Church. Following the death of his wife in 1937 he made his home in the Bethel Home for the Aged. He quietly passed away October 17, at the age of ninety-one years and twenty-six days.

Mrs. Katharine Wienss, daughter of Abraham and Margaret Reimer, was born August 12, 1877, in South Russia. In the year 1883 she came to America with her parents who located on a farm west of Beatrice. She received her education in the parochial school taught by Rev. J. K. Penner. She was baptized upon her confession of faith in Jesus Christ as Saviour by Elder Gerhard Penner on May 14, 1894. On April 20, 1922, she was united in marriage to Harry E. Wienss with whom she shared the joys and sorrows of life for almost twenty-five years. About two years ago her health began to fail. On October 10, 1946, she was taken to the Mennonite Hospital where she received tender car until she passed away on November 8, 9 p. m., reaching the age of sixty-nine years. She leaves her husband, one step-daughter, one step-son and wife, six grandchildren, two sisters, three brothers, and many relatives and freinds.

College and Seminary News

BLUFFTON COLLEGE

At the monthly faculty discussion meeting Rev. Shelly presented a paper on the meaning of the Incarnation. Prof. Klassen gave a chapel talk December 13 on the meaning of Christmas, using slides showing significant art objects and paintings dealing with the birth and life of Christ. Included in the pictures were some of his own art work, since much of the work which he does is of a religious nature. Foreign students have planned a busy Christmas period, visiting various places of interest in this country. The basketball team won the first home game of the season defeating Wilmington, Quaker college, 65-56, in one of the best games seen on the local floor in years. The annual Ropp Hall Christmas banquet was held Thursday evening, December 19.

FREEMAN JUNIOR COLLEGE

Christmas activities came to a close with the presentation of the Annual Student Association Christmas program on Friday. The chapel was appropriately decorated with pine boughs and candles. Other holiday activities on the campus included the Christmas program and pageant sponsored by the Music Department. The Academy and College Choruses under the direction of Professor Lichti presented some excellent Christmas music. The pageant given in connection with this presented the beautiful Christmas story very vividly. Miss Kaufman directed the pageantry. The dormitory girls had their Christmas party and went caroling this week. The Christian Youth Volunteers sang for sick and shut-in folk. The Senior Foods class prepared and served a Christmas dinner to the faculty and faculty wives. Probably no one has been busier spreading Christmas cheer than John Suderman, the school postman, who has had to do a rush business at the postoffice and who has always done it goodnaturedly and patiently.

BETHEL COLLEGE

An unusually fine performance marked the nineteeth annual rendition of The Messiah on Sunday evening, December 15, under the oustanding direction of Professor Hohmann, to a large and appreciative audience in Memorial Hall. High-ranking soloists, all with considerable concert and radio experience, included Maud Nosler, Evanston, Illinois, soprano; Lillian Chookasian, alto soloist with radio's "Hymns of All Churches"; Theodore Owen, Emporia, tenor; and Herbert Gould, University of Missouri, bass. A twenty-four piece orchestra, rehearsed by Vilas Gerber, accompanied both the soloists and the chorus of two hundred voices. Throughout December the students have been engaged with the usual activities—program, parties, and carolling — attending the celebration of Christmas in various organizations and residence halls, enriched this year by the contributions made by the foreign students. High points were three annual occasions — the program by the Department of Modern Languages on the twelfth, the all-school formal dinner on the seventeenth, and the program of tableaux on the last evening before vacation, on December 19.

MENNONITE SEMINARY NEWS

At the regular Seminary fellowship and prayer meeting, Thursday, December 12, the students, faculty, and staff gathered for a Christmas program. Traditional carols were sung with Marvin Dirks as leader. Albert Janzen led the devotional exercise speaking on some of the fruits of the first Christmas. The prayer period gave emphasis to the joys of the Christmas season and, also, concern for the needs of the countless numbers who suffer these days. Dr. Pannabecker showed pictures of a Chinese conception of Christmas.

Each quarter the school holds a forum at which some vital topic of the day is discussed. The topic of the Forum held December 12 was "Theology in the Modern World." Dr. Mallott and Dr. Beahm, two of the faculty members, discussed the historic development of theology of our day and today's theology. They pointed out that Brethren and Mennonites have been traditionally antitheological, being opposed to any worked out system of religious thought, but preferring to rest their faith on the New Testament. At the same time, it was pointed out, that this attitude of opposition to theology has actually resulted in a certain sort of theology in itself. It was pointed out any adequate theology must first look to Christ as the center of all faith. It must look upon Him as both human and divine. Further, it must recognize the sinfulness of man and the sacredness of personality, created by God. And, it must recognize Christ as the Redeemer of man in his sinful state.

The Christmas vacation began December 13 with students either going home to spend Christmas with their families or staying in the city to work or study and enjoy Christmas in the city.

The Annual Bethel College Bible Week

Bethel College is happy to announce that it has been able to secure two prominent church leaders for its annual Bible Week. Dr. Frederick K. Stamm, pastor of the First Congregational Church of Chicago will give a series of Bible lectures. Dr. Floyd E. Mallott, professor of Old Testament and Church History in Bethany Biblical Seminary, Chicago, will give a series of lectures in the field of church history.

Dr. Stamm is widely known for his radio programs and is one of the outstanding preachers of our country. Dr. Mallott is a very able teacher and widely known also as a preacher and lecturer.

The Bible lectures are scheduled to begin on Sunday evening, March 16, and to continue with afternoon and evening lectures, Monday through Friday. We hope that your church will take note of this date and will urge its members to take full advantage of this unusual opportunity offered by this Bible Week.—Henry A. Fast.

large the ladies met on two consecutive days to put up about 4 cases of chicken and chicken noodle soup for M. C. C. distribution. About the same time the members were canvassed to pledge wheat for relief. In due time the wheat was hauled to local elevators and the proceeds used to purchase 20 ton Ralstons "Relief Cereal" f.o.b. New York. December 10 to 13 we were host to the Portable Canner which was built and is under the supervision of the South-Central (Old) Mennonite Conference. It was set up on the John P. Janzen farm where Butane gas, electricity and running water were available. The steers and hogs for the purpose were donated by individual members of the church. Almost all members aided in supplying butchering equipment and help. The assembly line arranged by the committee seemed to make for efficiency. Various groups functioned in their turn: cutting and sorting of meat, grinding of hamburger and lard, rendering of fats, packing of cans, a necessary personnel to help operate the canner proper, last and final, the cleaning, marking and temporary storing of 79 cases of beef, pork, fats, and beef noodle soup. The procedure of work made it necessary to have lunch in shifts. Coffee to go with our sack lunches and lunch in the afternoon were served to the group by a friend. A "Help yourself" literature rack has been installed in the main lobby of the church for the purpose of displaying and making more accessible the many pamphlets, bulletins, reports, tracts, etc. that arrive in the course of time. —Mrs. Louis A. Janzen, Corr.

—The last edition of the "Mennonite Hymnary" is nearly sold out, according to Rev. J. M. Suderman, Secretary of the Board of Publication. The last edition of three thousand copies came out last spring. About two hundred copies are left of this edition. Even though the Hymnary has sold in very large numbers, Rev. Suderman is of the opinion that there are still some churches in the conference which have not placed their orders for the new song book. The Board of Publication is planning on anther edition of three thousand copies.

—Arlington Mennonite Church, Arlington, Kansas: On Sunday, December 15, Rev. Ronald von Riesen of Newton spoke at our morning worship service. The evening before he met with our group at the P. R. He had chosen the letter to the Philippians for his studies. Rev. Marvin J. Dirks was the main speaker for the Youth Rally of the General Conference churches in this vicinity, November 29-30. On November 21 the business of our church was again taken care of for another year. Dr. R. C. Kauffman of North Newton has been in our midst. He spoke on Sunday afternoon and Monday and Tuesday evening on relief subjects. About eighty wool comforters have been made for relief by the women of our church in the past weeks. On the evening of December 8, the mass choir of our church rendered the annual Christmas musical program. The large church was well filled.—Helen Penner. Corr.
